In the vaudeville line Prof. Hobbs and his trained dogs were an important feature. The Sault brothers gave a boxing exhibition each day which proved a good attraction, and there were acrobatic turns which won applause. The chief feature of the stage performance was Dida, the mysterious act which is still talked of with wonder. This consists of filling a large tank upon the stage with water, and after the audience has been convinced that it contains nothing but water, in taking from it two young women. How they get into the tank is the mystery which no one pretends to be able to solve.

The high school relay race was as great an attraction as ever this year. It was won by Monson, in a spirited contest. Some of the individual runners of the other teams were good, but no team was in the same class with the Monson team. The grammar school relay race was not so interesting, it being Palmer's race from the start. When the fair is carefully considered there seems not to have been a weak spot in it, and there is little doubt that the society has gained prestige which will aid much in its future prosperity.

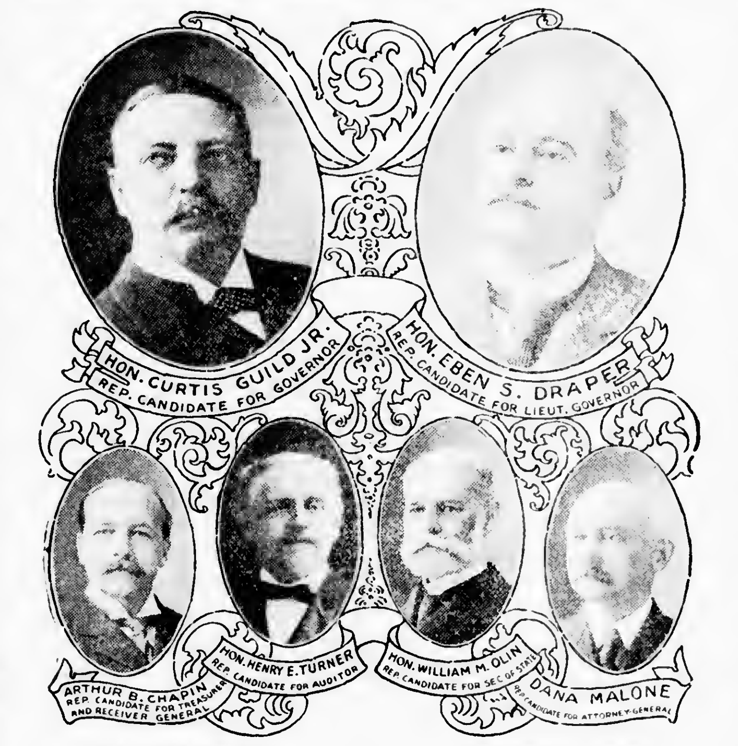
Republican State Ticket for 1905.



HON. CURTIS GUILD JR.
REP. CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR
HON. EBEN S. DRAPER
REP. CANDIDATE FOR LIEUT. GOVERNOR
ARTHUR B. CHAPIN
REP. CANDIDATE FOR TREASURER AND RECEIVER GENERAL
HON. HENRY E. TURNER
REP. CANDIDATE FOR AUDITOR
HON. WILLIAM M. OLIN
REP. CANDIDATE FOR SEC. OF STATE
DANA MALONE
REP. CANDIDATE FOR ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Hon. Curtis Guild Jr.,

who comes to be the unanimous choice of the Republican party of Massachusetts for governor, is a native of Boston, where he was born February 2, 1860 He graduated from Harvard in 1881, and since that time has been active in public life, filling every position with an enthusiasm that stamped him as a man of force and fertility of resource. In private life he is the editor of the Boston Commercial, a leading trade paper of the city. He has been lieutenant-governor for three years. Gen. Guild is a Mason.

Hon. Eben S. Draper,

the Republican nominee for lieutenant-governor, is a native of Hopedale, where his extensive mill interests are located, the date of his birth being June 17, 1858. He is a graduate of the Institute of Technology, and after that school training he took a practical course in the machine shops and cotton mills of the Hopedale mills. He is a director of many corporations and is a man of broad business acumen During the Spanish war he was active in the raising of the $200 000 necessary to equip the hospital ship Bay State, which did so much good at that time.

Hon. William M. Olin,

who has received another nomination as secretary of state, is now serving his 15th term in that important position. He is a native of Warrenton, Ga., but in spite of his Southern birth he was a gallant soldier of the Union army, and has long been prominent in Grand Army circles. He represented the Boston Advertiser for 14 years in Washington and then was secretary to Gov. Talbot, Gov. Long, Collector Worthington, Senator Dawes and Collector Beard, the latter position occupying his attention from 1879 to the date he assumed his present position. Col. Olin is affiliated with the Masonic bodies.

Hon. Henry E. Turner,

Republican nominee for auditor, is now serving his fifth term in this office and is renominated. He is a native of Boston, where he was born in May, 1842, but his present home is in Malden. He has been active in business life up to the time he assumed his present place. He is a Mason, a member of the Royal Arcanum and the A. O U. W. He has served in the House, and has been prominent in the work of the Republican party.

Hon. Arthur B. Chapin, of Holyoke, who is renominated this year for treasurer, is now serving with great acceptance his first term. He is a native of Chicopee, where he was born Nov. 17, 1868 He is a graduate of Amherst, and a lawyer by profession. He was elected as mayor of Holyoke five years in succession in a city that is normally Democratic in its vote, and the worth of service he rendered there, which was conspicuously of a financial nature, brought him first to attention as a fitting candidate for state treasurer. He is a Mason.

Hon. Dana Malone,

candidate for attorney-general, is a native of Arcade, N. Y., where he was born in 1857, but he is now a resident of Greenfield. He came to Massachusetts when he was in his teens and after completing his education, entered one of the law offices of Greenfield, where he read law assiduously, and later graduated from Harvard law school. He has built up a lucrative practice and was for six years trial justice of Greenfield. He has been in the House and Senate and has served as chairman of the committee of judiciary in both branches, showing his ability and standing in the law. He is now serving as the district attorney of his district.

S. AND E. ROAD LEASED.

Springfield Street Railway Gets The Palmer Lines.

AGREEMENT ACCEPTANCE TO-MORROW

Will Then Be a Part of the New Haven System. No Terms of Lease Given Out.

The Springfield and Eastern Street Railway has been leased to the Springfield Street Railway Company. That is, an agreement has been arrived at by the directors of each company, and all that remains to be done is for the stockholders of the S. and E. to ratify the proposition which will be done at the meeting called for to-morrow afternoon at the offices of the company in Palmer. The matter has only been made public within a day or two, the notices for the stockholders' meeting having been sent out this week. The terms of the proposed lease are not given out, but there is a rumor that it is for 25 years on a basis of 4 per cent on the stock.

There have been reports for some time that both the New Haven road—which owns the Springfield street railway—and the Shaw syndicate which is back of the new Hartford and Springfield street railway, were looking after the control of the Springfield and Eastern. Should the New Haven road secure it—and there is practically no question of such an outcome—the Shaw company will have to build a new line to get from East Brimfield to Springfield, and will have the opposition of the New Haven road the whole of the way. Although the Springfield and Eastern has never paid a dividend it has proved to be an earning road and has come to be looked upon as a good thing in street railways.

Speculation is of course rife on the policy of the new control regarding the management of the system. Nothing is known along this line, but there are suggestions that the offices will be moved to Springfield and the lines managed from there. Should this be done there will be general regret among many who have watched the growth of the road from its inception.

Ware Study Club Program.

The Ware Study Club held its first meeting of the season Wednesday evening at the home of Dr. A. G Blodgett. The subject was "Russia After the War." Following is the program of the season:

W. H. Brainerd Renominated.

Scott Adams of Agawam was chairman and E. E. Hobson of Palmer was secretary of the Republican county convention at Springfield Monday, when W. H. Brainerd of Palmer was nominated for another three years' service as county commissioner. The call for the meeting was read by Wayland V. James of Springfield, chairman of the county committee. A motion that all present be considered delegates was carried, and Mr. Brainerd's name was placed in nomination by E. P. Kendrick of Springfield, who spoke of the three years of service just closing as giving great satisfaction. The nomination was by acclamation. The old county committee, with the exception of W. L. Webber of Holland, was reëlected, Francis Wight of Holland being chosen in his place. The committee is as follows:

Scott Adams of Agawam, Edward Bliss of Brimfield, C. S. Smith of Chester, W. H. Hall of East Longmeadow, C. D. Colson and M. J. Laporte of Holyoke, E. F. Roberts of Granville, Mortimer Pease of Hampden, George W. Bray of Chicopee Falls, Joseph P. Vincellette of Chicopee, T. F. Cordis of Longmeadow, A. H. Bartlett of Ludlow, W. L. Ricketts of Monson, G. L. Moore of Montgomery, C F Ruggles of Palmer, T. H. Clark of Russell, R. W. Ellis of Springfield, W. F. Cook of West Springfield, Herbert Miller of Southwick, O. E. Slocum of Holland, H A. McFarland of Wales, W. H. Foote of Westfield, E. M. Scott of Agawam, W. V. James of Springfield, and S. C. Tiffany of Blandford.

Senator Parker Renominated.

The Republican senatorial convention for the first Hampden district, held in Palmer Tuesday, was not an exciting event. Fordis C. Parker of Springfield was unanimously renominated, the other necessary business of such gatherings transacted, and the gathering adjourned after a 22-minute session.

The call was read at 10 o'clock by A. P. Langtry of Springfield, and Chauncey E. Peck of Wilbraham was chosen chairman, with Henry H. Bosworth of Springfield secretary. The committee on credentials was H. A. McFarland of Wales, Ralph Clifford of Monson and Charles Milligan of Springfield, who reported 34 delegates present: From Springfield 24, Palmer four, Monson three, Wilbraham one, Wales one, Brimfield one. The name of Fordis C. Parker of Springfield was placed in nomination by Charles H Beckwith of Springfield, and he was nominated by acclamation. A. P. Langtry of Springfield was reëlected a member of the state central committee, and A. P. Langtry, G. S. Holden of Palmer and G. C. Flynt of Monson were made the district committee, with power to fill vacancies. Mr. Langtry, being called upon, made a few brief remarks, and the convention adjourned.

WEST BRIMFIELD.

Relatives and friends to the number of 25 from Springfield, Wellesley, Brimfield, the Brookfields and Connecticut dropped in upon Frank Allen Monday evening without notification, leaving him a Morris chair as a reminder that another milestone of his life had arrived. The affair was a complete surprise, and Mr. Allen was unable to "get together" for several minutes.

PALMER NEWS.

FISH—MOORE.

St. Paul's Church Pastor Marries Palmer Young Woman.

St. Paul's Universalist church was well filled with invited guests and friends Tuesday evening to witness the marriage of the pastor of the church, Rev. Willis A. Moore, and Miss Annie Belle Fish of Palmer, the ceremony taking place at 7 30. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. W. Betts of Syracuse, N. Y., a former pastor of the church and a particular friend of the bride's family, assisted by Rev. William Coudon of Somerville; the Episcopal service was used. The church was artistically and beautifully decorated with autumn leaves, the brilliant reds and browns of the oak predominating, under the direction of Mrs. H. W. Holbrook and E. E. Brooks. Miss May Fiske presided at the organ, and previous to the ceremony gave an organ recital of a half hour.

The bridal party entered the church by the east entrance, and was led by the ushers; following came the bridesmaids, maid of honor and bride, who was escorted by her father. The bridal party was met at the altar by the groom and best man The "Loheugrin" wedding march was played during the ceremony. The bride's gown was of white mousseline de soie, trimmed with lace; she wore a veil fastened with orange blossoms, and carried a shower bouquet of bride roses. Miss Carrie Fish, a sister of the bride, was maid of honor; she wore pink crepe de chine trimmed with white lace, and carried a shower bouquet of daybreak pinks. The bridesmaids were Miss Pearl Fish, sister of the bride, and Miss M. Ella Moulton of Boston; they wore white point d'esprit, trimmed with lace, and pink sashes, and carried shower bouquets of white pinks. The best man was Edwin E. Brooks of Palmer, and the ushers were Ernest O. Powers of Athol, Dr. M. B. Hodgkins, H. W. Holbrook and E. W. Carpenter of Palmer. The groom's gifts to the best man and ushers were scarf pins of autumn leaves, set with pearls; the bride's gifts to her attendants were gold brooches of autumn leaf design, set with pearls.

A reception was held after the wedding at the home of the bride's parents on North Main street, which was attended by relatives and intimate friends only. Refreshments were served by Miss Pearl Fish, Miss M. Ella Webster and Miss M. Ella Moulton, assisted by the ushers. The gifts were numerous and costly, and included $100 in gold, besides many pieces of handsome cut glass. Among the guests from out of town were Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Cacy, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Stoughton of Dumont, N. J., Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Gilchrist of Newport, Vt., Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Gilchrist, Mrs. George Dean of Somerville, Miss Nell Stoughton, Mr. Elliott Stoughton of Barre, Vt., Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. I. F. Story of West Somerville, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Hodgdon and Miss Flora Hodgdon of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Stoughton of Springfield.

Rev. and Mrs. Moore have gone to Boothbay, Me., for three weeks, and after December 1st will be at home at the parsonage on Walnut street in Palmer.

Mr. Moore has been a resident of Palmer practically since the summer of 1900, when he supplied the pulpit of the church for a time, receiving a call to the pastorate in September of that year and being ordained and installed in June, 1901. He has made a large circle of friends in the place, not only among his own parishioners but among all with whom he has come in contact. Mrs Moore was born and has always lived in Palmer, and has been prominent in social, church and musical circles. A large circle of friends wish them every possible happiness for the future.

REPUBLICAN CLUB

Issues Statement to Voters on West End Railway and Legislature.

The Republican Club of Massachusetts got into the campaign Wednesday. It held a meeting at its rooms, 19 Milk street, and a committee prepared and issued an address directing attention to the charges, and the investigation made, relative to the passage by the Legislature of 1890 of the act "to authorize the West End Street Railway Company to build elevated railroads," Henry M. Whitney, the present Democratic candidate for lieutenant-governor, being then president of the corporation in question.

The address is as follows:

To the voters of Massachusetts:

An act "to authorize the West End Street Railway Company to build elevated railroads" was before the Legislature in 1890, and was approved July 2 of that year. There had been so much said about the methods by which the passage of this act had been secured that on June 12, 1890, the following order was passed by the House:

Ordered: That a special committee be appointed to inquire into the methods used for and against applications for legislation concerning elevated railroads.

This special committee investigated the charges made by Mr. George Fred Williams against the West End Railway Company. The first charge was "that the West End Railway Company had maintained a large corps of lobbyists and legislative counsel and made expenditures through them and its officers beyond any legitimate purpose in securing legislation," and the committee reported that $24,798 62 was the amount of expense incurred for the purposes set forth in charge 1.

The committee found "that the testimony as to the number of persons employed and as to the sums paid to them, or still remaining to be paid, indicates to the committee that the West End company has made a bad practice distinctly worse. The committee can hardly believe that other applicants for legislation have spent such large sums of money in endeavoring directly and indirectly to influence legislative action, or have bestowed their retainers with such a lavish hand."

Mr Henry M. Whitney was president of the West End Street Railway Company at the time of this investigation, and had been for two years and a half, ever since the road was incorporated.

At this time, when the use of improper influences to affect the action of state Legislatures is so widely and justly condemned, is it well for Massachusetts now to elect Mr. Henry M. Whitney Lieutenant-Governor, and thus put the seal of her approbation upon the methods which were employed to secure West End railway legislation in 1890 when he was president of that corporation?

The Republican Club of Massachusetts, by

GRAFTON D. CUSHING, President.
CHARLES B. BARNES Jr., Secretary.

Man Killed by Electric Car.

Daniel Lynch, a patient at the epileptic hospital, fell in front of an electric car near the fair grounds last Friday afternoon and received injuries from which he died soon after. Lynch was walking along the path near the car track, along which a car from Monson was approaching; when the car was within a few feet of him he was taken with a fit and fell upon the track within 10 feet of the car, which it was impossible to stop. Both legs were cut off and his head was badly crushed. He was attended by Dr Cheney and was taken to the hospital, where he died in a short time.

To Build Fiskdale Electric Road.

The contract for building the new electric line from Palmer to Fiskdale has been given to Fred T. Ley & Co. of Springfield, and they have unloaded a large quantity of materials just over the line into Brimfield on the road to Fosket's Mill. A house has been erected for the accommodation of the gang of Italians which is to be employed in the grading, which is to start at once. Messrs. Ley and Co. built the Palmer road and its several branches.

Notable Operatic Event in Springfield.

Opera lovers will be delighted to learn that the coming grand opera season in Springfield will include a performance of Wagner's "Valkyrie" by Henry W. Savage's English grand opera company. This will be the first performance in New England outside of Boston of any of "The Nibelungen Ring" dramas, and will make the engagement at the Court Square theater on Friday and Saturday, Oct. 20 and 21, a notable one in musical annals of this section. Mr. Savage has devoted six months to the preparation of this remarkable work for the American stage, and promises to give it a production that will rival his magnificent staging of "Parsifal" last season.

"The Valkyrie" is only one of the splendid repertory to be given in Springfield. The engagement will open with an elaborate production of Verdi's great Egyptian opera, "Aida," a masterpiece that ranks as a model for all heroic compositions. Its majestic harmonies, thrilling arias and stirring martial scenes make it a work of noble lyric and dramatic grandeur.

"The Valkyrie" will be given at the Saturday matinee, the orchestral prelude beginning promptly at 1.30, same as the Metropolitan in New York, the final curtain falling at 5 15 o'clock.

The engagement closes Saturday night, Oct. 21st, with Gounod's "Faust," with its beautiful "Jewel Song" for Marguerite and all its popular numbers.

A meeting of the Massachusetts State Federation of Woman's Clubs will be held at Athol on Wednesday of next week, with sessions in the Academy of Music. Mrs. F. M. Ralton has tickets for any of the Palmer club members who may wish to attend.

The town farm building committee has awarded the contract for building the barn to C. G. Thomas, his bid being much the lowest. The bid is for the work only, the town furnishing all the materials. The contract for furnishing the nails goes to Whitcomb & Faulkner.

The fire escape on the east end of the opera house, recently installed, did not meet the requirements of the state inspector, and has been taken down for readjustment. The distance between the treads was not what the law requires; the trouble will be remedied and the escape replaced.

The fifth annual meeting of the American Missionary Association will be held in Worcester Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, the sessions of the day and first evening being in the Congregational churches, and the evening sessions of Wednesday and Thursday in Mechanics Hall.

By a recent change of orders from the post office department at Washington the mail from Wales and Brimfield now arrives in Palmer at 4 45 at night instead of 3.30, the time having been set back to allow a later preparation of New York mail by the people along the line outside of Palmer.

The civil case of Richard A. French of Bondsville against M. F. Austin of Springfield, action of contract, was heard before Judge Kenefick in the district court Tuesday, and decision was reserved. E. E. Hobson of Palmer appeared for the plaintiff, and James H. Reilly of Springfield for the defendant.

The directors of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society will meet at the Converse House next Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock to canvass the premium books and hear reports of the fair held last week. All bills against the society should be presented to the secretary, Mr. Chandler, before that time.

A stranger who was acting suspiciously was found in the corridors of the second floor of the savings bank block Wednesday evening by members of the business club; he was seen at several different times between 10 20 and 10.50, when he was led to the street by Officer Crimmins and given an opportunity to leave town, which he did on the next car.

Frank C. Allen, a native and long-time resident of Palmer, died about 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon of cerebral hemorrhage, after an illness of only a few days. He had lived in Palmer all his life with the exception of a few years in Putnam, Ct. He was never married, and leaves no near relatives, cousins being his nearest of kin. The burial was in the Thorndike-street cemetery, the funeral being held from Benson's undertaking rooms Wednesday afternoon.

Manager Hamilton is obliged to depend wholly on water from the Boston and Albany tank for street sprinkling since Tuesday morning, having been ordered at that time to take no more from the pipes of the Palmer Water Company. As this is not a particularly dry season this does very well when there is water in the tank, but when the cart stands beneath the pipe for an hour with the water so low that none will run the dust will get to blowing in spite of all that the driver of the sprinkler can do.

The selectmen have named the following precinct officers for the state election in November: A, G S. Holden, warden; H. W. Holbrook, deputy warden; M J Daily, clerk; M. E Monahan, deputy clerk; J. S. On account of repairs which are being made in the vestry of the M. E. church this week, the weekly prayer meeting was not held.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Knowlton of Springfield have been spending the week as guests of Mr. Knowlton's parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Knowlton.

The meeting of the King's Daughters Circle, which was to have been held at the home of Mrs. George Gunn last Friday afternoon, was not held on account of a quorum not being present. No time was set for the next meeting.

Invitations are out for the marriage of Miss Cora May Ives, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Ives of this place, and Arthur Blaine Cummings, son of E. E Cummings, formerly of this place. The ceremony will take place at the home of the bride's parents October 23 at one o'clock in the afternoon.

The stone crusher was removed from this village Tuesday, a fact which was much appreciated by the residents in that part of Main street where it has been at work for the past few weeks. When it was in operation a fine powder, which came from the ground stones, was always floating in the air and found its way into the houses in spite of closed doors and windows. The trees in that vicinity also received a white coat.

THREE RIVERS.

Death of Mrs. John Lehan.

Mrs. John Lehan died at her home on the Belchertown road Saturday morning of congestion of the lungs. Mrs. Lehan was born in Ireland in 1840 and came to Bondsville when a young girl. She lived in Bondsville several years and while there was married to John Lehan, whose death occurred four years ago last Saturday, the day of Mrs. Lehan's death. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Lehan came to Three Rivers and she had lived in this village since. She was one of the oldest Irish settlers in this town, having been in the town almost 60 years, and was one of the oldest residents in the village. By her kindness and uprightness of character, she commanded the respect and won the love of all who knew her and her death is regretted by all. She is survived by three daughters, Mrs. Daniel Keefe, Mrs. William McClough and Mrs. John Keating. The funeral was held in the Catholic church at Thorndike, Rev. Fr. Lynch officiating, and the bearers were James Cronin and William Cronin of Boston, Jeremiah Sullivan of Palmer, David Grigware of Easthampton, John E. Hurley of Ware, and Timothy Collity.

Death of Charles S. Smith.

Charles S. Smith, 79, died suddenly at his home yesterday morning, death being caused by a shock. Mr. Smith was born in Westburk, Vt., October 11, 1826, and was taken ill on the 79th anniversary of his birth, and died the following morning. When a young man Mr. Smith moved to Webster and while there he married Miss Eveline Moore. Later he went to Mittineague, where he was overseer in the yards of the Agawam Canal Company. In the early sixties Mr. Smith's wife died, and he then left Mittineague and returned to Westburk, Vermont, where he was engaged in farming and lumbering. About 1880 Mr. Smith came to Three Rivers, where he was overseer in the yards of the Palmer Mills. Shortly after coming to Three Rivers Mr. Smith was married to Wealthy Fletcher. Mr. Smith maintained an active interest in the affairs of Three Rivers and was well known in the whole town as well as in this village, and his sudden death is a source of deep regret to all who knew him. The funeral will be held to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock at the house.

Fire in Wood Yard.

Fire broke out in W. F. Fillmore's wood yard Monday night about 10.45. The fire started in sheds attached to the barn, which stands near the house, and is supposed to have originated in the shed where the engine was located. After the sheds had burned the barn caught fire and at one time it was thought that both the house and barn would be burned and the fire department from Palmer was summoned. They were notified however before they left Palmer that the fire was under control and they were not needed, the fire department of the Palmer mill having done some quick and effective work. The house and barn were saved, but the sheds and the wood they contained were destroyed. While fighting the fire from the roof of the barn, W. F. Fillmore fell from the roof but escaped injuries other than a badly sprained leg.

Mrs. Olive Fletcher has returned from a visit at Montague.

There will be an organ recital at the Union Evangelical church this evening.

Many people from here attended the annual fair at Belchertown Wednesday.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of Union church held a social at Ruggles Hall Wednesday evening.

Mrs. E. G. Ward of Springfield spent the first of the week at the home of C. S. Ruggles.

Mr. and Mrs. John Royce of Worcester spent Sunday at the home of Milton Royce on the Belchertown road.

Henry Fredette has resigned his position in Keith's drug store and has taken a position in the cloth room..

The evening mails have been changed and they will now be closed at 6 20 and 7.45 p. m; the morning mails will still hold the old schedule.

At the Union Evangelical church next Sunday the subject for the morning service will be "Lessons from the Birds;" the topic for the evening meeting will be "A Bad Harvest."

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Union church are planning to hold a food and rummage sale in the rooms over the mill office. The sale will take place the last Friday in the month.

Partridges Illegally Kept.

Under the present laws of Massachusetts it is illegal to keep partridges for sale in any manner, but there is little question that many of the city hotels have them on hand for particular customers. A search of several of the Springfield hotels was made Tuesday by Deputy Fish and Game Commissioner Luman of Palmer, and three other deputies, which resulted in the finding of 18 birds in the refrigerator of the Highland hotel. They were taken to the police station, and it is probable that the case will be tried in the courts later.

New York Excursion.

An excursion will be run to New York City via the Central Vermont railroad and the steamer City of Lowell, on October 17. The round-trip fare from Palmer, Monson, Belchertown and Three Rivers will be $3; tickets good only on train leaving Belchertown at 6.53 a.m., Three Rivers 7.10, Palmer 7.20 and Monson at 7 31; good returning to leave New York not later than October 23. Berth accommodations on steamer are very desirable, and are provided to their limit without extra charge. Staterooms are $1, $1 50 and $2 each according to location, and may be reserved in advance upon application to W. J. Phillips, ticket agent, New London, Ct. The excursion enters New York Harbor, via East River, the finest approach to the city, passing through Hell Gate, under Brooklyn Bridge, in sight of the Bartholdi Statue of Liberty; also passing along the piers of the large Ocean Liners, where the large ocean steamers will be seen in full view. Passengers on this excursion arrive in New York by daylight, avoiding hotel expenses.

HAMPDEN.

The ladies of the Methodist church will give their annual roast pig and chicken-pie supper in the vestry of the church next Tuesday evening.

Milton Goodwill sustained a fracture of both bones in the left leg just above the ankle Wednesday. He was in the woods clearing off brush when he made a mistep and fell. Mr Goodwill was working alone, and was not discovered until nearly five hours after the accident happened. His cries for help were heard by a neighbor, who thought they were the calls of a hunting party, but he finally decided to investigate and found Mr. Goodwill thoroughly chilled and exhausted. He was removed to his home and Dr. Ballard reduced the fracture.

Round Trip Rates Reduced.

If you have occasion to visit the western country before the first of the year, now is your opportunity, because tickets will be on sale via the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, from Chicago on the first and third Tuesdays of each month, to various western destinations and return, good for 21 days, at 75 per cent of the one way fare. To other sections of the country, one fare plus $2 for the round-trip is charged.

If you are going West, write to us, and we will figure out the lowest combination possible, and give you advantage of it. Don't hesitate to ask for all the information necessary to make your trip pleasant. Tickets can be obtained from your local ticket agent, or from Geo. L. Williams, N. E. P. A., 368 Washington Street, Boston, Mass

Warren Pastor Resigns.

Rev. William Brewster Oleson, pastor of the First Congregational church in Warren, tendered his resignation Sunday, to take effect at the mutual convenience of the church and himself. Mr. Oleson exchanged pulpits Sunday morning with Rev. E E. Zellars, and at the conclusion of the sermon Mr. Zellars read the letter of resignation, which was entirely unexpected by the congregation and is much regretted by the church and townspeople as well.

Mr. Oleson went to Warren in the spring of 1898, and his pastorate has been the longest of any of the recent pastors. He is the only pastor now in the Brookfield conference who was a member seven years ago. Mr. Oleson has always been active in temperance work in the town.

Mr. Oleson gives failing eyesight as the reason for his resignation, and he has made no plans for the future.

A Judicious Inquiry.

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade says he has often heard druggists inquire of customers who asked for a cough medicine, whether it was wanted for a child or an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it, and for coughs, colds and croup it is unsurpassed. ACADEMY RELAY TEAM

Wins Race at Palmer Fair in Record Breaking Time.

Last Friday afternoon the team representing Monson Academy again won the annual relay race at the Palmer Fair. The team from Monson not merely won the race, but it also broke the record set by last year's victorious team. Without doubt this team is the fastest ever to represent Monson Academy on the track.

Every fall the chief aim among the high schools of this section is to get together a team which will be capable of winning this race. Last fall Monson won it, and in so doing, lowered the track record to 3.52¼ This fall the only members from last year's team to return to school were Hynes and Page; much new material presented itself however, and finally the team was made up of Hynes, Page, Miller and Rourke. They trained regularly and faithfully, and by the time of the race were in excellent trim.

Hynes started the race for Monson and gave it over to Miller at the start of the second quarter, who in turn gave way to Rourke at the third quarter, and Page finished the race, leading at the tape by about 50 yards, with Palmer second and Ware third. The race was well contested for the first half mile, but from that point on until the finish the Monson runners had a "walk-a-way." The time of the race was 3 48¼, four seconds lower than that of last year's team and the fastest mile ever run on the track.

After their return from the race, the members of the team were given a supper at Cushman Hall. On Saturday evening the celebration took place, and this will long be remembered by all who witnessed it. The members of the team rode in a large 'bus handsomely decorated with the school colors of blue and white. They were followed by the entire school body; after passing through the streets the crowd returned to the ar of Cushman Hall, where a huge bo re was lighted and a large display of f works set off. After a time, as the fire gan to grow dim, the crowd dispersed, always to remember the victory gained he Palmer Fair.

Great praise must be given to Coaches Dunfield and Hu an, whose work did much to round out e team Of this year's team Hynes and [illegible] will graduate next June, leaving Rote and Miller as the only ones to return school next fall.

WEST WARREN.

Four-years-old Boy Takes Journey.

Francis, the four-years-old son of Mr. and Mrs. George Normandin, strayed away from his home yesterday morning, and was found near the West Brimfield station by the station agent, William Holland. Mr. Holland was unable to obtain from the child his name or where he came from, but as West Warren was the nearest town he decided the child must have come from there, so he secured a tag marked West Warren, and put it on the child and placed him in the baggage car and sent him on a train due at West Warren at 11 15 a. m. The child was recognized when it reached West Warren, and was sent to the home of his parents. The child's mother is of the opinion that the child must have had a ride to West Brimfield as she does not think it possible that he walked alone the distance of three miles during the morning.

Farewell Reception.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles O. Walker were tendered a farewell reception in the Methodist church Saturday evening by a large number of their friends, who presented them with a handsome silver swing water pitcher and cup, with the following inscription: "Presented to Mr. and Mrs. Charles O. An entertainment was given, consisting of a cornet solo by Richard Moody, solo by George E Rycroft, reading by Miss Bernice Westman, duet by Miss Rose Brown and Miss Laura Thompson, baritone solo by George A. Barton, "The Bewitched Breakfast" by four men and two women, solos by Miss Elizabeth Chapman and Maude Muller, and an illustrated poem by several young people. Refreshments were served during the evening.

WARE.

Miss Hyde Becomes a Baroness.

The marriage of Miss Sylvia Sage Hyde and Baron Camille Eynard of Paris, France, took place at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. William S. Hyde, yesterday afternoon at 4, Rev. Arthur Chase officiating. The Episcopal service with single ring was used, and only a few immediate relatives were present. The bride is the daughter of the late W. S. Hyde, and has always resided in Ware. She graduated from the high school in 1896, and from Smith College four years later. Since then she has lived with her mother, traveling extensively in this country and in Europe. During the past summer she has been abroad with her mother, and when they returned a week ago they were accompanied by Baron Eynard, to whom Miss Hyde's engagement was at once announced. Baron Eynard is a descendant of an old Hugenot family, and his ancestors were forced to flee from France in the 17th century after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, on account of their Protestant faith. The family remained in Geneva for generations, taking a prominent part in the affairs of Switzerland; several of them were preachers, and others were noted in finance. The mother of the present Baron was Baronne de Bodhausen of Saxony and his father, like himself, an army officer in Saxony of the German Empire, the father being a member of the Royal Household. The Baron has been living in Paris about four years, or since retiring from the army, and will return there with his bride some time this fall.

Wallace L. Barnes, day clerk at the Mansion house, and Miss Delia McCarry of Ware were married Wednesday evening by Rev. J. A. Riordan at the parsonage of All Saints' church.

Invitations have been issued for the celebration at the parish rooms of Trinity church next Thursday, from 8 to 10, of the fifth anniversary of the rectorship of Rev. Arthur Chase. The occasion is also the fifth anniversary of the marriage of Rev. and Mrs. Chase.

Felix Bombard was nominated by the Democratic representative convention held in the town hall yesterday afternoon to be the standard bearer in the 4th Hampshire district. Mr. Bombard has been a prominent figure in town affairs during the past two years as the opposing candidate for tax collector against F. W. Farrar.

The old South-street school building has been closed by the school committee on account of the number of cases of diphtheria now existing among the pupils The grades in this building are No. 1 and 2, taught by Miss Emma F. Gould; 3, by Miss Mabel R Greene, and grade 7, taught by Miss Clara M Coney. These schools will remain closed for two weeks, during which time the books used in these grades will be destroyed and the rooms renovated, while the sanitary conditions will be improved.

C. M Green entertained about 20 milk producers from Ware at the Hampshire House Monday Mr Green, who is the owner of the Greenacre farm, called the producers together to make them an offer in purchasing the entire supply of milk in Ware. Mr Green offered to buy all of the milk of those present at four cents a quart during the summer and 4½ cents during the winter. While no agreements were made, the proposition was favorably received by some of those present, and another meeting of those interested will probably be called soon.

Invitations are being sent out for three wedding anniversaries, all to take place the week after next. Mr. and Mrs. Jesse M. Buffington will celebrate their golden wedding Tuesday, the 24th, afternoon and evening in the parlors of the Congregational church at Ware Center. Mr. and Mrs. Simeon Gates will observe the 25th anniversary of their marriage at their home on Church street Thursday, the 26th, from 3 to 5 in the afternoon and 8 to 10 in the evening. The 30th anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. George H. Coney will be observed Monday evening, the 23d, from 7 30 to 10, at their home on Church street.

How to Cure Corns and Bunions.

First, soak the corn or bunion in warm water to soften it; then pare it down as closely as possible without drawing blood and apply Chamberlain's Pain Balm twice daily, rubbing vigorously for five minutes at each application. A corn plaster should be worn a few days to protect it from the shoe. As a general liniment for sprains, bruises, lameness and rheumatism, Pain Balm is unequaled For sale by the Quimby Pharmacy, Palmer.

STRONG TESTIMONY.

This Is Palmer Testimony And Will Stand Investigation.

If you doubt the following and wish to investigate, you haven't to go to some other state in the Union to prove it. It's not a long story published in Palmer newspapers about a resident of Kalamazoo, Mich., or Tampa, Fla., It's about a resident of Palmer and given in her own words. No stronger proof can be had.

Mrs. A. Peterson, living in the northeast part of the town says "Mr. LeGro recommended Doan's Kidney Pills to me some time ago and I used them, obtaining remarkably good results. Before I took them for over two years I had attacks of dull heavy aching in the small of my back just across my kidneys. If I sat in one position for any length of time I became so stiff and lame that I could hardly get up, and if I stooped it caused sharp twinges in my back so bad that they made me cry out. I tried other remedies but they did me no good. Doan's Kidney Pills helped me from the first and finally removed the backache. I have had no eturn of the trouble. Should I ever have a reoccurrence I now know what to do. I recommended them to a lady friend of mine, Mrs. L. Lafarr, out in the carpet mill district. She used them and told me afterwards that they cured her of a severe backache."

The teacher of a colored school here in Washington recently asked a pupil to go to the blackboard and write a sentence containing the word "delight." Young Pickney Jackson went pompously to the front blackboard, and wrote in large sprawling, uphill hand these words: "De win blowed so hard it put out de light"—Washington Life.

Tommy—"May I stay up a little longer?" Ethel—"What do you want to stay up for?" Tommy—"I want to see you and Mr. Green play cards." Mr Green—"But we are not going to play cards" Tommy—"Oh, yes, you are, for I heard mamma saying to Ethel that everything depended on the way in which she played her cards to-night"

It makes no difference how long you have been sick, if you are troubled with indigestion, constipation, liver and kidney troubles, Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea will make you well. 35 cents. Quimby Pharmacy, Palmer; Fred S. Chapman, Monson.

"No," said the spinster, "I never attend aution sales any more." "Why not?" asked the inquisitive person. "Because," explained the spinster, "at the last sale of that kind I attended I saw a friend and nodded to her, whereupon the auctioneer knocked down a patent cradle and asked where I'd have it sent."—Chicago News.

That Little Pain in Your Back

threatens your Kidneys. If allowed to go on a little while you will suffer throughout the entire system Take at once Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. It is the most certain cure known for the treatment of all diseases of the Kidneys, Liver and Blood. Write Dr. David Kennedy's Sons, Rondout, N. Y., for free sample bottle and medical booklet. All druggists $1 00.

"A new winter tan shoe is to be worn this fall," said a traveling salesman recently to a Kansas City reporter at the Coates House, in Kansas City, Mo., "and men who like foot comfort will appreciate it. In the past the real objection to wearing tan shoes in the winter has been their staining and discoloration by slush and rain. A new method of tanning has been discovered that avoids those objections, and makers controlling the process are busy lasting the shoes."

"I was walking across a field with my dog at my side when a young rabbit emerged from a wood close by," says a writer. "Suddenly it fell to the ground and was to all intents dead. The dog sniffed it, and I watched it for about ten minutes, thinking it absolutely dead. I walked away about fifty yards, when I looked back and saw the rabbit rise and run rapidly into the wood whence it came. It is evident that it saw the dog and dropped down out of fright."

A stout, florid woman appeared at the door of the theater in Winfield, Kan., recently, leading her two boys, aged 8 and 10, and presented one ticket. "You will have to buy tickets for those boys," said the manager. "No I won't," she protested, "they always go to sleep as soon as they get inside. Why should I pay for them if they don't see the show?" The manager couldn't get around that argument, so he passed them in. After the first act an usher went to the manager and handed him a quarter, saying, "The fat lady told me to tell you one of the kids woke up."

Day Dreaming.

It is much easier to fancy what we should like to have, what position we should like to fill and how we should act if different circumstances surrounded us than it is to put forth the efforts and self denial necessary to make such attainments. A proportion of life is consumed in this manner. This habit is justly called day dreaming, for as in sleep the brain, deprived of the power of will to direct it, weaves cobwebs that the first breath of consciousness dispels, so in this listless condition the mind, uncontrolled and unguided, brings forth specious fallacies that reason, when fully aroused, will utterly dissipate. These day dreams are sometimes defended on the ground that if useless they are at least harmless; that if they confer no benefit they inflict no injury. This, however, cannot be the case. Nothing occupies so neutral a position. Uselessness is of itself an injury, but besides this habit of idle reverie produces positive evils. Valuable time is wasted, energy is frittered away, the mind is enfeebled, the activities are discouraged, the present active life is rendered tame and insipid.

Jumping.

Jumping to the ground from a height, jumping from the ground over a height and long jumping may be either harmless or highly injurious, according to the way in which one alights. The human brain cannot stand jars. When it receives them it is injured, although the injury may not be felt for years. Headache, giddiness, sleeplessness, neuralgia and a whole host of other departures from health may be set up by jarring the brain. In jumping the great danger is not to the legs. The part chiefly risked is the head. When the feet touch the ground the shock passes up the limbs and spinal column, the parts above serving as buffers and so preventing the parts below being thrown too greatly in the upward direction. But the head has nothing above it; hence the shock may dislocate the neck or fracture the skull. One should always alight on the toes and with the legs slightly bent. This position greatly helps to prevent jarring.

Mistakes Attract Attention.

The average person takes pleasure in calling attention to errors in spelling or grammar in signs. The mistakes furnish them a temptation to display their knowledge that is hard to resist. "Every now and then," said a local haberdasher, "I fix up a window sign with a misspelled word or an error in grammar in it. Dozens of people drop in to tell me where it's wrong. Of course I act surprised and thank them. Then the chances are I sell them something." At a Kansas City theater there used to be an advertising curtain which bore the word "versus" spelled "verses." The word attracted more comment than many of the acts did. It made people talk about the theater, and in the theatrical business to get the public to talking about things is the first step toward money making. So many people began to bother the house manager about the misspelled word, however, that he finally had to have it changed.—Kansas City Times.

"Weak Hearts."

It is a harmful thing for any one to coddle his heart when there is no disease, and I think we (the medical profession) are far too instrumental in aiding and abetting this. We do far more good by pronouncing people sound, even if out of health, and thus sending them forth with renewed hope, than by keeping them in the chains of uncertainty and nervous dread, than which nothing can be more crushing to the utility of a life or more harmful to the chance of regaining health.

I know of no symptoms of a "weak heart." Yet the use of the term leads either to a state of nervous dread from which recovery is most difficult or else to a life of luxurious idleness, which, by the enervation it causes, is likely sooner or later to be precedent to the end it would seek to avoid.—Dr. James Goodheart of London.

Love.

"What is love?" asked the sweet girl, who was looking for a chance to leap.

"Love," replied the old bachelor, "is a kind of insanity that makes a man call a 200 pound female his little turtle-dove."

The American Woman's Home.

Hundreds of thousands of American women are born, live their lives and die in boarding houses or hotels without ever finding time to create a home for themselves or without even feeling a desire to do so.—House Beautiful.

DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY

Breaks no Hearts, Excuses no Crimes.

Dr. David Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is not a disguised enemy of the human race; where it cannot help, it does not harm. It is composed of vegetable ingredients and does not heat or inflame the blood but cools and purifies it. In all cases of Kidney troubles, Liver complaints, Constipation of the Bowels, and the delicate derangements which afflict women, the action of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is beyond praise. Thousands of grateful people voluntarily testify to this, in letters to Dr. Kennedy; and with a warmth and fullness of words which mere business certificates never possess. It makes no drunkards—excuses no crimes—breaks no hearts. In its coming there is hope, and in its wings there is healing. We challenge a trial and are confident of the result. Your druggist has it. ONE DOLLAR a Bottle. Bear in mind the name and address: Dr. David KENNEDY, Rondout, New York.

No cocoa equals Lowney's in strength. Some are blacker—colored chemically—but inferior in real strength.

Lowney's Cocoa is not loaded with ground cocoa-shells, flour, starch, or other adulterants.

It consists of nothing but the choicest cocoa beans ground to flour fineness.

The result is the most delicious, purest and finest flavored cocoa possible.

Such cocoa as Lowney's, if made abroad and duties paid, would cost double the Lowney price.

Some Seasonable Advice.

It may be a piece of superfluous advice to urge people at this season of the year to lay in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is almost sure to be needed before winter is over, and much more prompt and satisfactory results are obtained when taken as soon as a cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system, which can only be done by keeping the remedy at hand. This remedy is so widely known and so altogether good that no one should hesitate about buying it in preference to any other. It is for sale by the Quimby Pharmacy, Palmer.

One Cold and Another

The season's first cold may be slight—may yield to early treatment, but the next cold will hang on longer; it will be more troublesome, too. Unnecessary to take chances on that second one. Scott's Emulsion is a preventive as well as a cure. Take when colds abound and you'll have no cold. Take it when the cold is contracted and it checks inflammation, heals the membranes of the throat and lungs and drives the cold out.

The Crucifix in the Banana.

The increasing popularity of the banana in this country recalls a curious reference to the fruit to be found in an old volume entitled "The Glasse of Time in the First Age," divinely handled by Thomas Peyton (1620). In the eighty-first stanza occurs the following:

A cucumber much like it is in shew,
Of pleasing taste and sweet delightful hue;
If with a knife the fruit in two you reave,
A perfect cross you shall therein perceive.

In the Canary islands and in Brazil it was regarded as an affront to the Saviour to cut the banana with a knife, as it revealed the crucifix. But in order to see this clearly it is necessary to cut the fruit when it first commences to ripen or, if ripe, immediately after it is taken from the plant.—London Standard.

Rats.

A plan that will sometimes destroy a large number of rats is to fill a barrel partly full of water and cover it with an inch or so of meal. A hole is bored in the barrel a little above the meal, and the rats enter, sink through the meal and find a watery grave. In catching rats in steel traps great care is required to deceive the rodents. Traps need to be well covered and everything done to avoid raising the suspicions of the "varmints." Often when rats refuse to eat poisoned bread and butter they may be baited with poisoned crackers, cheese or meat. Rats are shy and gamy creatures, but it is possible to "make game of them."

Named For His Satanic Majesty.

The unfortunate disaster by which a life has been lost on the Welsh mountain known as the Devil's Kitchen has drawn attention, says the Dundee Advertiser, to the curious but seemingly universal practice of past times in naming peculiar natural formations after his Satanic majesty. It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that hardly a county in the British Isles is without some place or thing with the designation Devil, all of which prompts the thought that his Satanic majesty must be a holder of a considerable amount of property on this terrestrial globe. The Devil's Punch Bowl, the Devil's Bellows, the Devil's Beef Tub, the Devil's Frying Pan, the Devil's Lake, the Devil's Dike, the Devil's Caldron, are a few instances which occur at random, scattered about in various parts of the country.

Made Red Hair Fashionable.

The French painter who won attention for his red headed girls cannot be classed among the great masters, but he made red hair fashionable and is said to have been responsible for the peroxide blond. Not until Henner introduced his sweetly brown and red women to the art world did pink and white beauty find it was insipid to be fair. Red heads extinguished the blond cendree, and even the dark haired "washed" their locks until they were of the desired Henner colorings and acquired "tones" that were so warm they improved the dullest skin. Henner's pictures may be said to have apotheosized the much derided "carrot head." He saw red and made it "heavenly brown."

The Mustache.

The home of the mustache is in Spain, and here is the history of its origin: After the Moors first invaded the country the Christian and Moslem population became so mixed that it was difficult to say which were Moors and which Spaniards. The Spaniards then hit upon a means by which they could at once distinguish their brethren. They did not shave their lips any longer and they allowed a tuft of hair to grow below their under lips, so that their beards formed the rude outline of a cross. Thus the mustache became a symbol of liberty and fraternity.

Have a Purpose.

Have a purpose in life and stick to it. Be sure you're right, that the purpose is worth your effort, that to win is just the thing, and then stick. Live plain, be honest and work hard. Steady work and plain food will keep a man in the path of rectitude when sermons fail and contribute not a little to his success. The brain cannot do its best work when sprinkled with the ashes of a dissolute, ill directed life. Be sure you're right, then stick.—Dr. Abbott.

FOR GOVERNOR—CHARLES W. BARTLETT

His Election Will Convince Congress that Massachusetts is arnest in Its Demand for Free Hides, Coal, Iron Ore, Lumber and Pulp.

Charles W. Bartlett, citizen, soldier, advocate, was born in Boston August 12, 1845. His parents removed to East Cambridge a few years later, where he attended the public schools. At the age of 11 he was a pupil of the Putnam Grammar School and much interested in his studies; but he was compelled to give up his school and go with his parents who removed to a farm in the town of Lee, N.H., where the educational advantages were not equal to those of Cambridge.

However, the boy was possessed with a desire to secure an education, and what time could be spared from the many duties he found to perform upon a rocky farm, he attended the district school of Lee. There are still living in New Hampshire quite a number of people who knew Gen. Bartlett at this period of his career, and who tell with pride of the efforts of a dutiful son to aid his parents in getting a living on a rented farm, while at the same time striving to secure an education. It is related by one who knows the early life of Gen. Bartlett that he was an omniverous reader, devoting the long winter evenings after the farm work was completed to careful study and reading of such books as he could secure. It was in that New Hampshire home, devoid of everything but the barest necessities, that the successful advocate of to-day grounded himself in the rudiments of law and history. He was a good farmer and a good student, and the habits of early life imposed upon him by a lack of wealth and opportunity make him thorough in all he does, perfectly frank, open and honest.

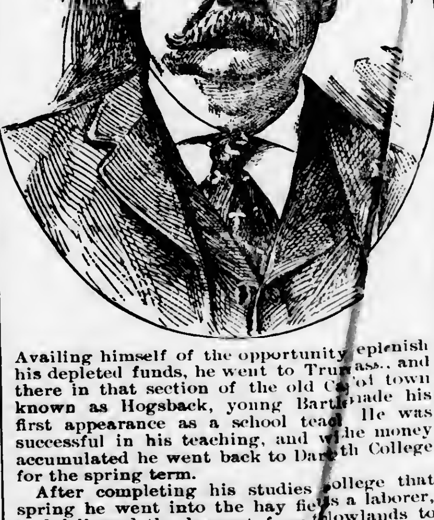
Determined to secure an education, opportunity came to attend for two short terms a small academy at Andover, N. H. While enjoying this (to him) great privilege of attending an academy, he continued his studies in private. It was his great good fortune at this time to form the acquaintance of Jeremiah Smith, at present a professor at the Harvard law school. Prof. Smith had graduated from Harvard and was living at the Hale farm, near the home of Mr. Bartlett. He interested himself in the Bartlett boy, encouraged him to study, and aided him in many ways, particularly by hearing him recite the lessons learned.

The pinch of poverty was unceasing, however, and as the season grew more suitable for farming than for study, young Bartlett was compelled to relinquish his studies and go to work as a bread winner. He worked as a laborer in a crew that traveled about the state compressing hay into bales. This was hard work, and the hours were from daylight to dark; but two months of such labor enabled him to accumulate money with which to assist in his education.

At the breaking out of the war he was about 16 years of age, and he was extremely anxious to join his schoolboy comrades and enlist, but being an only son he could not secure the consent of his parents, and at this time could not go to the front. Later, however, he secured the consent of his father, and he promptly left the New Hampshire home, went to Boston, and enlisted as a private in Company A, 5th Massachusetts regiment. He served his term of service and was mustered out in November, 1864.

When he returned home from the war, he resumed his studies at the academy at Andover, N. H., where some boyish prank brought him into conflict with the academy authorities, which resulted in his leaving the school. With a determination characteristic of the man, the boy was more than ever desirous of securing an education, and without saying a word to anyone he went to Dartmouth College, and there took the entrance examinations. One of the many branches in which he was examined he never studied, but it was here that his great reading and retentive memory came to his aid, and not only in this particular branch, but in all others, he successfully passed the examination. He learned in the month of June of his success with his examinations. Then arose the momentous problem of providing the necessary money to defray his expenses. Inspired with a worthy ambition, he sought work to earn the money. The best thing obtainable was employment as a laborer with a bridge-builder. He accepted the opportunity gladly, and was put to work with other men at the dangerous work of building a cofferdam. He continued in the employ of the bridge builder until the college year opened in September. With the money thus earned young Bartlett entered Dartmouth College, and managed to get along until the winter vacation came.

In those days it was customary to permit deserving students to leave college to teach for brief periods country schools throughout New England



Availing himself of the opportunity replenish his depleted funds, he went to Truro, Mass., and there in that section of the old Cape Cod town known as Hogsback, young Bartlett made his first appearance as a school teacher. He was successful in his teaching, and with the money accumulated he went back to Dartmouth College for the spring term.

After completing his studies at college that spring he went into the hay fields as a laborer, and followed the harvest from the lowlands to the uplands. With the money earned he went to college for the fall term, later returning to Cape Cod to teach a brief term at Wellfleet. This was a rather peculiar school, in that was made up principally of those hearty young Cape Codders who passed most of the year in deep sea fishing, returning home for a brief period in winter. There were between and 60 of them, and they were a studious, well behaved lot and seemed to realize that it was important that they should most of their scant educational ties. Wellfleet Bartlett returned to college for term, when an urgent request came for a to take charge of a school in which the had been running things to suit themselves. sident of the college sent word that he had n, either of whom were capable of under the task. One of them was Gen. Bartlett, e other was Judge Maynard, now of the or Court of Massachusetts. Gen. Bartlett ent out to take charge of the school, and as most all his undertakings he was successful. school was at South Gardner, Mass. Later ain taught at Wellfleet.

hile in college Gen. Bartlett was a member of D. K. E. fraternity. After he graduated college in the class of '69, he received a position to teach the high school at Salmon ls, N.H. There had been considerable trouble d one term had been broken up. He took arge of the school and taught it peacefully. In the meantime at every opportunity he had een studying law, and soon after completing his ollege course he entered the Albany, N. Y., law school. He completed the course and was admitted to the bar of New York in '71.

Gen. Bartlett returned to his New Hampshire home and entered into a law partnership with Samuel M. Wheeler of Dover, N.H. He remained there two years, and then started for New York city by way of Boston. When he arrived in Boston he met a friend with whom he had business transactions in New Hampshire who wanted him to take charge of some legal matters in Boston. Gen. Bartlett demurred, saying he had no office or facilities for work, and was on his way to New York. He was induced to call at the office of N. B. Bryant, an attorney, and explain the situation to him. Mr. Bryant very generously gave Gen. Bartlett a desk in his office and invited him to remain just as long as he wished. The result was that Gen. Bartlett occupied that desk for 13 years.

Gen. Bartlett is the senior member of the firm of Bartlett & Anderson, one of the most prominent and successful law firms in Boston. He is a past commander of John A. Andrew post 15, G. A. R., and resides in Dorchester with his wife. He has been a member of the Suffolk County Bar association since it was formed, and is a member of the Curtis club, the Tavern club and the New Hampshire club, and is president of the Dartmouth Educational association and a member of other Dartmouth alumni associations. He is a man of simple habits, loves horses, baseball, football; but his greatest enjoyment he secures from his home life.

Gen. Charles W. Bartlett is an ideal man for the honorable position of governor of this commonwealth. He is scrupulously honest and fearless. He would represent in executive office the interests of the whole people. Special interests asking favors at the expense of the people would receive no consideration. He is an advocate of reciprocal trade treaties with all countries, and with Canada in particular. He believes in a revision of the tariff to meet the requirements of the welfare of our New England industries. He has the confidence of the business interests, is trusted by the farmer, and the workingmen will find in him a true friend.

Voters of Massachusetts are urged to cast their ballot for Charles W. Bartlett, and thus emphasize the appeal to Congress for relief from the tariff burden which threatens to crush the life out of industrial New England.

"For the benefit of Massachusetts industries I believe that Congress should place on the free list hides, coal, iron ore, lumber and wood pulp, and that duties upon manufactured articles be reduced wherever possible. I am also convinced that reciprocal treaties should be made by this country with Canada and other nations." — CHARLES W. BARTLETT.

WIFE ASKS FOR DIVORCE.

Mrs. Emma C. Hill Seeks Separation From Husband.

BOTH ARE WELL KNOWN IN PALMER.

Where They Lived For Several Years. Decision of Court to be Given Later.

The contested divorce suit of Mrs Emma C. Hill of Springfield against Dr Elmer E. Hill of Palmer, in which she asks for the custody of a minor son, has been on trial in Springfield this week and has attracted much attention from Palmer people on account of the prominent position occupied by the couple in this town both before and after their marriage. Mrs. Hill's maiden name was Emma Chilson, and her girlhood was spent in Palmer. Dr. Hill was a practicing dentist in the place for a number of years previous to the marriage, which occurred about twelve years ago in the West, after which the couple located in Red Wing, Mich., where they remained for some time. About three or four years ago they returned east and Dr. Hill opened an office in Springfield, his family living in Palmer; the office was closed after a time, and Dr. Hill has not been engaged in business since. The couple were living in Palmer when they separated, some time in the summer of this year. The evidence has all been put in, but the case will be argued by briefs. R. J. Talbot and Green & Bennett of Springfield are for Mrs. Hill, with E. E. [illegible]obson of Palmer and Taft & Taft of Spring[illegible]eld for Dr. Hill.

Mrs. Hill was on the stand all Tuesday morning and the cross examination continued into the afternoon. She testified that while under the influence of drugs her husband treated her with violence, frequently pushing her whenever she happened to be in his way, and that he did many other queer things which he would not do if he were sober. She also claimed that he struck her and used obscene language in her presence while suffering from the effects of drugs. Her mother, Mrs. Hannah Chilson of Palmer, testified in corroboration of much of the evidence given by her daughter. Mrs. Sarah C. Moulton, who lived at the same hotel in Palmer with Dr. Hill and his wife for a period of four months, testified regarding the treatment which Dr. Hill had given his wife, and said he was often disagreeable to her. She said she once saw Dr Hill take a powder while she was visiting the couple in their room, and he went to sleep while she was still there.

Howard K. Alden of the Springfield drug firm of C. P. Alden & Son was the next witness, and stated that Dr. Hill had several times bought strychnine tablets at his store, buying from three dozen to 50 tablets at a time and each time stating that he was buying them for Mr. LeGro, a druggist in Palmer. He thought Dr. Hill had been a regular patron of his store for some time, but could not say how often he had bought drugs. C. A. LeGro testified that he did not remember that Dr. Hill had ever delivered any strychnine tablets to him. Mrs. Ellen Carpenter of Springfield, with whom Dr. Hill and his wife boarded for some time, also testified that Dr. Hill had frequently seemed under the influence of drugs, and that while in that condition used decidedly profane language. Dr. Edward B. Nims of Springfield, formerly superintendent of the Northampton Insane hospital, was the last witness of the day, and testified as an expert on the effect of different drugs on the system and outward actions.

Dr. J. P. Schneider was allowed to testify for the defense during the afternoon, and stated that he had never observed that Dr. Hill was under the influence of drugs, but had he attended Mrs. Hill and found her nervous and irritable.

At the opening of the session Wednesday morning, Mrs. Ellen C. Carpenter was recalled to the stand and stated that she had noticed a big improvement in the libellant's appearance since her separation from the libelee. Mrs. Sarah C. Moulton was also recalled and stated that Mrs. Hill looked very thin last February, which was before the time she and her husband separated. Wallace Chilson of Winthrop, a brother of Mrs. Hill, testified in regard to Dr. Hill's treatment of his wife, and he was followed by Mrs. Ellen R. Paine of Palmer, who lives near the former residence of Dr. Hill and his wife in Palmer. She stated that Mrs Hill had lost flesh during the last few months she was with Dr. Hill, also that he had treated his wife well in her presence.

Robert H. Wood of Springfield was the next witness, and said that he boarded at Mrs. Carpenter's house in the winter of 1904, when Dr. and Mrs. Hill boarded there. He said Dr. Hill seemed inattentive to his wife and at several card parties the Dr. became very angry with his wife. He stated that he was at the Carpenter house when Mrs. Hill left her husband and came there, and noticed that she was then very much changed. Since that time her condition has changed 100 per cent for the better and that she looks much better.

Mrs. Carpenter was again recalled to the stand, and stated that about three weeks ago she found Mrs. Hill very much frightened at the thought that the doctor was coming in through the window after her.

Dr. Morton B. Hodgkins of the Massachusetts epileptic hospital was the first witness called for the defense, and said he made an examination of Dr. Hill last March. He found Dr. Hill was suffering with neurasthenia, and his right leg was suffering with a malady analagous to writer's cramp and caused by running a dental machine. He found some isolated symptoms of morphine including general muscular weakness, which is also the chief symptom of neurasthenia, but taken as a whole his symptoms were not morphine symptoms. He saw no indications of the use of cocaine or any other drug.

Dr. Hill was called upon next, and testified that he had not used drugs, and that he had not struck his wife. He denied all the allegations of the libellant, except one, he stating that it was true that he had sworn at her.

HAMPDEN.

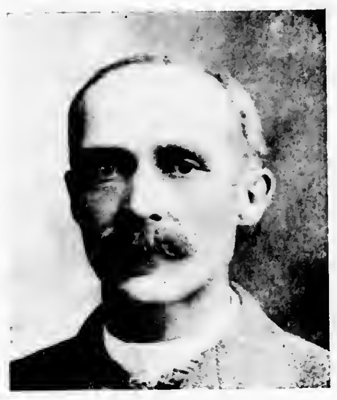
Death of Mrs. Edward Bartlett.

Mrs. Julia Ann Bartlett, 76, widow of Edward Bartlett, died at her home Sunday on the North Somers road, Hampden, after a four-weeks' illness. She was born in Ellington, but had lived in Hampden 34 years. She is survived by one son, John Bartlett, and four grandchildren, John E. of Hampden, Mrs. Nettie M. Wood of Thompsonville, Flora E. and Walter R., both of Springfield, and three great-grandchildren, Lottie M., and John A. Wood and Florence J. Bartlett. Mrs. Bartlett was well known in Hampden, where she was highly respected. The funeral was held at the home Wednesday morning, and burial was in Melrose, Ct.

VISIT EPILEPTIC HOSPITAL.

Business Club Members Guests of Superintendent Flood at Institution.

The members of the Palmer Business and Social Club had an enjoyable outing at the Massachusetts epileptic hospital Monday afternoon as the guests of the superintendent, Dr. Everett Flood. The business men to the number of 33 gathered at the club rooms at 3 o'clock, whence they were conveyed to the institution in the hospital barges. The first stop was made at the "Farm Group," formerly the Plumley farm, which place was thoroughly inspected; thence the members were taken to the two cottages above the farmhouse, where they were shown around in a like manner. The barges were then driven to the main hospital buildings. Here all the buildings, from cellar to roof and every ward, were visited, each of which proved a revelation to the guests. The visitors were more than astounded by the elaborateness of the institution and were very free in their frank acknowledgement of the excellent and painstaking care given the inmates.



Dr. Everett Flood, Superintendent.

The almost perfect management of the institution, the care that is given to every little detail, and the perfect harmony that apparently prevails among all connected with the hospital was evidenced on all sides. After the inspection of the plant, the members adjourned to a large assembly hall, where a bounteous collation was tendered them by Dr. Flood. After dinner remarks were in order, following which Dr. Flood pleasingly entertained his guests by interesting lantern slides. He has an excellent collection of pictures, taken of some of the patients in their various stages of epilepsy and even before being afflicted with the disease, which will depict the character of their malady. Drs. Flood, Morton, Hodgskins and Kennedy personally conducted the party. The visitors were unanimous in their praise of the efficient management of the institution, and all reported an instructive as well as an entertaining visit.

CAUGHT IN FREIGHT CAR.

Two Men Nabbed in Palmer Car Late at Night; Car Seal Broken.

Two men, giving the names of George W. Jacobs and Frank A. Sullivan, were caught in a freight car in the Boston and Albany yard in Palmer Tuesday evening and locked up. In the district court Wednesday morning they were charged with breaking and entering a freight car with intent to commit larceny, and both pleaded not guilty; Judge Kenefick found probable cause however and bound them over to the December term of the criminal court in $500 bonds each, which they could not furnish, and so were sent up.

John O'Connor, conductor of the freight due to leave for Springfield about 11 in the evening, while passing one of the cars in his train, which was nearly ready to start, heard someone inside and slammed the door shut, then set a watch on it and went for Officer Crimmins. He told his story in court and stated that the car was one run solely between Springfield and Ware, and was supposed to be sealed; he noticed that the burlap over one barrel of the contents had been cut. Charles Welden, car sealer at the freight yard, testified that the car reached Palmer from Ware between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon; he inspected it at once and found both seals intact.

Both men claimed that they were working their way from Boston west, Jacobs' destination being Chicopee and Sullivan being headed for Buffalo. Both denied breaking into the car, claiming that the door was unfastened when they went to it. Jacobs claimed to be 28 years of age, with a home and parents in Lakeside, Ohio, and relatives in Chicopee, while Sullivan said his parents resided in Buffalo.

"Shoestring" District's Nominee.

The Republican nominee of the "Shoestring," or Second Hampden representative district, is William H. Granger of Agawam, the convention having named him in Springfield Saturday. The second district's political sea has not carried an unruffled surface of recent years, and this year is no exception. Last year the nomination was conceded to the town of Hampden, and was secured by William J. Sessions, but only after arousing such a feeling that Henry E. Bodurtha of Agawam, a Democrat, was elected and will be a candidate again this year. Under the agreement the Republican nomination this year belonged to Agawam, but some of the towns objected on the ground that the man elected last year, although of the opposite political party, came from Agawam. This was finally overcome however, and it was supposed that a Feeding Hills man was to have the honor until a few days before the convention, when the committee selected Mr. Granger. In opposition the name of Col. S. N. Smith of Feeding Hills was proposed, but in the convention had only one supporter. The vote on nomination stood: W. H. Granger of Agawam 10, W. J. Sessions of Hampden 6, George D. Greene of Ludlow 2, Col. S. N. Smith of Feeding Hills 1; a motion to make the nomination unanimous was opposed by Col. Smith's backer. It took two hours of "hot air" to bring about a ballot, the past, present and future condition of the district being thoroughly discussed, during which Mr. Sessions of Hampden was represented as a much-abused man.

Bondsville Man to Run Again.

The Democratic candidate for representative in the First Hampden district will be John F. Hayden of Bondsville, who carried the party's banner last year. The convention which nominated him was held in the district court room in Palmer last Saturday afternoon, and was called to order by Thomas J. Moran, chairman of the district committee. Mr. Moran was elected chairman and Joseph Coyle of Monson secretary. The name of Mr. Hayden was placed in nomination by Richard Donovan of Palmer, and he was unanimously chosen by acclamation. The chairmen of the several town committees were made a district committee, with the Palmer member as chairman, and the district committee was empowered to fill vacancies. The time consumed in transacting the business of the convention was just 10 minutes.

S. AND E. TURNED DOWN.

Brimfield Location is Denied by R. R. Commissioners.

SAME GROUND HELD BY OTHER ROAD.

So Springfield and Eastern Will Make Application for Another Position.

The railroad commissioners, after a hearing in Boston yesterday, declined to approve the location granted the Springfield and Eastern Street Railway Company by the selectmen of Brimfield for their tracks in a portion of that town, the reason being that through an oversight permission was given the S. and E. to lay its tracks in the same place formerly granted the Hartford and Worcester electric road, and accepted by them. The distance is about a quarter of a mile. Notice has been given that the S. and E. will petition the selectmen of Brimfield for a relocation of the Hartford and Worcester tracks, which will give opportunity for granting the former road the position on the side of the street which it desires.

The hearing showed the antagonism between the Shaw interests of Boston, back of the Hartford and Worcester line, and the New Haven interests, supporting the S. and E. After the matter had been gone over the railroad commissioners announced that they should refuse to approve the location asked for if it was shown that the two conflicted, or were over the same ground. It was admitted that this was so, and the matter was ended for the time being. The petition for approval of the Monson location was held over until the hearing on the petition for the new location which is to be asked for, as if the Brimfield location is not secured the Monson one is valueless, being a part of the proposed new line. The selectmen of Brimfield and Monson were present in favor of the S. and E. road.

REYNARD WAS CAUTIOUS.

Only One Fox Seen on Annual Hunt, and He Got Away Safe.

The annual fox hunt of the Palmer and Monson sportsmen yesterday proved unproductive of results, only one fox being seen; it was fired at twice by Fred Munger but declined to stop. The party left the Converse House about 7.30 and was taken to a spot on East Hill near the Monson town farm, where the dogs, eight in number, were turned loose. The day was evidently not a good one for foxes, or there are few in that locality, for only the one was seen. After the return of the party to the hotel in the afternoon the proposed supper was given up, the number who proposed to attend being small. Instead, a supper will be given in the evening at some later date, when the proposed game protective association will be formed.

Runaway Girl Heard From.

Miss Jennie Brooks, who left her home on Maple street Sunday without notifying her friends and whose whereabouts remained a mystery for several days, has been heard from, a letter being received Wednesday evening stating that she was with her sister in Niverville, N. Y. She stated in the letter that she would return home in a few days.

Miss Brooks left home Sunday morning during the absence of her mother, Mrs. Sophia Brooks, at church. She had assisted her mother to dress and start for church, and then packed her clothes in two dress suit cases and taking about $15 from her mother's pocketbook departed. The young woman had been sick for several weeks but had recovered and was supposed to go to work in the Palmer Carpet mill Monday morning. Mrs. Brooks searched in Springfield and Westfield for her daughter, but found no trace of her except that a Palmer officer had seen her take an electric car. The young woman was one of two who eloped last spring with two young men and attempted to get married, but returned when they could find no one to tie the knot.

Ware Catholics Purchase Land.

The Polish Catholic society of Ware has purchased the Collins real estate on the corner of South and Monroe streets in Ware, and it is expected that a church will be erected early in the spring, and at some future time a parochial residence. The lot has a frontage of 140 feet on South street and 208 on Monroe street, and is located at no great distance from the center of the Polish population. The white tenement block now located on this property will be removed, and while the plans for the church have not yet been drawn, it is certain that it will be of brick, and will be a great improvement to this corner. At present there are 1200 or more in the society, and the building fund, started less than a year ago, now amounts to $8000. The society at present worships in the basement of All Saints' church in Ware.

Pastor's Double Celebration.

The fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Arthur Chase in Trinity Episcopal church of Ware, as well as the fifth anniversary of his marriage, was observed in the parlors of the church last evening from 8 to 10, when Mr. and Mrs. Chase received their friends. They were the recipients of a number of fine gifts, among which were a pair of silver tea and coffee pots with ebony handles, given by members of the church; a large Sheffield salver and silver hot water kettle from friends outside the parish; also $100 from the parish and $50 from other friends. Refreshments were served during the evening; Mrs. W. Booth, Mrs F. F. Gilmore and Miss Mabel Steele presided at one table, and Mrs. J. H. G. Gilbert, Mrs. O. N. Moore, Mrs. William Wilson, Mrs. Charles Tranter and Mrs. G. W. Dunham served salad and cake.

AUTO SPEED HEARING.

Protest Against Limit Established by Selectmen of Wilbraham.

A public hearing was held before the state highway commission in the selectmen's room in North Wilbraham last Friday afternoon, in response to a protest in writing filed September 21 by the Massachusetts Automobile Club against the eight-mile limit for automobiles through the villages. The special regulations of the selectmen provide for a 15-mile limit on the roads in town, an eight-mile limit through the villages of North Wilbraham and through the underpass of the Boston and Albany railroad, and for 10 rods on either side six miles an hour.

E. P. Kendrick of Springfield acted as counsel for the town, and he stated that he did not think the selectmen were asking too much of the automobilists in an eight-mile limit through the villages, and related several accidents which had been caused by excessive speed of automobiles. Several of the townspeople spoke in favor of the eight-mile limit. F. W. Green, chairman of the board of selectmen, stated that the board was prompted to adopt these speed regulations on account of the excessive speeding of automobiles through the villages and the underpass at North Wilbraham, which is one of the worst of the kind in the state, it being a reverse curve, and it is impossible for a driver to see a team coming through from either way until he has passed entirely through the bridge.

Several automobilists attended the hearing, but few remarks were made by them. Francis Hurtubis Jr. of Boston, representing the Massachusetts Automobile Club, was present and spoke in favor of a uniformity of the speed law in all of the towns. He said it was confusing to an automobilist to run his machine into a town where they are limited to six miles an hour, and another eight, and so on up to 20 miles an hour, and tried to show where the difference between eight miles an hour and 10 would make no change in the safety of the public. The meeting closed at 4, and a decision will be given out at a later date by the commissioners.

FOOTBALL.

Wesleyan Academy 18, St. Peters 6.

The Wesleyan Academy team defeated the St. Peters of Springfield Monday afternoon at Wilbraham by a score of 18 to 6. In the first half Wesleyan played with little spirit and so allowed the visitors to cross their goal line in well-directed plays at the ends and through the tackles. In the latter part of the half Wesleyan woke up a little and carried the ball over for a touch-down, but the team work was of the most jagged. The Academy team made two touchdowns in the second half. The line-up and summary:

Ward, l e	r e, Parker
Whalen, l t	r t, Green
Schultz, l g	r g, Annable

The Ludlow Association team defeated the eleven from Springfield Saturday, 8 to 2.

Bliss—Rice.

The marriage of Miss Dora Abbie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ethelbert Bliss of Mapleside farm in Wilbraham, and J. Wilbur Rice, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse L. Rice, also of Wilbraham, took place last evening at 6 30 at the home of the bride's parents on South Main street, Rev. M. S. Howard performing the ceremony in the presence of relatives. The bride was gowned in foulard silk, trimmed with point d'esprit, and was unattended. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Rice left for a wedding trip, which will include New York city and a sail up the Hudson to Albany. Upon their return they will be at home after January 1 at their new home on South Main street. Both the bride and groom are well known in Wilbraham, Mrs. Rice being a member of the Congregational church choir.

The concert will begin at 8 sharp, and the grand march will be at 9.

To Build Macadam Road.

The stone crusher has been set up at the forks of the road near the Catholic cemetery on the Thorndike road, and as soon as Selectman Brainerd has recovered sufficiently from his illness to take charge, the work of putting in macadam road near that point will begin. It is planned to begin at the end of the strip which was built in 1897 and go as far as possible for what money can be spared from that remaining in the highway appropriation, leaving a sum sufficient to take care of the roads through the probable storms of winter. The new road will extend to the top of the grade opposite the cemetery, and will replace a sandy strip which is at present a nuisance to any vehicle passing along that way. The crusher will be allowed to remain in its present position, and next spring it is probable that more macadam road will be constructed in that locality, probably to the foot of what is known as "Cemetery Hill" on the road to Thorndike.

WARREN.

Fell From His Engine.

Charles Loakman of Merrick, an engineer on the early morning freight bound from Springfield to Worcester, fell from his engine early Friday morning, and narrowly escaped being seriously injured. The accident happened about one mile west of Warren. Loakman had gone out on to the running-board and was fixing the sand pipes when he lost his footing and fell to the ground. As he fell he caught his foot in the driving rod and badly crushed it. No one saw him fall, and as the train slowly drew by him he picked up a stone and threw it through a window in the caboose to attract the attention of the train crew. The train was stopped and he was brought to Warren, where he was attended by Dr. John E. Dalton, and was taken home on the 7 20 train.

A Judicious Inquiry.

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade says he has often heard druggists inquire of customers who asked for a cough medicine, whether it was wanted for a child or an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it, and for coughs, colds and croup it is unsurpassed For sale by the Quimby Pharmacy, Palmer.

A MEASURE OF MERIT.

Palmer Citizens Should Weigh Well This Evidence.

Proof of merit lies in the evidence.

Convincing evidence in Palmer.

Is not the testimony of strangers,

But the endorsement of Palmer people.

That's the kind of proof given here.

The statement of a Palmer citizen.

Charles Gilman residing on the Ware road, says: "While I do not want it to be understood that I have been completely cured by Doan's Kidney Pills, you can say for me that they have done me a world of good and I can recommend them to anyone as a good reliable remedy. I have been troubled off and on for some time with dull, heavy, aching pains through my kidneys and loins, and I have had also spells of dizziness in my head. If I bent over to lift anything it hurt me and caused my back to ache severely. Mr. LeGro recommended Doan's Kidney Pills to me and I commenced to use them some weeks ago. The pain has already left me and I am not troubled with dizziness as formerly. I can stoop without feeling twinges, in fact to tell the truth I feel better than I have in many a long day."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States.

CHI-NAMEL
CHI-NAMEL

The Chinese Varnish Made to Walk Upon

MADE IN ALL COLORS

Cherry. Mahogany. Oak. Natural. Etc

For Floors, Bar Tops, Furniture and General Household Use.

Come to our store and get a sample of Chi-Namel applied to wood. Take it home and test it

First. Strike the wood sample a heavy blow with a hammer, and note that while the wood may be indented a quarter of an inch, the varnish has not marred or cracked. This proves that Chi-Namel is very elastic

Second. Place the wood sample in a tea kettle, and note that boiling water does not turn it white. This proves that Chi-namel contains no rosin

Third. Apply whiskey This proves that Chi-Namel will stand upon bar tops.

Fourth. Allow a can of the varnish to stand open over night, and note that there is no evaporation. This proves that Chi-Namel contains no benzine.

Fifth. Spread varnish over flat surface, and brush in every direction, and note "self levelling" effect. This proves that all brush marks disappear, and the result will be pleasing no matter how inexperienced the applier may be.

Old floors can be made to look like new hard wood.

No need to buy new furniture.

Chi-Namel will make old furniture look BETTER than new furniture.

Take no substitute. We invite you to prove to yourself there is NOTHING "just as good as Chi-Namel."

AN OUTRAGE ON THE FLAG

[Original.]

As soon as the weather warmed up after the battle of Mukden I put my yacht in commission, sailed away from an American coast and after a long voyage found myself in the sea of Japan. The intent of my journey was to witness the sea fight that was to decide the fate of the Japanese empire, but I was too late. The fight was over and peace commissioners were on their way to Portsmouth. After visiting some of the warships captured by Admiral Togo I resolved to make a circuit of the island of Nippon.

One evening just before sunset as I was about to enter the strait between Sakhalin and Nippon a junk crossed my bows and signaled me to heave to. Since she showed no flag, I kept on, when a shot came skipping along the water. Being defenseless, I shut off steam and waited. A boat pulled from the junk, and on reaching the yacht an officer in the uniform of a lieutenant in the Japanese army came aboard. While his color and his hair were Japanese his features were European. He was young and spoke with a soft though decided voice. His crew, which I expected would prove to be Chinese, were all Japs.

"I must ask you for the loan of your yacht," he said in broken English.

"Are you pirates?" I asked.

"Certainly not," he replied indignantly.

"Then what are you?"

"A party of Japanese bent on an expedition on yonder island," pointing to Sakhalin.

I had but a dozen men in my crew and could only plead my citizenship, which, strange to say, had no effect on the officer. Indeed, considering the friendship of the United States to Japan, I was surprised that I should have been molested. I was obliged to yield, for while we were speaking boat after boat pulled from the junk, and a hundred men were soon on my decks.

"You have nothing to fear," said the lieutenant, whom his men addressed as Shioya. "We only want your boat for transportation and because she is much faster than that tub we have been using."

As soon as the force was aboard—every man was splendidly armed—I was ordered to proceed and, instead of going through the strait, skirt the western coast of Sakhalin. I occupied the bridge with only Lieutenant Shioya, who appeared like a woman and acted like a soldier.

"I wish to use all my men in an attack I am going to make," he said, "and, knowing of the high sense of honor of Americans, will take my entire force if you will give me your word to remain till we return."

I was pleased at the compliment paid my countrymen and curious to learn of the success or failure of the expedition, besides its object, so I gave the desired promise. About 2 o'clock in the morning I was ordered to put into a little bay. Every light was put out, and when we reached the shore the Japs disembarked as silently as if they were ghosts rather than soldiers.

After they had marched away—they departed so silently that I would not have been aware of their going had I not seen their silhouettes faintly against a dark sky—I gave way to wondering what it all meant. I did not believe my flag would have been outraged by a regular Japanese force, yet the soldiers were surely regularly organized troops. The object of the expedition I inferred to be a reconnoissance preparatory to Japanese occupation of the island, which was really accomplished soon after. I kept turning the matter over in my mind till suddenly I heard a rattle of musketry. It did not last long, and half an hour later, as dawn was breaking, I saw the force returning.

The lieutenant was not in command, but was carried by two soldiers. It was plain that he had been wounded. Beside him walked a man in rags. A soldier carried a ball and chain fastened to the man's leg. When he came aboard I noticed that he was white skinned. It flashed upon me that Sakhalin island was used for prisoners by the Russians and the expedition had released one of them.

The wounded Shioya was laid on the deck, and the prisoner bent over him, took his hand and spoke to him in Russian. I did not understand the words, but the tone was such as a man would use to a woman he loved. Then the lieutenant called to me, and I joined them.

"I am indebted to you," he said, "more than any one on earth. I am a woman. This is my husband, who has been confined on this island for a political offense. I came to Japan, darkened my skin and hair and sought an opportunity to liberate him. The Japanese government was hesitating whether, in view of the peace efforts of your president, it would be diplomatic to occupy Sakhalin. They gave me these troops to make the rescue because of the information I would bring them and because they could disavow any responsibility for my acts. God bless you and your countrymen, who condemn our tyrants, but are friendly to the Russian people."

The first thing I did was to send below for a mechanic to strike the fetters from the rescued man's legs and the second to open my medical and surgical case for the treatment of the heroine's wound, which, I am happy to say, did not prove mortal. These two being dispensed with, I ordered up a good supper for the man, who was nearly famished.

RUSSELL THORNE.

He Knew Too Much.

A curious Malayan legend says that in olden times the waters surrounding Singapore were so infested with swordfish as to make it impossible for the fishermen to pursue their daily task. A boy advised the rajah to let down into the water freshly peeled stems of the banana plant, and, this being done, the fish imbedded their swords in the stems and were easily killed. The boy genius was considered a danger to the throne, and he was executed lest he grow up and become a conspirator.

How to Cure Corns and Bunions.

First, soak the corn or bunion in warm water to soften it; then pare it down as closely as possible without drawing blood and apply Chamberlain's Pain Balm twice daily, rubbing vigorously for five minutes at each application. A corn plaster should be worn a few days to protect it from the shoe. As a general liniment for sprains, bruises, lameness and rheumatism, Pain Balm is unequaled For sale by the Quimby Pharmacy, Palmer.

TO SAVE THE CHILDREN.

At the recent convention of the State Federation of Labor a resolution was passed endorsing

HON. CURTIS GUILD, Jr.,
Republican Candidate for Governor, for his efforts in behalf of the abolition of child labor in this country. He was recognized as the true friend of labor.

A MODEL MILL TOWN.

Students of labor conditions have placed their seal of approval upon Hopedale, the mill town which

HON. EBEN S. DRAPER,
Republican Candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, and his family have established, and 3000 or more people find work in plenty there, at good wages and under the most beautiful and beneficent surroundings.

HON. EBEN S. DRAPER.

What have the Democratic candidates done to equal this? Which is the true friend of labor, the man who does things for labor at every opportunity, or the man who is continually telling what he would do if he ever had the opportunity and then dodges the opportunity?

THE TRUE FRIENDS OF LABOR ARE

Americans who travel abroad are getting very weary of the constant tipping which they are called on to do, and which makes travel quite expensive. An American in London recently rose from the dinner table, after paying for his meal, and left nothing for the waiter. The waiter came up to him with a lovable little smile on his face and politely begged his patron's pardon, but claimed that the price of the meal did not include the waiter. "Sorry," said the American, "but I did not eat the waiter."

No cocoa equals Lowney's in strength. Some are blacker — colored chemically — but inferior in real strength.

Lowney's Cocoa is not loaded with ground cocoa-shells, flour, starch, or other adulterants.

It consists of nothing but the choicest cocoa beans ground to flour fineness.

The result is the most delicious, purest and finest flavored cocoa possible.

Such cocoa as Lowney's, if made abroad and duties paid, would cost double the Lowney price.

Our Boston Letter

It tells about

Various Phases of the Political Situation in Both Parties.

BOSTON, OCT 18, 1905.

William A. Gaston's decision to withdraw from politics seems to have been reached without consultation with his friends, as far as can be learned to-day. His announcement in the morning papers has taken them all by surprise, as well as the Republicans. Each side is disposed to interpret his action according to its partisan desire or advantage. The Democrats do not see as it will make any difference with the successful conduct of the campaign, for Gaston says that he shall not withdraw until the campaign is ended. On the other hand, this withdrawel may be of benefit to the democracy because, justly or unjustly, there has been strong feeling against the Gaston management of the party on the ground that it did not represent the real democracy at all, but merely made the democracy an annex to the capitalistic element of the state. There is no doubt that this feeling is wide spread through the state outside of Boston, and the certainty that Gaston will withdraw after the campaign, which would indicate that he will not make the party a tail of the Boston elevated railway company, will certainly tend to encourage the Democrats who believe that their party should stand for the people against the corporations to rally to the polls in order to get ready for asserting their control of the party hereafter.

Over in the Republican headquarters, however, there is a disposition to regard Gaston's decision as an admission of weakness, a discounting of defeat and a preparation to throw off all responsibility If he had felt sure of success, they argue, he would have remained on the committee without saying anything about withdrawing after the election and he would have taken credit to himself for the result. The news came as a complete surprise and its first effect is to make them believe that the Democrats are preparing to admit in advance and they will be defeated. The Republicans are arranging for rallies in all parts of the state, but, after all, this is decidedly an off year and there is not nearly as much political activity as there was a year ago. At the Republican club in Symphony hall to-morrow night, with Bonaparte, Lodge and Guild for the speakers, and with Senator Crane and other Republican leaders to share the reception, there will be a great outburst of enthusiasm. The Republicans have the gift of making a great display of these club occasions. It is the time when the solidity of the organization in wealth, social power and oratorical ability comes to the front. It is first-rate politics to make such a demonstration, for it tends to hold in line and to bring to the party all voters who are captivated by that sort of display. How many it repels can never be known, but the occasions always pass off with great brilliancy and apparent success, for applause and enthusiasm are never lacking.

Of course the great factor in the campaign is the personality of Whitney and the state house record he made which is laid bare by the Republican state committee and by George Fred Williams. On the Republican side there is some uneasiness over the situation. For instance, the committee is in receipt of information to-day from an important industrial center that the reciprocity talk is going to turn Republicans in that place to Whitney and urgent representation was made of the necessity of sending speakers there to counteract the Whitney influence. The feeling was in line with that at the Democratic headquarters that this is to be a line-up on the question of reciprocity and tariff revision and that many Republicans will vote for Whitney on that ground, forgetting all about the state house record.

On the other hand, the Republicans get sufficient evidence that the record will influence votes that have determined to push the matter vigorously during the remainder of the campaign. The appearance of the advertisement to-day, over the signature of the state committee, quoting from William E Russell's speech 10 years ago, in which he said that he would have vetoed the West-End bill, is a part of this new movement They say that they propose to print only the official record, and facts which are beyond dispute about Whitney and then see if the people will elect him lieutenant-governor Col. Gaston deprecates this "mud-slinging," as he calls it, and hopes that that sort of campaign will not be indulged in. He says that repeated efforts have been made to get him to consent to showing up the methods by which the bill for the division of the town of Milford and the incorporation of Hopedale was passed, it being notorious that there was one of the biggest fights ever seen in the Legislature over the division bill, that George Draper, founder of the Home Market Club, and Gen William F. Draper, his son, were on the floor of the House when the bill was under discussion, doing everything they could for its passage, and that the bill was generally regarded as a personal favor to the elder Draper in return for his liberal support of the Republican campaign fund. Eben S. Draper was in town to-day and was asked in regard to the matter. He said that he was too young to have much part in the fight, but he did everything he could for the passage of the bill and he is perfectly willing to have all the circumstances connected with his father's and brother's action brought out before the public. He is doubtless sincere in this, for current gossip at the state house at the time,—this was in 1883,—was not to worse effect than indicated above. It is not probable that campaign powder can be manufactured out of the affair.

Thus far neither of the candidates for the first place on the ticket have been as prominent as those for the second place. The Republicans are confidently looking for the election of their entire ticket, while the Democrats are rather in the attitude of hope and expectancy than of genuine confidence in success. The people are not warming up much to this campaign yet and it cannot be fairly predicted to-day whether they are preparing for another vote such as they gave Bates, or whether they will return pretty solidly to the Republican fold.

One of the interesting meetings of the week has been that of the directors of the American Peace Society yesterday, for Dr. Benjamin F Trueblood, its secretary, gave an account of the doings of the Universal Peace Congress at Lucerne, and he brought out many interesting points which the Associated Press dispatches did not mention. The congress voted to send to President Roosevelt recommendations that the following subjects be included in the list for discussion at the second peace conference: Limitation of armaments by land and sea; the establishment of a regular international assembly which is expected to become the germ of a genuine world legislature; the organization of an administrative bureau to prepare the program of the assembly and to study the best methods of perfecting international life; the codification of international law; and the conclusion of a general obligatory arbitration treaty. When this action was taken it was not known that President Roosevelt had waived his invitations to a second conference, which Secretary Hay sent out a year ago in order to permit the czar to call such conference, as he has since done. It will be remembered that the matter of a world legislature was brought before our state Legislature in 1902 and 1903, and that in the latter year our Legislature adopted unanimously its now well known resolution in favor of such an institution. It is not certain yet what will be the status before the conference called by the czar of the American propositions as set forth in Secretary Hay's circular, but it is expected that courtesy to President Roosevelt will at least secure them a standing in the program. There were three such propositions: The finishing of the business left over from the first Peace Conference, the conclusion of a general obligatory arbitration treaty, and the establishment of a regular international congress. There is a feeling that the new peace conference will be called for May 18, 1906, which will be just seven years from the meeting of the first one.

One important fact brought out is that if it had not been for the socialist opposition the Peace Congress would probably have approved the American proposition for the neutoralization of the great highways of commerce on the ocean, so that all passenger and merchant vessels in those routes should be free from attack by belligerents in case of war. The socialists smelt in the idea a plan of capitalists to save their property from capture and they had such influence in the congress that the matter was dropped without action. Of course their suspicion was utterly groundless.

All the state is interested in the decision of the ballot law commissioners to-day that Curley, candidate for the Legislature, who was refused a seat by the last House, is entitled to have his name go on the official ballot It was thought, just after the caucuses, that M. J. McEtrick had beaten him, but Curley finally wins Now it is to be seen whether the Legislature of 1906 will refuse to seat him. It might, as consistently as the House of 1905 so refused.

Some Seasonable Advice.

It may be a piece of superfluous advice to urge people at this season of the year to lay in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is almost sure to be needed before winter is over, and much more prompt and satisfactory results are obtained when taken as soon as a cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system, which can only be done by keeping the remedy at hand. This remedy is so widely known and so altogether good that no one should hesitate about buying it in preference to any other. It is for sale by the Quimby Pharmacy, Palmer.

Tired, Nervous Mothers

Make Unhappy Homes—Their Condition Irritates Both Husband and Children—How Thousands of Mothers Have Been Saved From Nervous Prostration and Made Strong and Well.

Mrs. Chester Curry — Mrs. Chas. F. Brown

A nervous, irritable mother, often on the verge of hysterics, is unfit to care for children; it ruins a child's disposition and reacts upon herself. The trouble between children and their mothers too often is due to the fact that the mother has some female weakness, and she is entirely unfit to bear the strain upon her nerves that governing children involves; it is impossible for her to do anything calmly.

The ills of women act like a firebrand upon the nerves, consequently nine-tenths of the nervous prostration, nervous despondency, "the blues," sleeplessness, and nervous irritability of women arise from some derangement of the female organism

Do you experience fits of depression with restlessness, alternating with extreme irritability? Are your spirits easily affected, so that one minute you laugh, and the next minute you feel like crying?

Do you feel something like a ball rising in your throat and threatening to choke you; all the senses perverted, morbidly sensitive to light and sound; pain in the ovaries, and especially between the shoulders; bearing down pains; nervous dyspepsia, and almost continually cross and snappy?

If so, your nerves are in a shattered condition, and you are threatened with nervous prostration.

Proof is monumental that nothing in the world is better for nervous prostration than Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; thousands and thousands of women testify to this fact.

Mrs. Chester Curry, Leader of the Ladies' Symphony Orchestra, 42 Saratoga St., East Boston, Mass., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"For eight years I was troubled with extreme nervousness and hysteria brought on by irregularities. I could neither enjoy life nor sleep nights; I was very irritable, nervous and despondent.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended and proved to be the only remedy that helped me. I have daily improved in health until I am now strong and well, and all nervousness has disappeared."

Mrs. Charles F. Brown, Vice-President of the Mothers' Club, 21 Cedar Terrace, Hot Springs, Ark., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I dragged through nine years of miserable existence, worn out with pain and nervousness, until it seemed as though I should fly. I then noticed a statement of a woman troubled as I was, and the wonderful results she derived from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I decided to try it. I did so, and at the end of three months I was a different woman. My nervousness was all gone, I was no longer irritable, and my husband fell in love with me all over again."

Women should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the medicine that holds the record for the greatest number of actual cures of female ills, and take no substitute.

NO ONE OPPOSES LEASE.

Of S. and E. Electric Road to Springfield Company.

AN IMPROVED SERVICE IS PROMISED.

Hope That Springfield Fare May be Reduced Because of Lessened Expense.

The adjourned hearing on the petition of the Springfield and Eastern Street Railway Company for approval of its lease to the Springfield Street Railway Company took place yesterday afternoon before the railroad commissioners There was no opposition. James F Bacon, a member of the law firm which is looking after the Shaw interests, was present at the hearing, but had nothing to say The only spokesman was Mr. Ely, who said that out of the 3700 shares of stock in the Springfield and Eastern 2926 were represented at the meeting, and voted in favor of the lease. On the part of the Springfield company, he said, there were 20 000 shares of stock, and at the meeting two shares voted against leasing and 17 427 in favor. The lease is drawn to run for 25 years, and the Springfield company agrees to pay the stockholders of the Springfield and Eastern 2 per cent semi-annually. The Springfield company also agrees to pay the interest on the funded debt of $330 000, and to assume all the liabilities of the company. To the public it will give better service at the same rates of tariff The property will be kept up in better shape and more double tracking will be put in. The two properties combined could be operated more economically.

It was hoped by and by to take off one five-cent fare now charged on the trip from Palmer to Springfield. He rather thought it could be done, still it was a matter for the future to determine. The public was in favor of the consolidation, as they want both roads to be run by one company. There had always been more or less friction and several hearings before the commissioners on this account. Both companies had been put to expenditures in the past that could have been avoided if the two lines had been operated by one corporation. Absolutely unnecessary expenditures had been made, and friction, both in fact and in theory, had resulted from the dual management in the past. In conclusion he reiterated the statement that there was no opposition on the part of the public and enlarged upon this point in the language quoted above.

No opposition appeared at the hearing and the commissioners announced that they would look over the lease which was furnished them.

Died From Drinking Caustic Potash.

Alice, the 12-years-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leon Demers of Warren, died Sunday night after a long illness. About eight years ago, when a little girl four years old, she picked up a glass of caustic potash, which had been left on the table, and thinking it to be milk she drank it. The result was a terrible burning of the mouth and alimentary canal. The little girl was removed to a hospital in Worcester, where she remained for several years under treatment, and several operations were performed It was found necessary to introduce a tube directly into the stomach, through which four times a day she was fed with a mixture of milk and eggs. The food did not seem to nourish her growing body for the past several weeks and she had been failing. She leaves her parents and two brothers. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon at 2.

New Street Railway Company.

Articles of association for the formation of a new company to be known as the Ware and Brookfield street railway company have been filed with the secretary of state by Barnard & Gilbert of Boston, the purchasers of the Hampshire and Worcester street railway company. The company is to have an initial capitalization of $100,000 over and above all incumbrances amounting to about $60 000 additional. The superior court in Worcester has filed a decree confirming the recent auction sale by George S. Taft, the receiver, and the matter will go before the railroad commissioners for approval and an order for a hearing in the matter will be issued.

Diphthera in Ware.

Harvey, the eight-years-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Barbeau of Ware died from diphtheria Tuesday, after a five-days' illness Burial was Tuesday evening.

Two new cases of diphtheria in a mild form were reported yesterday. They are Fred, the six-years-old son of Arthur G. Moulton of West street, and Harvey, son of Louis Dusseault of Church street The board of health can assign no reason for the appearence of additional cases, but will continue quarantining all cases in a hope of stamping the epidemic out in time There are now six cases in quarantine.

LODGE SHOWS UP WHITNEY.

Appears to Have Different Views on Protection in Different Places.

Senator Lodge at Marlboro Wednesday evening paid his respects to Henry M. Whitney, Democratic candidate for lieutenant-governor, and gave the following as the latter's position at different times and places on the tariff question:

As the lieutenant-governorship appears to be regarded by the Democrats as the central point of this campaign, and as Mr. Whitney urges his own election to that office on the ground that he favors free raw materials his views upon this question assume importance which they would not otherwise possess. In 1892 Mr. Whitney, then as always a Democrat, supported Mr. Cleveland for election on a platform which demanded out-and-out free trade and declared a protective tariff unconstitutional. It is fair to suppose, therefore, that at that date Mr. Whitney was a free trader, for it is of course inconceivable that he should have supported in a campaign any great economic principle in which he did not sincerely believe. Four years later Mr. Whitney, being at that time president of the Dominion Coal Company, and largely interested in developing the coal mines of Nova Scotia, addressed a letter to the North Sydney Herald, which was published in that newspaper on the 5th of February, 1896 I am going to read you an extract from that letter, and I ask your attention to it because it has a very important bearing upon the evolution of Mr. Whitney's opinions in regard to this important question The letter is as follows:

"Second, I consider that the maintenance of the present duty on coal by Canada is of the most vital importance to the welfare and continued prosperity of the coal interests of Cape Breton and Nova Scotia. It is doubly so at the present time, when our company is making such extensive efforts to widen our markets by introducing the coal into the United States. Our only hope is that while we are making it nothing shall happen to interfere with our Canadian market "

"Thirdly, I am unwilling to believe that any political party (in Canada) could seriously propose at this time so mad and rash an act as to lesson the protection which Canada now wisely gives to the coal industry."

The statement is a very terse and vigorous argument for high protection in Canada, where Mr. Whitney was personally largely interested in a protected industry. I do not quote this for the purpose of showing that Mr. Whitney's Canadian opinion in 1896 was inconsistent with his American opinion as expressed by his vote of 1892 Inconsistency of opinion is not a matter of much importance, and moreover I think I can show that Mr. Whitney is fundamentally consistent. For several years past Mr. Whitney has developed a third set of opinions. He has been urging reciprocity, which is a protectionist policy, and at the present moment he is advocating free raw materials, which, if successful, could result only in the destruction of the protective system of the United States. Therefore we find that Mr. Whitney is a high protectionist in Canada and a free trader in some form in the United States. In Canada he believed that protection was important to the industry in which he was financially interested, but, as he points out in the letter which I have read, while he desired to hold the Canadian market by the aid of a Canadian protective tariff he wished also to get his coal into the market of the United States, and the tariff of the United States was to a certain extent a barrier to that very natural desire. He wanted a protective tariff to secure to him the market in which his coal was produced, and he wanted to get rid of the United States tariff which excluded his coal from the markets which he desired to enter. One is irresistibly reminded of Lowell's lines:

"Gineral C. is a dreffle smart man:
He's ben on all sides thet give places and pelf;
But consistency still wuz a part of his plan,—
He's ben true to one party,—an' that is himself."

I am far from saying Mr Whitney's motive was selfish, because I do not pretend to interpret any man's motives, but I do say that in these apparently fluctuating opinions we find a perfect consistency if we try them by the standard of Mr. Whitney's personal interest. It does not, however, follow that Mr. Whitney's personal interest is the interest of the United States or of the people of Massachusetts. Mr Whitney thought that it was for Canadian interests to protect their own market while they strove to introduce their product into the markets of another country. That has been the general policy of the United States. If as a general proposition it is sound for Canada why is it not sound for us? I do not speak of coal alone, because the removal of the duties on coal I do not think would have any effect whatever on the price of coal in the United States. I am taking the general principle which Mr Whitney laid down so clearly in his letter to a Nova Scotia newspaper, and I ask, why we should tear down our protective system to oblige foreign producers when it is just as obviously to our interests to keep our own markets for our own people as it was for the Canadians to do so according to Mr. Whitney's argument?

Team Smashup Near Warren.

A team occupied by Mr. and Mrs. William Delaney and daughter of Warren was run into late Sunday night by a team containing two Fiskdale men on the Fiskdale road about three miles from Warren. Mr. Delaney's carriage was entirely demolished, and the occupants were thrown out. Mrs. Delaney sustained bad bruises about the head. The occupants of the other team did not stop, but drove rapidly on. A telephone message was sent to the house of Henry Freeman, who lives a mile further up the road, and he had just time to push two wagons into the road, when the team came along. Both men asserted that they did not run over anyone, but were detained until Officer Cronin arrived. He took them back to Mr Delaney, where they confessed their guilt, and paid for the broken buggy.

Death of Belchertown's Oldest Resident.

Joshua Sibley, 99, the oldest resident of Belchertown, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. A. C. Underwood, Sunday night at 10 30. Mr. Sibley was born in Millington, Ct., but had lived in Belchertown for many years. He had enjoyed the best of health and had been wonderfully active until about two years ago. He is survived by two children, Mrs. Underwood, with whom he lived, and a son in New Jersey. The funeral was held at the home Tuesday afternoon at 1.30, and burial was in the Holyoke district cemetery.

Trout Fry to be Distributed.

The state board of fish and game commissioners have announced the annual distribution of brook trout from the state hatchery in Sutton. Names of applicants and the brooks to which the trout will be liberated hereabouts are as follows: Monson, H. D. Moulton, Conant brook; Palmer, A. E. Fitch, Thayer brook; Ludlow, H. C. Puffer, Higher brook; Belchertown, J. W. Jackson, Pudding Mill brook. Lake Lashaway in Brookfield is to be stocked with rainbow salmon and will be closed.

TWO GOLDEN WEDDINGS.

Ware and Warren Couples Celebrate 50th Anniversary.

SEVERAL SILVER WEDDINGS ALSO.

And One of 30 Years. Numerous October Weddings in and About The Town.

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse M. Buffington of Ware celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage in the parlors of the Congregational church in Ware Center Tuesday afternoon and evening The rooms were decorated with autumn leaves, evergreens and yellow chrysanthemums, with an arch bearing the dates 1855 1905 in gold at the top. Over the table in another room, where chocolate and cake were served, hung a large golden bell, from which were suspended golden streamers. A large number called during the afternoon and evening to offer their congratulations. Mr and Mrs. Buffington received numerous presents of china, cut glass and linen, and also about $125 in money, mostly in gold.

Jesse M. Buffington, the youngest of eight children of Royal Buffington, was born in Monson January 6, 1830 His father moved to Three Rivers in 1833. In 1877 Jesse Buffington moved to Ware, where he was engaged in the meat business until 1890, when he sold out his market to D. E. Clifford Previous to that he had a market in Spencer, Indian Orchard and Three Rivers Since 1890 Mr. Buffington has lived quietly as a farmer, and while he has never taken an active part in town affairs, he has a host of friends.

Mrs. Buffington, who was Marcia A. Snow, was the daughter of William and Angeline Snow. She was born in Ware February 16, 1835 Mr. and Mrs. Buffington were married in 1855 in Three Rivers by Rev. Mr. Barker, a Baptist clergyman. Six children were born, three of whom died in infancy. The three daughters living are Mrs Charles O Buffington and Mrs George F Brown of Ware, and Mrs. M. S. Titus of Northampton.

This is the third golden wedding anniversary in the Buffington family. Mr. Buffington's brother, Dwight, who also lives in Ware Center, celebrated his golden wedding three years ago, and Mr. and Mrs Benjamin Davis celebrated theirs a number of years ago, Mrs Davis being a sister of Dwight and Jesse Buffington.

Warren Golden Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. William Skerry celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at their home on High street in Warren Tuesday, about 50 relatives being present at the event. Mr. and Mrs. Skerry received their guests in their original wedding garments, and several of those present 50 years ago were in attendance Tuesday. The house was decorated with evergreens and cut flowers. A wedding dinner was served at 2 o'clock by Caterer F. A Keith of Warren.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Skerry have nearly reached four score years, and are in the best of health. Mr. Skerry was born in North Brookfield, and his wife, who was Miss Jennie Elizabeth Charles, was born in Spencer. After they were first married Mr. and Mrs. Skerry lived in Sturbridge, where Mr. Skerry was employed in the store of his father-in-law. Later he went to Philadelphia to work, but returned to Southbridge, where he conducted a shoe store for many years. He has resided in Warren 25 years.

25th Wedding Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar A. Squiers of Monson celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary at their home on Moulton Hill Saturday afternoon and evening. A turkey dinner was served to about 25 of the near neighbors and relatives at 2 o'clock, which was thoroughly enjoyed, and in the evening there were nearly 100 present. The evening was pleasantly spent in games and dancing, music being furnished by Mrs. A. H. Orcutt. Mr. and Mrs. Squiers received numerous presents, including a dinner set, silver butter dishes, fruit knives, pie knife, cake basket, silver shirt-waist set, pocketbook, cuff buttons, solid silver spoons and several liberal sums of money. Refreshments were served. Among those present from out of town were Mr. and Mrs George Walker of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. H. E Walker and Mr. and Mrs. W G. Walker of Northampton, Arthur Walker of Easthampton, Miss Winnie Desper of Worcester, Mr. and Mrs. Milo Gold, Ralph and Ruby Gold of West Stafford, Ct., and Mrs. Elizabeth Converse of Stafford Springs, Ct.

Thirtieth Wedding Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. George H Coney of Ware celebrated the 30th anniversary of their marriage at their home on Church street in Ware Monday evening from 7.30 to 10. Many friends called during the evening to offer their congratulations. The rooms were trimmed with cut flowers and potted plants. Ice cream and cake were served by Mrs. Arthur Chase and the Misses Law Off on Moose October 15. Good Sport Promised This Season.

October 15th the law goes off on Moose. The outlook this year for big hunting in the Maine woods is better than ever before. While some dissatisfaction is found with the late season for Moose hunting, still the weather conditions this fall are such as to satisfy everybody, for the month of October this year, with its beautiful Indian Summer weather, will prove an ideal month in the Maine woods for the sportsman who desires to couple with his hunting sport enjoyment of all nature offers to the vacationist in the fall of the year. Mt. Katahdin, famous as a feeding ground for moose, is especially prolific this season, as numbers of these animals have already been seen by the early hunters Down in the Aroostook County, moose are very plentiful, and in Washington County, in fact throughout all of northern Maine, these animals have been appearing lately in large numbers The supply of deer already shipped from the various railroad centres proves that Maine's record this year, in this species of game, will be a dandy; and the hunters who are in search of good bird shooting and small game report everything auspicious. The camps and hotels which care for the sportsmen have made preparation for entertaining the hundreds of hunters who yearly assemble in the Pine Tree State, and this business has grown to such proportions that the person who desires good hunting, and at the same time likes to take life easy, will find a suitable camp or hotel where he has nothing to worry about, not even his game. Registered guides, guns, ammunition, clothing, and all that sportsmen require, are furnished at some camps and hotels. It's up to you now to pick out your section. The Boston & Maine is ready to take good care of one or one thousand who desire to visit the Maine or New Brunswick hunting territories, and in order to facilitate your selection they have published a beautiful illustrated booklet which describes the gaming section of Northern New England and New Brunswick in detail The title of this booklet is "Fishing and Hunting," and it will be mailed by the General Passenger Department, Boston & Maine Railroad, Boston, to any address upon receipt of two cents in stamps.

Ware Boy Killed in the Philippines.

Word has been received in Ware of the death of Edward F. Hurley, 28, of Ware, who was killed in the Philippines July 18 in a skirmish with insurgents. Hurley enlisted five years ago last June in Worcester in the marines. After serving one term of three years, he re-enlisted for three more in the islands. This second term would have expired next June, and he intended to return to Ware then. Mr. Hurley's last letter to his Ware relatives was written at Olangro in the spring, and arrived in April. He stated that he was starting on an exploration trip and that he would be out of reach of the mail steamers. The news of his death was sent by the war department. He leaves a mother, Mrs. Bridget Hurley, and two sisters, Mrs. Thomas O'Connell and Katherine of Ware, and three brothers, Michael of Montville, Ct, James of Fitchburg and John of Gilbertville.

Round Trip Rates Reduced.

If you have occasion to visit the western country before the first of the year, now is your opportunity, because tickets will be on sale via the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, from Chicago on the first and third Tuesdays of each month, to various western destinations and return, good for 21 days, at 75 per cent of the one way fare. To other sections of the country, one fare plus $2 for the round-trip is charged.

If you are going West, write to us, and we will figure out the lowest combination possible, and give you advantage of it. Don't hesitate to ask for all the information necessary to make your trip pleasant. Tickets can be obtained from your local ticket agent, or from Geo. L. Williams, N. E. P. A., 368 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

PALMER NEWS.

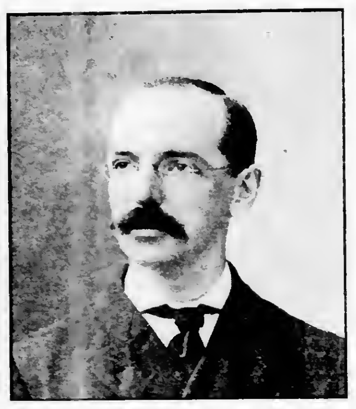
BAD SLASH ON MAN'S JAW.

Nine Stitches to Close Wound. Doesn't Know How Received.

John P. Manning is confined to his bed at his home on Maple street with nine stitches in a four-inch cut along the edge of his left jaw. The cut was made with a sharp instrument and went clear to the bone, leaving it bare. How it was received Mr. Manning professes not to know. He is employed at the Converse House, and left about 5 last evening to go home. About 7 he was found by William Goodes on Thorndike street near the high school building, his clothes covered with blood, and taken to his home. Dr. Fairing was summoned and cared for his injury. This morning Mr Manning states that he had reached a large tree nearly in front of his home when he was struck over the head with something, he knows not what, and remembers nothing more until he found himself in Mr Goodes' custody and near his home again. No theory as to how his injury was received is advanced.

General Manager Purinton to Leave.

Mr A. J. Purinton, who for the past five years has been general manager of the Springfield and Eastern Street Railway system and the Central Massachusetts Electric Company, has accepted an offer from the Fairmont and Clarksburg Traction Company of West Virginia, and will become general manager of that plant, with headquarters at Fairmont, West Virginia. This company has about 50 miles of electric road in operation and under process of construction, and is a growing company. It also has an electric lighting plant at Fairmont, but is soon to abandon that and construct a new 3000 horse-power station with steam turbine engines and everything of the latest and most approved type. Mr. Purinton does not know exactly when he will assume his new duties, but not for a little time at least. It is likely that his family will remain in Palmer through the winter. Mr. Purinton assumed charge of the Palmer companies in August, 1900, and during his stay in town has made a host of friends who will exceedingly regret that he is to leave. He has been greatly interested, though not often actively, in every movement for the advancement of the town, and last spring was elected a member of the school committee for the term of three years.



Hastings—Quimby.

A small number of relatives and near friends only gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge Hastings on North Main street in Palmer Tuesday noon to witness the marriage of their daughter, Phebe D., to Frank H. Quimby of Palmer. The ceremony was performed at 12.30 by the father of the groom, Rev. I. P Quimby of Malden, the double ring service being used. The bride and groom were unattended, and there was no music. The ceremony took place in the rear parlor, the back of which was banked with juniper trees and clematis, with asparagus ferns; the couple stood under a bell of green and white. Green and white were also used in the decoration of the other rooms with the exception of the dining room, where red oak leaves and chrysanthemums were used exclusively. The bride wore a gown of white peau de seine, trimmed with duchess lace, and carried bride roses; her only ornament was a diamond and pearl brooch, the gift of the groom. Barr of Springfield catered. Mr and Mrs Quimby left in the afternoon for Boston for a short wedding trip, and will be at home on Central street in Palmer after December 1st. The bride was the recipient of numerous gifts of silver and cut glass. She was born in Palmer and has always lived in the town; Mr Quimby came here a few years ago from Malden, and is the proprietor of the Quimby Pharmacy. Both young people are well known and liked by a large circle of friends.

Hearing on Insurance Claim.

The contested claim of Peter Nephew of Palmer Center against the German Insurance Company was held in the district court room Wednesday before William H Brainerd of Palmer, George H. Allen of Boston and Eugene B. Blake of Greenfield as auditors. Nephew's house and barn were burned early in the spring, and the insurance company refused to pay the loss claimed by him. Nephew carried insurance of $600 on the house, $40 on the barn, $800 on household furniture and $100 on contents of barn; he claimed a total loss on everything except the last item, on which he claimed $66. The principal contention of the insurance company was against the household goods claim, but the family proved every claim, showing that much of the property lost was comparatively new, and showing receipts for it. The claims were awarded in full, with the exception of the contents of the barn, on which $60 was allowed.

Who Owned It?

Some people standing on the north side of State street near Main were scared early yesterday afternoon by a big Winton touring car trying to travel on the sidewalk instead of in the street. The car, containing four people from up near Palmer, was going south on Main street, and by a sudden turn off Main to State street the auto skidded over the corner, and continued its course for 40 feet up State with two side wheels traveling on the sidewalk and two in the street. A few women tried to get hysterical, but the vehicle stopped about that time and prevented any further performance of this nature. The car was taken to a garage nearby, where the only damage, a bent axle, was fixed. The party returned home after this short delay.—Wednesday's Springfield Republican.

Advent Convention Next Week.

The Western district of the Massachusetts Advent Christian Conference will hold its annual meeting in the Palmer chapel Wednesday and Thursday of next week. The president, Elder L. F Richardson of Westfield, desires the meeting to take the form of a Pentecostal convention, and to this end business will be relegated to intermissions, while the regular sessions at 10, 2 and 7 each day will be given to devotional services for the deepening of spiritual life. Elders George Tyler of Bristol, Ct, W. A. Burch of Worcester, and Bro. Tourinllo of the Cape Verde Islands will be among the speakers.

Boy Badly Burned.

Peter, the seven-years-old son of Abraham Ditto of Pine street, was seriously scalded yesterday morning by his sister upsetting the teapot upon him before he was dressed. One side, from the neck to the knee, is a solid burn, that on the arm being the deepest. The surface is large enough to make the matter serious, but it is expected that the lad will recover. He was attended by Dr. Cheney.

Mrs. C. M Johnson of Belchertown, a former resident of Palmer, has been visiting friends in town this week.

The Woman's Tuesday Club will meet next Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. E. G. Hastings on North Main street.

Mrs. Harry Tafft spent Sunday and the first of the week with her mother, Mrs. S. A. Gardner on Central street.

The Palmer Woman's Club will meet next Friday afternoon with Mrs. C. F. Gresvenor on North Main street.

Mrs. A F. Adams of Adams has been the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Stebbins on South Main street.

The ladies of the Congregational church will serve a chicken-pie supper in the church vestry next Wednesday evening.

The bookings at the opera house include "Dora Thorne" for Nov. 7th, and the Kickapoo Medicine Company for the week of Nov. 13.

The annual ball of the Foresters will be held this evening in the opera house, with music by Flanagan's singing orchestra of Marlboro.

Miss Belle Ballantine, who left Palmer some time ago on account of ill health and is now with her sister in Natick, is greatly improved.

The directors of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society will hold a meeting at the Converse House at 8 o'clock next Monday evening.

Thomas Blanchard has returned from the House of Mercy hospital in Springfield, where he has been ill some time with typhoid fever.

The Ladies of Columbus will give a Hallowe'en party for members only in their rooms in the Commercial block next Tuesday evening.

Henry Lovett, who has been in the employ of C. E Fuller for the past 11 years, has left that place and is now at work for Frederick Thompson.

Superintendent of Schools Fuller has invited the teachers of the schools to a Hallowe'en party at his home on Thorndike street next Tuesday evening.

A new steam heating plant has been installed in Holden's block and the stores which have not previously been steam heated have been equipped with radiators.

J. F. Foley has sold his house on the corner of Park and Pleasant streets to the Misses Mary A, Katherine T, Annie E. and Bridget V. O'Connor, who will occupy it at once.

The many friends of Arthur J. Todd will be pleasantly surprised to learn of his marriage to Miss Mae A. Lally of South Boston, which took place August 14 at the Gate of Heaven church.

The Springfield Pomona Grange will meet with the Palmer Grange in Odd Fellows' Hall next Wednesday. The morning session will open at 10 30; the afternoon session at 2 is open to the public.

Cards have been received announcing the marriage of Dr. Byron Shanks and Miss Winifred Eleanor Pike on Saturday of last week at Braintree. Dr. Shanks will be remembered as living in Palmer as a boy.

Some of the young people have formed a new club, known as the "Jolly Six." They met for the first time Tuesday evening with Harry Munger on Pleasant street; this evening they will meet at the Converse House.

Mrs. F. F. Marcy and her sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Beebe of Monson, returned Monday from a visit with Mrs. W. E Breckenridge in New York. Mrs Breckenridge returned with them and is now visiting her brother in Monson.

The Richardson and Boynton Co. make and sell two furnaces to any other company's one; the reason is plain, because they make the best furnace on the market, and their prices are right. The E Brown Co are their agents for this vicinity.

The pulpit of St. Paul's Universalist church was occupied last Sunday morning by Rev. M Oakman Patton, recently pastor of the Congregational church. Among the large congregation which greeted Mr Patton were numerous of his recent parishioners

The relay race, which was to have been run Wednesday between the Palmer and Bondsville grammar schools, was postponed until this afternoon, when Thorndike and Ware also contested. There were also other contests, all on the agricultural park track.

The Sunshine Society will give a Hallowe'en party in the Congregational church this evening at 7 30, for the purpose of raising money for their Christmas wo . There will be a short entertainment, and sale of home-made candy. The usual Hallowe'en games will be played. A small admission fee will be charged.

The last meeting of the registrars of voters before the state election will be tomorrow, from noon until 10 o'clock at night, in the selectmen's room in the memorial building. The assessors will also be in session at the same time and place to assess any who may have been overlooked in the spring but who wish to vote.

The subject of the sermon at the Baptist church next Sunday morning will be "Nehemiah Avoiding Discussion;" Sunday school at 12; Y P. S. C E at 6; evening service at 7, followed by an address on the Anti-Saloon League of Massachusetts, by Hon. George W. Penniman. This will be a union meeting with the Congregational church.

The service at the Congregational church Sunday morning will be in the interests of the Anti-Saloon League, and the speaker will be Rev. H. A. Keck of Boston University, who has had six years' experience as a public speaker and minister. In the evening the church will unite with the Baptists in a similar service, at which the speaker will be Hon. George W Penniman.

A new rule regarding the high school pupils and their return home in the afternoon by electric car went into effect Wednesday. Heretofore it has been the habit of the pupils to make a break—the moment school was dismissed at 1 o'clock—for Main street and the car junction, the object being to get the choicest seats. Some were naturally better sprinters than others, and as a consequence a few got the car before it started while the balance caught it all along the line to Park street, necessitating numerous stops. By the new rule all pupils take the car at the school building, and do not leave the building until the car arrives

TANNERS ENDORSE GUILD.

The feeling of the leather men toward Lieutenant-Governor Guild in the present campaign is pretty forcibly illustrated by the following letter, received by the Republican state committee from the sheepskin tanners:

Boston, Mass., October 21, 1905

Republican State Committee,

Gentlemen:—We take this method, as tanners of sheepskins, to recognize the services done by the Republican candidate for Governor in behalf of the leather industry of this State.

By speech and pen, ever since hides were put on the dutiable list, Mr. Curtis Guild Jr has most vigorously urged their transference to the free list. Further, when by an ill-considered, arbitrary ruling of a poorly-informed Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, pickled sheepskins were transferred from the free to the dutiable list in defiance of the decisions of the courts, it was largely through his efforts that this decision was overruled, pickled skins restored to the free list, and the Washington official responsible for the decision displaced for a man of broader knowledge and fairer judgment.

We believe in judging a man by his record rather than by his promises, and judged by that standard no man in public life has done more for the development of the leather industry of Massachusetts than Mr. Guild

You are at entire liberty to make what use you please of this document.

Very truly yours,

Morrill Leather Co (Roland M. Baker Pres.), Foan Bros, J. F. Ingraham & Co, Michael Kelly, L. B. Southwick & George Clerk, J. M Lloyd, George & Barry Leather Co., National Wool & Leather Co (William B Revere Treas), A. B Clark Co. (R. H. Gowing Treas), Winslow Bros & Smith Co, A. F. Clapp & Co, George S Yeaton & Co, Schoellkopf & Co., P. R Gill, P Sim & Sons, Nathan H. Poor Leather Co.

If the Democrats of Palmer vote as they talk their party's candidate for lieutenant-governor will make a poor showing locally when the votes are counted. Not a single Democrat has been heard to express a favorable opinion of Mr. Whitney, while on the contrary there is open announcement that he will not only not be voted for, but that the ballots which would go to him as the party nominee will be cast for Mr. Draper. And it is certain that Palmer is not alone in this matter, for similar reports are heard from numerous localities.

HENRY M. WHITNEY has been forced off the lid on his legislative record. He tried to sit on it, but the people would not have it. From Essex to Cape Cod and back again the newspapers and the people are taking up this issue. It is a live one, and upon it Mr. Whitney is to be a dead one.

Nettie, the Newsgirl.

It is claimed that in the point of lavishness and superb scenic display, Gould and Freed's production of "Nettie, the Newsgirl," which appears at the Palmer opera house next Monday, is entitled to much praise. There are four acts in the play, the plot of which is laid in New York city, which affords an excellent opportunity for the scenic display mentioned. Among them are the new Pennsylvania railroad tunnel beneath the North River, the old boat house and docks on the East Side, the arriving and departing ferry boats, and the attempted murder in the small skiff almost under the Brooklyn bridge. The play is sure to please, for many bright interpolations are promised and several vaudeville features will be introduced. The company will be headed by Miss Isabelle Lowe, that diminutive little actress whom so many admirers have likened to the great Lotta in her early days

A Judicious Inquiry.

A well known traveling man who visits the drug trade says he has often heard druggists inquire of customers who asked for a cough medicine, whether it was wanted for a child or an adult, and if for a child they almost invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The reason for this is that they know there is no danger from it and that it always cures. There is not the least danger in giving it, and for coughs, colds and croup it is unsurpassed. GEO. FRED WILLIAMS CHARGES HENRY M. WHITNEY WITH POLITICAL CORRUPTION

Democratic Leader Declares Democratic Candidate for Lieut.-Gov. Unworthy the Suffrage of Democratic Voters

MR. WILLIAMS QUOTES THE SUPREME COURT ON MR. WHITNEY'S PUBLIC RECORD.

THE LETTER IS AS FOLLOWS:

To the Editor of The Herald:

I have addressed you a letter protesting against the nomination of Henry M. Whitney for the office of Lieutenant Governor. Mr. Whitney has answered in a letter to me personally. I prefer still to address myself to my party and the public, to whom alone is my responsibility.

I have clung to my party amid many disappointments, and do not wish to see it commit suicide with justifiable cause.

Mr. Josiah Quincy declares that Mr. Whitney was nominated with the understanding that I would bolt the nomination. Inasmuch as I had not made my position in the matter known to any one, it is clear that Mr. Quincy and his associates deliberately made the issue I now raise.

If our party, under false leadership, proposes to meet the public sentiment against political corruption by nominating for public office the foremost representative of such corruption, it deserves to lose honest men's support. My desire is to save our party from such leadership. The case seems not yet hopeless.

I charged Mr. Whitney with procuring the passage of an Elevated Railway charter by employing an enormous lobby, by securing the silence or assistance of the leading politicians with legal retainers, by influencing the nominations and elections of members of the legislature, by attempting to influence the appointment of the Street Railway committee, by expending from $33,000 to $53,000 and by buying off competitors for a charter.

Mr. Whitney denies none of these charges, and they were amply proved in the West End investigation. The above charges constitute corruption of the legislature as defined by the Courts.

I desire now to add that when a man employs agents to influence legislation, who are known, as some of his employees were, to be unprincipled and wicked men and places in their hands large sums of money, that man makes himself responsible for the bribery of legislators, which inevitably follows. The whole history of legislative corruption is covered by the employment of wicked tools by responsible men.

I maintain that our legislatures will be scandalized so long as such methods are permitted, and that to elect such men to public office is to place the public indorsement upon all the corruption which their employment of bad men and unlawful methods involves.

Mr. Whitney's answers to my charges are as follows: that,

First, my opposition to his measure was demagogical.

Second, I sought to give another party the right to build an elevated road.

Third, I tried to deprive the public of the blessings of his measure.

Fourth, he was justified in giving dinners to legislators and lobbying for their votes.

I fully realize that Mr. Whitney is attempting to turn public attention from his own misdeeds by questioning my motives in attacking him in the legislature.

I am not a candidate for office and my motives in 1890 are not important, but I choose none the less to have the truth known.

To take the answers seriatim, Mr. Whitney says,

First, he invited me to his office that he might explain his plans, and that "When I got your reply, I knew that I had to deal with a first-class demagogue."

The best answer to this statement is to publish the letter, and I ask the public judgment whether there is anything "demagogical" in it. Here it is:

"H. M. Whitney, Esq.,

"Dear Sir:—The fact that I have been unable until now to answer your courteous note of the 12th inst. is an answer to your question. I attend to legislative duties all day and crowd my law business into the short hours before and after the sessions, and in the evening.

"I cannot give any time to an inspection of the work of the West End Street Railway Company, neither would its perfect work touch the point which would affect my judgment in the granting of corporation charters."

This letter seems to me perfectly respectful and consistent with my duty as a legislator.

Two months before this time, the West End bill had been referred to the committee on Street Railways, "with instructions to hear the parties after such notice has been given as the committee shall direct." I thought then that Mr. Whitney's proper place was before the committee and not at his office privately soliciting legislators, but I refrained from this criticism.

Such methods had clearly been condemned by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, which after stating that the committee hearings give to adverse parties the opportunity "to meet face to face," uses these words "Common fairness requires that neither party shall be permitted to have secret consultations and exercise secret influences that are kept from the knowledge of the other party."

If I was a demagogue to refuse to meet Mr. Whitney in private, I have the excellent company of Mr. Justice Chapman, one of the foremost men who ever occupied our bench.

But indeed this cry of "demagogue" is the familiar resort of guilty men against their accusers. Tweed branded Mr. Tilden as a demagogue, the Standard Oil Company found the same fault in Henry D. Lloyd, when he published "Wealth vs. Commonwealth," and I doubt not Mr. McCall, of the New York Life, and Mr. McCurdy, of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, regard Mr. Hughes in the same light.

If to be a demagogue is to seek one's reward for popular service in the approbation of one's fellow-citizens, I must plead guilty.

Mr. Whitney acquits me of mercenary motives and thinks I was actuated by desire for notoriety. Yes, I was: namely, the notoriety of being the only man of several hundred who was willing to denounce Mr. Whitney's methods, to be followed by his spies, to pursue a righteous cause with no reward in sight, except the gratitude of a people, which stood defenceless against the unrighteous methods of Mr. Whitney in grabbing public rights for purposes of private gain.

Second, Mr. Whitney charges that I sought to give another party the right to build an elevated railway. His whole letter is filled with false statements indicating that I had other motives than the public good in my opposition to his bill. I was interested in no railway scheme whatever. The plain answer to this false statement is, that I voted against every elevated railroad bill which came up for consideration. I did this because I did not consider the public interests to be properly guarded, and this was my only objection to Mr. Whitney's bill.

Mr. Whitney's attempts to make me appear as the advocate of a competing scheme are absolutely baseless. How can I answer such unfounded charges except by denial and by reference to the records of the legislature?

It is also not true that I advocated competition among street railways. I merely opposed a monopoly without proper safeguards of the people's rights.

Third, Mr. Whitney complained that I tried to deprive the public of the blessings of his measure. Here Mr. Whitney is guilty of the most unpardonable misstatements.

He says first, that I tried to filch from the pockets of "the poor" an additional five cents every time they travelled over the road. This statement is absolutely false. On the contrary, I tried to clear up the dubious language of the West End Bill, in which free transfers were promised.

What makes this assertion of Mr. Whitney a monstrous piece of audacity is the fact that since that time year after year I have appeared before the legislative committee to compel the West End Street Railway Company to give free transfers to the people, and save "the poor" from the extortion of this five cents. Year after year, I have met Mr. Whitney's attorneys in triumphant opposition. I offered an order in the legislature to limit the issues of street railway stock to actual cash investments and not less than par value: this order failed. Mr. Whitney, in consolidating the street railways of Boston, loaded hundreds of thousands of dollars in watered stock upon the people of the State. "The pockets of the poor," which I have always defended against such exactions, have paid yearly enormous tribute upon such stock, which made him wealthy.

I exercised my best judgment in opposing Mr. Whitney's bill by legitimate amendments, and he cannot show a single amendment offered by me which was not in the public interest.

There were others who voted against this bill, such as William D. Sohier, Josiah Quincy, Willard Howland, Augustus Hemenway, Geo. Fox Tucker, J. Otis Wardwell, Michael J. McEttrick, Louis A. Cook, H. Torrey Cady, Frank W. Dallinger, William B. Durant, Judge John J. McDonough, Judge Edgar S. Taft, Edward W. Presho, Geo. N. Swallow, Edward B. Glascow, and 63 others.

Fourth, I now come to Mr. Whitney's justification of his lobbying methods, the worst which blot the annals of our Commonwealth. He says, "I freely admit giving the dinners, of employing counsel, and making use of the lobby; but it was to prevent the accomplishment of an infamous purpose, which was championed by you in violation of your oath." I leave the public to judge whether this may be an honest error or must be wilful misstatement. Mr. Whitney employed his first lobbyist in July, before I was nominated or ever considered for the legislature; he paid this lobbyist $5000 before I was sworn in as a member. Mr. Whitney bought out the Ames-Shepard opposition before I was elected to the legislature. His whole lobby was at its nefarious business before I knew there was a West End bill. He gave his dinners to the legislators before I had raised my voice in the legislature against his bill. How wanton is his attempt now to assert that all his sins were prompted by my opposition.

What I championed "in violation of my oath" I know not, unless it was my sworn duty to stand by voiceless while he corrupted my associates.

Mr. Whitney says that for 15 years he has waited and longed to bring before the public the real facts; this is indeed a long time to wait for the privilege of confessing his own guilt.

He justifies his employment of the lobby in express terms. He justifies his acts, as I have charged them. Let me quote what the Supreme Court of Massachusetts says of this: "The business of 'lobby members' is not to go fairly and openly before the committees—but to go secretly to the members and ply them with statements and arguments that the other side cannot openly meet, however erroneous they may be; and to bring illegitimate influences to bear upon them."

Mr. Whitney justifies his retainers to political leaders; the Supreme Court says: "If the 'lobby member' is selected because of his political or personal influence, it aggravates the wrong." Mr. Whitney justifies the buying out of competing petitioners. The Supreme Court says: "If his business is to unite various interests by means of projects that are called 'log-rolling,' it is still worse." Mr. Whitney justifies his private dining and wineing of legislators; the following language of our Supreme Court I commend not only to him, but to the Boston editor who asks, "Is hospitality a crime?"

The Supreme Court says "The practice of procuring members of the legislature to act under the influence of what they have eaten and drunk at houses of entertainment tends to render those of them who yield to such influences wholly unfit to act in such cases. They are disqualified from acting fairly towards interested parties or towards the public. The tendency and object of these influences are to obtain by corruption what it is supposed cannot be obtained fairly."

All these quotations from the Supreme Court may be found on page 159 of the sixth volume of Allen's reports.

In these matters I leave Mr. Whitney to reckon with our highest judicial tribunal and with the conscience of an honest people. If Mr. Whitney admitted his error and regretted it I should be the first to commend him, but it is commonly known that his pipe line bill was procured by the same unlawful methods. A vote for him, therefore, is a vote to confirm his repeated defiance of political honesty and legislative purity.

My exposure of legislative corruption is the proudest effort of my public life, and I am glad to have reviewed it here, even though I know Mr. Whitney's purpose to be to escape punishment at the bar of public opinion, by diverting attention from himself to the false charges which he desperately scatters through his letter.

I stand to-day as I stood then, to expose and denounce the methods of corruption, nor am I to be deterred because I shall soil my hands upon my opponent.

Monson News.

Academy Notes.

The class of 1908 have ordered their class pins, which will arrive in a few days.

Briggs and Miller are wearing new style hats, which are attracting much attention.

Miss Nye, '06, spent Sunday at her home in Stafford Springs, Ct.

Lino will meet next Friday evening and will carry out the following program: Recitations, English, F. Holloway; reading, Hanley; news items, Salisbury; debate, subject to be announced at the meeting.

The pictures of the relay team have arrived and were given out the first of the week.

The football team was defeated by Ware high Wednesday afternoon by the score of 5 to 0. This was Monson's first game of the season, and considering this fact, the team made a good showing. The experience which the Ware team has gained in former games this season told toward the end of the contest. Capt. Briggs of Monson was a "whole team" in himself Whenever called upon to carry the ball, he responded every time with a gain of five to ten yards. Miller also played a plucky game in the back field. For Ware the swiftness of their backs accounted for their score.

"The treat of the season" will take place to-night at the Academy chapel under the direction of the members of the senior class, when "A County Fair" will be given. This is something entirely new, and a large crowd is expected. Walking down the midway one will see a great many amusing scenes: The half man and half beast, "Ki Ki," the wonderful water drinker, the fortune tellers, fish ponds, picture gallery and side show. After the fair there will be a social and dance. The fair opens at 7.30.

Found Dead in Bed.

Mrs. Annie Paul, 56, was found dead in bed Monday morning at the home of her son, Dennis Paul, at South Monson, where she has been living. Although in poor health her death was entirely unexpected. Associate Medical Examiner Jackson viewed the body and pronounced the cause of death heart failure. She leaves two sons. The funeral was held from St. Patrick's church Wednesday morning at 9.30 o'clock, and burial was at Stafford, Ct.

An Episcopal service will be held in Workman Hall Sunday afternoon at 3 15 o'clock. Rev. C. E. Hill of Springfield will preach. The meeting will be in charge of the Ludlow mission. All are cordially invited.

Salvador Smiralgia has taken the contract to transport the pupils of the quarry district to the village schools. This work has been done in the past by Ralph Clifford. Mr. Smiralgia was the lowest bidder this year.

Quarantine has been removed from the residences of J. C. Bradway in the Pease district and Frank McKloski at South Monson, where there have been cases of diphtheria and the houses fumigated by the board of health.

A large delegation of Court Monson, Foresters of America, attended the Foresters' fair at Warren Tuesday night, going and returning to Palmer by steam train and returning to Monson from Palmer by special electric car.

Three new names were added to the voting list at the meeting of the board of registrars Tuesday evening. The next meeting, which will be the last, will be held in Memorial Hall to-morrow from 12 o'clock noon until 10 p m.

The Monson Social Club have elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, E. L. Wales; vice president, George H. Seymour; secretary, George E Wills; treasurer, Ernest Rees; board of directors, L. C. Flynt, N. A. Bugbee, N. P. Dempsey, Edward F. Cushman and M. F. Moore.

Rev. J. Frank Knotts of Boston, representing the Massachusetts Anti-Saloon League, will speak at the Methodist church Sunday morning. A representative of the league will speak at the Universalist church at the same time. In the evening there will be a union meeting in the Methodist church, at which Mr. Knotts will speak.

Marcus Keep, Woman's Relief Corps, celebrated their 14th anniversary in Grand Army hall Monday evening and invited the post and families, Sons of Veterans and families, and families of the Relief Corps members to help them out. There was a large attendance and a social evening, with whist, music, readings, etc., was enjoyed. Refreshments were served.

Nobert, Louise Ricard, Luke Shields, Howard D Rogers and Alice Swartch.

A petition was sent to the board of selectmen early in the week asking that the polls be opened election day at 5 45 in the morning, the custom being to open them at 9 o'clock. As there are 10 or more voters who work out of town and leave on the early car this change would be a great accommodation to them as it would also to many others who do not work in the village proper. At the meeting of the selectmen last night it was decided to make this change and the warrant will be posted accordingly.

Mrs. R. A. Grimston has returned from Boston and vicinity, where she has been visiting.

WARREN.

A west-bound freight was stopped suddenly a mile and a half east of the station about 4 30 Tuesday morning on account of a broken draw-bar and the sudden application of the air brakes. Two cars were thrown off the track, blocking for a time both tracks. The train crew succeeded in hauling them out of the way in a short time, so that the east-bound track was clear, and the wrecker arrived from Springfield about 7.30 Everything was in running order again at 10 o'clock.

Frederick Carroll, 21, of Fulton, N. Y., who has been working in the Sayles & Jenks woolen mill at Warren for about three months, was seriously injured Sunday evening. He was on North street, waiting for the 6 15 car on the Warren, Brookfield and Spencer line. Hearing the car approaching, he started to run over North street to Main. Owing to darkness, and being a stranger in that locality, he collided with the projecting portico over the entrance to the basement of Marcy's block on North street, which is occupied as a laundry. The contact rendered him unconscious. Charles Guilette, who saw him fall, hastened to his assistance, and with the aid of three others, carried him to his home, where he still remains in a serious condition.

WARE.

Death of Mrs. Daniel Spear.

Mrs. Lovisa Hartshorn, 83, widow of Daniel Spear, died Wednesday morning at her home on the corner of Prospect and Spring streets. The funeral will be held at her late home to-morrow afternoon at 2. Mrs. Spear was born in Vermont. When about 12 years old she was left an orphan, and she was taken into a family by the name of Clark. The family removed to Wisconsin soon after, and it was there that the marriage of Mr and Mrs. Spear took place in 1843 Mr. and Mrs. Spear returned to West Brookfield before the Civil War, in which Mr. Spear served two years. About 40 years ago the family removed to Ware, where Mr. Spear died 20 years ago Mrs. Spear is survived by five children, Mrs. C. H Rood, Mrs. Elizabeth McGrath and Harlie of Ware, Mrs. Althea Snow of Pittsburg, Pa, and Elwin of Worcester.

Automobile Destroyed by Fire.

A Knox touring car, owned by Frank W. Ruggles, was burned about midnight Tuesday. Mr Ruggles, accompanied by his brother Allie, John H. Storrs and William Launier, were coon hunting beyond Brookfield, and about midnight Mr. Ruggles went to his machine with a lantern, which he placed near the front of the auto. He then turned the front seat over for some purpose, when suddenly the machine became a mass of flames. It is probable that in some way the lantern and the gasoline together caused the fire, which could not be extinguished. The car, a double-cylinder of 16 horse power, was completely destroyed, with a loss placed at $1200. The machine was insured in the agency of Joseph Dumas Jr. The hunters were carried to Brookfield in another auto, and returned to Ware the next morning.

L. F. B. Turner of the Ware River News is spending a three-months' vacation with his brother, Arthur C Turner, in Riverside, Cal, stopping en route at Niagara Falls, Chicago, Ill., Denver and San Francisco.

Mrs. Thomas Pero, 72, died at her home on South street Sunday. Mrs. Pero was born in Keysville, N. Y, and was twice married. Her first husband, Abraham Legare, died over 30 years ago, and her second, Thomas Pero, five years ago. She leaves 11 children, five daughters and six sons. The funeral was held Tuesday morning in Mt. Carmel church.

Miss Helen J. Irwin gave her friends a surprise Saturday, when she announced the fact that she was married, and that her resignation as telegraph operator would take effect on November 1. She stated that she was married on June 29 to Martin McDonough of Boston, who has a position as wire chief for the Western Union Telegraph company. The marriage took place in Boston, Rev. Mr. Knott of the First Methodist Episcopal church performing the ceremony.

How to Cure Corns and Bunions.

First, soak the corn or bunion in warm water to soften it; then pare it down as closely as possible without drawing blood and apply Chamberlain's Pain Balm twice daily, rubbing vigorously for five minutes at each application. A corn plaster should be worn a few days to protect it from the shoe. As a general liniment for sprains, bruises, lameness and rheumatism, Pain Balm is unequaled. Mrs. George Taylor of Church street, Thorndike, Mass., two miles from Palmer, when interviewed recently, said: "Yes, I gave a testimonial to Doan's Kidney Pills some three years ago last April and all I can add to-day, is that my confidence in them has not been shaken in the least. When I commenced their use I could not turn over in bed, my back was so lame and sore. After I had taken them two days I could turn over and rest with some degree of pleasure. Besides the above symptoms I had distressing pains in my head. I got Doan's Kidney Pills at LeGro's drug store and used them and can truthfully say I never tried anything that did me half as much good."

CHI-NAMEL
CHI-NAMEL

The Chinese Varnish Made to Walk Upon

MADE IN ALL COLORS
Cherry. Mahogany. Oak. Natural. Etc

For Floors, Bar Tops, Furniture and General Household Use.

Come to our store and get a sample of Chi-Namel applied to wood. Take it home and test it

First. Strike the wood sample a heavy blow with a hammer, and note that while the wood may be indented a quarter of an inch, the varnish has not marred or cracked. This proves that Chi-Namel is very elastic

Second. Place the wood sample in a tea kettle, and note that boiling water does not turn it white. This proves that Chi-namel contains no rosin

Third. Apply whiskey This proves that Chi-Namel will stand upon bar tops.

Fourth. Allow a can of the varnish to stand open over night, and note that there is no evaporation. This proves that Chi-Namel contains no benzine.

Fifth. Spread varnish over flat surface, and brush in every direction, and note "self levelling" effect. This proves that all brush marks disappear, and the result will be pleasing no matter how inexperienced the applier may be.

Old floors can be made to look like new hard wood.

No need to buy new furniture.

Chi-Namel will make old furniture look BETTER than new furniture.

Take no substitute. We invite you to prove to yourself there is NOTHING "just as good as Chi-Namel."

FINE PATTERN TABLE CLOTHS

At 25 Per Cent Under Landing Cost.

This collection embraces the choicest designs and qualities of the leading Scotch, Irish and German makers. It is the result of six months' search of the linen markets of the Old World by our foreign representative. He brings them over to take our orders for spring, and after he is through with them, turns them over to some one of the ten Syndicate houses to dispose of. This year we are the fortunate house to get them. In the lot there are Over Five Hundred Cloths---No Two Alike.

Each cloth is designed in a complete pattern, with borders all around. In the extraordinary variety of patterns, all the new ideas brought out for next season are represented, among them being the new circular and square designs with open borders. The collection having served its purpose as samples, comes to us at a big discount, so that, marking them at a very small margin of profit we are able to sell them at 25 per cent less than they can be landed in this country for. The sizes are 2 by 2½, 2 by 3, 2¼ by 2¼, 2½ by 2½ and 2½ by 3 yards. There is a wide range of prices, at almost anywhere between 95c and $12.50 each. H. M. Whitney's Methods

"I Freely Admit Giving the Dinners, of employing counsel and making use of the lobby, but it was to prevent the accomplishment of an infamous purpose which was championed by you in violation of your oath."

—Henry M. Whitney in his reply to George Fred Williams.

EX-GOV. WILLIAM E. RUSSELL,

DEMOCRAT,

Condemned the Whitney Methods

In his speech at Lynn, Oct. 31, 1890, Hon. William E. Russell said:

"In my opinion that measure has great merit. It meets the just demand of the community for quicker and better transit. It is a practical solution by able and responsible men of a difficult problem, and it will promote the convenience of the public; but if I had been Governor of this Commonwealth, I would, under the circumstances disclosed by the investigation, have vetoed that bill as quickly as I could have put pen to paper.

"FOR I HOLD THAT IT IS FAR MORE IMPORTANT TO GUARD SACREDLY THE PURITY OF LEGISLATION AND TO REBUKE THE LOBBY THAN THAT ANY MEASURE OF MERIT SHOULD BE HASTENED IN ITS PASSAGE. I HOLD THAT ONE OF THE HIGHEST DUTIES OF THE GOVERNOR OF THE COMMONWEALTH IS TO PROTECT ITS FAIR NAME FROM LEGISLATIVE SCANDAL AND TO PROTECT THE PEOPLE FROM THE IMPROPER CONTROL OF LEGISLATION BY SECRET INFLUENCES."

The Supreme Court

OF MASS.

Condemned the Whitney Methods

In a ruling of the supreme court (6—Allen 193) the law was laid down that:

"THE PRACTICE OF PROCURING MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE TO ACT UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF WHAT THEY HAVE EATEN AND DRUNK AT HOUSES OF ENTERTAINMENT TENDS TO RENDER THOSE OF THEM WHO YIELD TO SUCH INFLUENCES WHOLLY UNFIT TO ACT IN SUCH CASES.

"They are disqualified from acting fairly toward interested parties, or toward the public.

"THE TENDENCY AND OBJECT OF THESE INFLUENCES ARE TO OBTAIN BY CORRUPTION WHAT IT IS SUPPOSED CANNOT BE OBTAINED FAIRLY."

Will Massachusetts now endorse the man who boldly admits that he employs these methods?

The Republican State Committee, Thomas Talbot, Chairman, William M Flanders Secretary

DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY

Breaks no Hearts, Excuses no Crimes.

Dr. David Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is not a disguised enemy of the human race; where it cannot help, it does not harm. It is composed of vegetable ingredients and does not heat or inflame the blood but cools and purifies it. In all cases of Kidney troubles, Liver complaints, Constipation of the Bowels, and the delicate derangements which afflict women, the action of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is beyond praise. Thousands of grateful people voluntarily testify to this, in letters to Dr. Kennedy; and with a warmth and fullness of words which mere business certificates never possess. It makes no drunkards—excuses no crimes—breaks no hearts. In its coming there is hope, and in its wings there is healing. We challenge a trial and are confident of the result. Your druggist has it. ONE DOLLAR a Bottle. Bear in mind the name and address: Dr. David KENNEDY, Rondout, New York.

A Family Article.

It was in a large public school. "Mary, you must throw away that chewing gum I cannot stand it any longer!" exclaimed the teacher to a little ragged, dark skinned girl of foreign extraction.

The chewing ceased. A short time afterward, however, Mary with thoughts intent upon something else, forgot, and the chewing began vigorously again.

"Mary, didn't I tell you to throw away your chewing gum? Bring it to me!"

Mary hesitatingly started for the desk, but as she reached it burst out sobbing

"Please ma'am, it belongs to Aunt Hattie, and if I don't give it back to her to-night she'll lick me."—Judge

THE CHANGE OF LIFE

INTELLIGENT WOMEN PREPARE

Dangers and Pain of This Critical Period Avoided by the Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mrs A E G Hyland

How many women realize that the most critical period in a woman's existence is the change of life, and that the anxiety felt by women as this time draws near is not without reason?

If her system is in a deranged condition, or she is predisposed to apoplexy or congestion of any organ, it is at this time likely to become active and, with a host of nervous irritations, make life a burden.

At this time, also, cancers and tumors are more liable to begin their destructive work. Such warning symptoms as a sense of suffocation, hot flashes, dizziness, headache, dread of impending evil, sounds in the ears, timidity, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude are promptly heeded by intelligent women who are approaching the period of life when woman's great change may be expected.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the world's greatest remedy for women at this trying period, and may be relied upon to overcome all distressing symptoms and carry them safely through to a healthy and happy old age.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound invigorates and strengthens the female organism, and builds up the weakened nervous system as no other medicine can.

Mrs A. E. G. Hyland, of Chestertown, Md., in a letter to Mrs. Pinkham, says:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I had been suffering with falling of the womb for years and was passing through the change of life. My womb was badly swollen. I had a good deal of soreness, dizzy spells, headaches, and was very nervous. I wrote you for advice and commenced treatment with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as you directed, and I am happy to say that all those distressing symptoms left me, and I have passed safely through the change of life a well woman."

For special advice regarding this important period women are invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham for advice. It is free and always helpful.

Some Seasonable Advice.

It may be a piece of superfluous advice to urge people at this season of the year to lay in a supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is almost sure to be needed before winter is over, and much more prompt and satisfactory results are obtained when taken as soon as a cold is contracted and before it has become settled in the system, which can only be done by keeping the remedy at hand. This remedy is so widely known and so altogether good that no one should hesitate about buying it in preference to any other It is for sale by the Quimby Pharmacy, Palmer.

NITRO GLYCERINE USED.

In Attempt to Blow Open Monson Post Office Vault.

TWO CHARGES USED INEFFECTUALLY.

Only Outer Casing of Door Damaged. Third Explosion Injures Lock Expert.

A bold but unsuccessful attempt to burglarize the vault in the post office in Monson was made early last Saturday morning, though little damage was done beyond partially wrecking the vault door, in which two charges of nitro glycerine were exploded.

The blacksmith shop of Lorenzo Hutchinson on Main street was first entered by a rear window, and a sledge hammer, chisels, bit and bitstock, iron bars, etc., with which to work in the post office, were taken. These were left in the office and later identified by Mr. Hutchinson. At the post office an entrance was effected by prying the heavy iron grating from the rear window; a north window was first pried up, but there were heavy iron doors on the inside and no further progress could be made there. Once in the building the burglars turned their attention to the vault. The knob operating the combination lock was knocked off and nitro glycerine poured in the hole; this was covered with soap and exploded, but with no satisfactory results to the operators. Another charge was tried but this also failed to bring results, the only damage being to the outer plate of the vault door, which was cracked open and bulged out. The glass on the time lock was broken, but the lock itself seems to be all right. The indications are that after the second explosion the burglars were either frightened away or else became discouraged at the lack of results and gave it up as a bad job.

So far as known, the only ones who heard the explosions are E. D Cushman and Mr. Rees. The building occupied by the post office stands on the corner of Main and Washington streets, opposite the Cushman Hall dormitory of Monson Academy. Across Washington street are the grounds and house of Mr. Cushman, who heard the noise about 1.30 and turned on the electric lights in several rooms, thinking someone might be attempting to enter his house; as all was quiet he returned to bed. On the other side of the building is the Heimann & Lichten straw shop, and next to that the house occupied by Mr. Rees. He also heard the explosions but attributed them to torpedoes on the railroad track in the rear of Cushman Hall, as many are used in that vicinity. Michael Kennedy, the night watchman at the straw shop, did not hear the explosions but was out on the steps about 1 o'clock and again at 2, which would seem to indicate that the burglars kept tabs on him and made their explosions while he was making his rounds of the shop.

The vault which so successfully withstood the efforts to crack it is the same one which was used for many years by the Monson Savings Bank when it occupied the building, and in those days was considered one of the strongest in the state. This probably was not known to the burglars, who very likely expected to find an ordinary safe such as is usually used in country post offices. The vault is used by Postmaster Seymour for the keeping of stamps and small sums of money, the larger amounts being taken the National Bank for safe keeping. There was about the usual stock of stamps in the vault, and a few hundred dollars in money, enough to have made a fair-sized haul had they succeeded in forcing an entrance.

The discovery that the office had been broken into was made when Assistant Postmaster Rees went to open up early Saturday morning. He at once notified Postmaster Seymour, who telephoned to Inspector Hinman of Springfield; the authorities at Boston and Washington were also notified. Inspector Hinman came to Monson in the morning, and a couple of lock experts arrived from Worcester at noon. The latter went to work at once on the door of the vault, but did not succeed in getting it open until Monday night, as the heavy door, weighing half a ton, had to be forced out and the bolts removed before it could be opened. While at work Monday afternoon one of the men was using a chisel under the door when there was another explosion of nitro glycerine, which filled the hands of one of the men with fine pieces of iron and steel, and inflicted several cuts. His wounds were dressed by Dr E. W. Capen, and will probably not prove serious. This explosion showed that a third charge had probably been prepared but not set off, either because the burglars were frightened away or because they concluded further work would be useless.

It was learned Saturday morning that when the burglars left town they took a team belonging to Ralph Tucker, which was standing in front of George C Flynt's house on High street, where Mr. and Mrs. Tucker were calling. Mr. Tucker missed the team but supposed that the horse had in some way gotten loose and wandered home or elsewhere, and was very much surprised to learn Saturday morning that his horse had been stolen and had been found in the woods near St. Michael's cemetery in Springfield. Inspector Boyle called up W. N Flynt & Sons' store Saturday morning, as a whip with that firm's name was in the wagon. The horse was in good condition The team was claimed by its owner later in the day and brought back home.

North Belchertown Boy Commits Suicide.

Burton Shaw LaPlante, 13, hanged himself Thursday evening of last week in the barn of his home in North Belchertown. He placed a halter over a beam and making a noose, placed his feet on a meal box and in all probability his foot slipped, thus causing his death by strangulation, as the neck was not broken. It is stated by Medical Examiner Dr. George F Thomson that the word gallows had been used during the school session, and as the boy was not moody or disheartened in any way, it is likely that he was curiously inclined to test the hanging, but did not intend to take his own life.

A Model Mill Town Is Hopedale, Mass.

Home of the Drapers. Labor There is Well Employed and Cared for by the Great Corporation Founding It.

In a political campaign the minds of the people are apt to be diverted by many issues. Candidates are certain to pose before the people as their special friends, but there is certainly to be noticed a disparity between the theories and preaching of one set of candidates and the practice of another.

Eben S. Draper, who is a candidate for lieutenant-governor on the Republican ticket this fall, probably has never performed anything along the line of welfare work for his employes for the sake of the political capital he could make out of it, and so it may fairly be claimed that whatever he may have done in this direction was prompted by his regard for the comfort and convenience of the people who were in his employ.

from industrial controversies, there having been no strikes at the Draper company works in the forty years of their operation. There never is occasion for prolonged misunderstandings, as the men are perfectly free to call upon the management whenever they have questions of mutual concern to bring up, knowing that their claims will receive due consideration. But wages and factory conditions, predominating as may be their influence, are only contributing factors in the life of this exceptional manufacturing community. The same consideration that is displayed in the construction of the factory buildings to obtain wholesome conditions for the employes is shown in the provisions for their care outside the factory. They have been provided for at the least possible cost to themselves.

A Corporation House Occupied by Employes.

Hopedale, the mill town so long the seat of the extensive mill interests of the Draper family, has been termed the model mill community of the world, and so intelligence regarding it becomes of interest outside any political bearing it may have at this time.

The impression that one gets of the people of Hopedale, Mass., is that they are a prosperous, homeloving and virtuous class, so far removed from the unassuming and commonplace of ordinary factory-town populations as almost to conceal their true social and economical standing. They have had better opportunities than most people in the trade and have used them to full advantage: one looks in vain among them for the signs of want and misery usually found in large manufacturing communities, and the observing mind soon comes to the logical conclusions.

In presenting the social conditions pre-

A moderately elevated slope which has numerous swells and hollows constitutes the residential centre of the town. Nature provided much of the picturesqueness which lends charm to the place, and adjacent territory is agreeably diversified by dwarf woodland, cultivated fields, level uplands and elegant estates. But what strikes the eye with special force is the uniform excellence of the houses and the high tone of their surroundings. These houses are owned by the Draper company and occupied by its employes; yet, as may be seen from accompanying illustrations, their architecture and dimensions place them well within the conventional class of residences for business men or persons of professional pursuits. The company erects anywhere from five to fifty of this style of houses every year and rents them to its employes for from $2 50 to $3.62 per week, inclusive of water and maintenance. Some vailing among the working people of Hopedale the use of the superlative would be justified, in fact, is almost necessary for a conscientious adherence to the unbiased truth, because the little town has gained national reputation for its exemplary shop and housing conditions. By an accomplished English writer they are described as "America's best."

As the general welfare of any town is due to its industries, allusion is made here to the fact that the sole industrial enterprise in Hopedale is the Draper company, which manufactures textile machinery. This concern has developed rapidly during the forty years of its existence and the town has grown up with it. General William F. Draper is its president and George A Draper is treasurer; the agent is Eben S. Draper, the present candidate for the nomination for Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts.

of the houses built a few years ago are a little less imposing and rent as low as $1.75 per week. Moreover the company gives cash prizes aggregating $375 per year for the best kept lawns and gardens, which proves a most excellent incentive to conscientious care-taking, and the results clearly justify the efforts.

Every home presents an attractive appearance. Corporation houses and private houses alike reveal a quickened spirit of domestic pride, seldom observed to that degree in any community of laboring people. All the new houses are two and one-half stories high, have broad piazzas, lawns and back yards. The double houses, which are in the majority, are divided vertically, giving each family the use of the several floors. No less than 15 styles of architecture are exemplified in the corporation houses, each showing due regard for taste and comfort. Young trees and Rear View of House on Bancroft Park Occupied by Employes.

What might be termed the "Draper influence," which frequently is emphasized by substantial moves for social uplift, is reflected in every section of the town. The whole town is an example of prosperity in which honest plainness knows how to live. Here is a manufacturing town in which the head of the family bows to none of those humiliating necessities that in other places send so many wives and children out of their homes to aid a handicapped struggle for honor and independence. With his own hand he provides for what the household needs.

As a noteworthy factor in his earning capacity must be mentioned first of all the auspicious circumstances that he is as well paid as any man in the country doing the same kind of work, and always is on good terms with his employer. Perhaps the most striking evidence of this is the freedom flower beds are planted in measured distances on the low graded lawns; wide streets, always neat and clean, and lighted by electricity, wind in among the houses in serpentine fashion. All conditions combine to raise the town above the gloom and monotony which usually greet the eye in manufacturing towns.

As alluded to earlier in this article, all it costs the shop help (and few others are admitted) to rent these corporation houses is from $1.75 to $3 62 per week. Hardly less comfortably housed are some of the employes who live in Milford, the adjoining town. Probably 800 of the 2500 Draper employes live there. When they began to settle down in that township rents went up; to protect them against this advance, the Draper company bought a tract of

WOMAN BURNED TO DEATH.

Was Alone in the House at Time Of the Accident.

DEATH ENSUED ALMOST IMMEDIATELY

Was Nearly Blind. Stove Supposed to Have Blazed Up and Caught Her Clothing.

Mrs. Catherine Twohig, 57, wife of Patrick Twohig, was burned to death at her home in Hampden Monday morning.

Mrs. Twohig was alone at the house at the time of the accident, her husband being in the barn a short distance away Bert Corey, clerk in J. L Gottshe's grocery store, heard screams coming from the house and rushing in found Mrs. Twohig standing near the stove in the kitchen with her clothing all in flames. He caught up a shawl and rolled it around the woman, partly putting out the flames. Mr. Twohig reached the house soon after Mr. Corey had wrapped the shawl around his wife, who being unable to stand the suffering fell unconscious to the floor. A crowd had gathered in the house by this time and the fire was extinguished Dr. H Warner was quickly summoned, but Mrs Twohig was dead about 15 minutes before he arrived. The body was so badly burned that it was beyond recognition.

The cause of the accident is unknown, but it is thought, from the evidence gained by investigating the condition of the room, that Mrs. Twohig, who was partially blind, had lifted one of the lids from the stove and placed some papers within, which blazed up and set fire to her clothing.

Mrs. Twohig, who was an old resident of Hampden, had a large circle of friends who regret her untimely death. She is survived by her husband and four children, Daniel J. Twohig of Springfield, Mrs. George Wells of Hampden, Matthew Cunningham of Haydenville and Miss Josie Twohig of Indian Orchard.

EMBEZZLER IS NABBED.

Ware Express Driver, Short in Accounts, Caught in Beverly.

Louis A Plouff of Ware, the driver of the American Express Company, who disappeared about ten days ago and was short in his accounts, was arrested in Beverly Monday and brought back to Ware by F. A. Lobstein of New York city, chief detective for the express company east of Buffalo, accompanied by H F. Millard of Springfield, a route inspector.

Plouff made no attempt to deny his guilt, and could not state exactly how much he had taken in all As the amount alleged to have been extracted exceeded $100, although less than $105, Plouff was bound over to the December term of the superior court. Bonds were fixed at $1000

After his disappearance, Plouff was first traced to Quincy, but the officers missed their man in that town by a few days. A clew was obtained leading to Franklin Falls, N. H., but here again the officers were too late and returned to Ware for a second time. Plouff was then located in Lynn and traced to Beverly, where he went to work Monday morning with the United States Machinery Company.

Receivers Appointed.

Daniel E Webster of Springfield and George F. Brooks of Worcester were appointed at Worcester Monday permanent receivers of the Torkelson Manufacturing Company at Warren. Bonds were fixed at $10,000 each. The receivers were authorized to take charge of all the property of the company and to handle all the money, etc., until such time as the property can be sold.

Loses Leg by Electrics.

Peter Kupiec, 35, was struck by a trolley car on the Warren, Brookfield and Spencer railway about 10 45 Saturday night. His left leg was broken in two places and the foot was badly crushed. It was found necessary to amputate the left leg below the knee and he was removed to the state hospital at Tewksbury Monday.

NITRO GLYCERINE USED.

In Attempt to Blow Open Monson Post Office Vault.

TWO CHARGES USED INEFFECTUALLY.

Only Outer Casing of Door Damaged. Third Explosion Injures Lock Expert.

A bold but unsuccessful attempt to burglarize the vault in the post office in Monson was made early last Saturday morning, though little damage was done beyond partially wrecking the vault door, in which two charges of nitro glycerine were exploded.

The blacksmith shop of Lorenzo Hutchinson on Main street was first entered by a rear window, and a sledge hammer, chisels, bit and bitstock, iron bars, etc., with which to work in the post office, were taken. These were left in the office and later identified by Mr. Hutchinson. At the post office an entrance was effected by prying the heavy iron grating from the rear window; a north window was first pried up, but there were heavy iron doors on the inside and no further progress could be made there Once in the building the burglars turned their attention to the vault. The knob operating the combination lock was knocked off and nitro glycerine poured in the hole; this was covered with soap and exploded, but with no satisfactory results to the operators. Another charge was tried but this also failed to bring results, the only damage being to the outer plate of the vault door, which was cracked open and bulged out. The glass on the time lock was broken, but the lock itself seems to be all right. The indications are that after the second explosion the burglars were either frightened away or else became discouraged at the lack of results and gave it up as a bad job.

So far as known, the only ones who heard the explosions are E. D Cushman and Mr. Rees. The building occupied by the post office stands on the corner of Main and Washington streets, opposite the Cushman Hall dormitory of Monson Academy. Across Washington street are the grounds and house of Mr. Cushman, who heard the noise about 1.30 and turned on the electric lights in several rooms, thinking someone might be attempting to enter his house; as all was quiet he returned to bed. On the other side of the building is the Heimann & Lichten straw shop, and next to that the house occupied by Mr. Rees. He also heard the explosions but attributed them to torpedoes on the railroad track in the rear of Cushman Hall, as many are used in that vicinity. Michael Kennedy, the night watchman at the straw shop, did not hear the explosions but was out on the steps about 1 o'clock and again at 2, which would seem to indicate that the burglars kept tabs on him and made their explosions while he was making his rounds of the shop.

The vault which so successfully withstood the efforts to crack it is the same one which was used for many years by the Monson Savings Bank when it occupied the building, and in those days was considered one of the strongest in the state. This probably was not known to the burglars, who very likely expected to find an ordinary safe such as is usually used in country post offices. The vault is used by Postmaster Seymour for the keeping of stamps and small sums of money, the larger amounts being taken the National Bank for safe keeping. There was about the usual stock of stamps in the vault, and a few hundred dollars in money, enough to have made a fair-sized haul had they succeeded in forcing an entrance.

The discovery that the office had been broken into was made when Assistant Postmaster Rees went to open up early Saturday morning. He at once notified Postmaster Seymour, who telephoned to Inspector Hinman of Springfield; the authorities at Boston and Washington were also notified. Inspector Hinman came to Monson in the morning, and a couple of lock experts arrived from Worcester at noon. The latter went to work at once on the door of the vault, but did not succeed in getting it open until Monday night, as the heavy door, weighing half a ton, had to be forced out and the bolts removed before it could be opened. While at work Monday afternoon one of the men was using a chisel under the door when there was another explosion of nitro glycerine, which filled the hands of one of the men with fine pieces of iron and steel, and inflicted several cuts. His wounds were dressed by Dr E. W. Capen, and will probably not prove serious. This explosion showed that a third charge had probably been prepared but not set off, either because the burglars were frightened away or because they concluded further work would be useless.

It was learned Saturday morning that when the burglars left town they took a team belonging to Ralph Tucker, which was standing in front of George C Flynt's house on High street, where Mr. and Mrs. Tucker were calling. Mr. Tucker missed the team but supposed that the horse had in some way gotten loose and wandered home or elsewhere, and was very much surprised to learn Saturday morning that his horse had been stolen and had been found in the woods near St. Michael's cemetery in Springfield. Inspector Boyle called up W. N Flynt & Sons' store Saturday morning, as a whip with that firm's name was in the wagon. The horse was in good condition The team was claimed by its owner later in the day and brought back home.

North Belchertown Boy Commits Suicide.

Burton Shaw LaPlante, 13, hanged himself Thursday evening of last week in the barn of his home in North Belchertown. He placed a halter over a beam and making a noose, placed his feet on a meal box and in all probability his foot slipped, thus causing his death by strangulation, as the neck was not broken. It is stated by Medical Examiner Dr. George F Thomson that the word gallows had been used during the school session, and as the boy was not moody or disheartened in any way, it is likely that he was curiously inclined to test the hanging, but did not intend to take his own life.

A Model Mill Town Is Hopedale, Mass.

Home of the Drapers. Labor There is Well Employed and Cared for by the Great Corporation Founding It.

In a political campaign the minds of the people are apt to be diverted by many issues. Candidates are certain to pose before the people as their special friends, but there is certainly to be noticed a disparity between the theories and preaching of one set of candidates and the practice of another.

Eben S. Draper, who is a candidate for lieutenant-governor on the Republican ticket this fall, probably has never performed anything along the line of welfare work for his employes for the sake of the political capital he could make out of it, and so it may fairly be claimed that whatever he may have done in this direction was prompted by his regard for the comfort and convenience of the people who were in his employ.

A Corporation House Occupied by Employes.

Hopedale, the mill town so long the seat of the extensive mill interests of the Draper family, has been termed the model mill community of the world, and so intelligence regarding it becomes of interest outside any political bearing it may have at this time.

The impression that one gets of the people of Hopedale, Mass., is that they are a prosperous, homeloving and virtuous class, so far removed from the unassuming and commonplace of ordinary factory-town populations as almost to conceal their true social and economical standing. They have had better opportunities than most people in the trade and have used them to full advantage: one looks in vain among them for the signs of want and misery usually found in large manufacturing communities, and the observing mind soon comes to the logical conclusions.

In presenting the social conditions prevailing among the working people of Hopedale the use of the superlative would be justified, in fact, is almost necessary for a conscientious adherence to the unbiased truth, because the little town has gained national reputation for its exemplary shop and housing conditions. By an accomplished English writer they are described as "America's best."

As the general welfare of any town is due to its industries, allusion is made here to the fact that the sole industrial enterprise in Hopedale is the Draper company, which manufactures textile machinery. This concern has developed rapidly during the forty years of its existence and the town has grown up with it. General William F. Draper is its president and George A Draper is treasurer; the agent is Eben S. Draper, the present candidate for the nomination for Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts.

Front View of the Draper Company Houses on Bancroft Park, Occupied by Employes.

Rear View of House on Bancroft Park Occupied by Employes.

What might be termed the "Draper influence," which frequently is emphasized by substantial moves for social uplift, is reflected in every section of the town. The whole town is an example of prosperity in which honest plainness knows how to live. Here is a manufacturing town in which the head of the family bows to none of those humiliating necessities that in other places send so many wives and children out of their homes to aid a handicapped struggle for honor and independence. With his own hand he provides for what the household needs.

As a noteworthy factor in his earning capacity must be mentioned first of all the auspicious circumstances that he is as well paid as any man in the country doing the same kind of work, and always is on good terms with his employer. Perhaps the most striking evidence of this is the freedom from industrial controversies, there having been no strikes at the Draper company works in the forty years of their operation. There never is occasion for prolonged misunderstandings, as the men are perfectly free to call upon the management whenever they have questions of mutual concern to bring up, knowing that their claims will receive due consideration. But wages and factory conditions, predominating as may be their influence, are only contributing factors in the life of this exceptional manufacturing community. The same consideration that is displayed in the construction of the factory buildings to obtain wholesome conditions for the employes is shown in the provisions for their care outside the factory. They have been provided for at the least possible cost to themselves.

A moderately elevated slope which has numerous swells and hollows constitutes the residential centre of the town. Nature provided much of the picturesqueness which lends charm to the place, and adjacent territory is agreeably diversified by dwarf woodland, cultivated fields, level uplands and elegant estates. But what strikes the eye with special force is the uniform excellence of the houses and the high tone of their surroundings. These houses are owned by the Draper company and occupied by its employes; yet, as may be seen from accompanying illustrations, their architecture and dimensions place them well within the conventional class of residences for business men or persons of professional pursuits. The company erects anywhere from five to fifty of this style of houses every year and rents them to its employes for from $2 50 to $3.62 per week, inclusive of water and maintenance. Some of the houses built a few years ago are a little less imposing and rent as low as $1.75 per week. Moreover the company gives cash prizes aggregating $375 per year for the best kept lawns and gardens, which proves a most excellent incentive to conscientious care-taking, and the results clearly justify the efforts.

Every home presents an attractive appearance. Corporation houses and private houses alike reveal a quickened spirit of domestic pride, seldom observed to that degree in any community of laboring people. All the new houses are two and one-half stories high, have broad piazzas, lawns and back yards. The double houses, which are in the majority, are divided vertically, giving each family the use of the several floors. No less than 15 styles of architecture are exemplified in the corporation houses, each showing due regard for taste and comfort. Young trees and flower beds are planted in measured distances on the low graded lawns; wide streets, always neat and clean, and lighted by electricity, wind in among the houses in serpentine fashion. All conditions combine to raise the town above the gloom and monotony which usually greet the eye in manufacturing towns.

As alluded to earlier in this article, all it costs the shop help (and few others are admitted) to rent these corporation houses is from $1.75 to $3 62 per week. Hardly less comfortably housed are some of the employes who live in Milford, the adjoining town. Probably 800 of the 2500 Draper employes live there. When they began to settle down in that township rents went up; to protect them against this advance, the Draper company bought a tract of

WOMAN BURNED TO DEATH.

Was Alone in the House at Time Of the Accident.

DEATH ENSUED ALMOST IMMEDIATELY

Was Nearly Blind. Stove Supposed to Have Blazed Up and Caught Her Clothing.

Mrs Catherine Twohig, 57, wife of Patrick Twohig, was burned to death at her home in Hampden Monday morning.

Mrs. Twohig was alone at the house at the time of the accident, her husband being in the barn a short distance away Bert Corey, clerk in J. L Gottshe's grocery store, heard screams coming from the house and rushing in found Mrs. Twohig standing near the stove in the kitchen with her clothing all in flames. He caught up a shawl and rolled it around the woman, partly putting out the flames. Mr. Twohig reached the house soon after Mr. Corey had wrapped the shawl around his wife, who being unable to stand the suffering fell unconscious to the floor. A crowd had gathered in the house by this time and the fire was extinguished Dr H Warner was quickly summoned, but Mrs Twohig was dead about 15 minutes before he arrived. The body was so badly burned that it was beyond recognition.

The cause of the accident is unknown, but it is thought, from the evidence gained by investigating the condition of the room, that Mrs. Twohig, who was partially blind, had lifted one of the lids from the stove and placed some papers within, which blazed up and set fire to her clothing.

Mrs. Twohig, who was an old resident of Hampden, had a large circle of friends who regret her untimely death. She is survived by her husband and four children, Daniel J. Twohig of Springfield, Mrs. George Wells of Hampden, Matthew Cunningham of Haydenville and Miss Josie Twohig of Indian Orchard.

EMBEZZLER IS NABBED.

Ware Express Driver, Short in Accounts, Caught in Beverly.

Louis A Plouff of Ware, the driver of the American Express Company, who disappeared about ten days ago and was short in his accounts, was arrested in Beverly Monday and brought back to Ware by F. A. Lobstein of New York city, chief detective for the express company east of Buffalo, accompanied by H F. Millard of Springfield, a route inspector.

Plouff made no attempt to deny his guilt, and could not state exactly how much he had taken in all As the amount alleged to have been extracted exceeded $100, although less than $105, Plouff was bound over to the December term of the superior court. Bonds were fixed at $1000

After his disappearance, Plouff was first traced to Quincy, but the officers missed their man in that town by a few days. A clew was obtained leading to Franklin Falls, N. H., but here again the officers were too late and returned to Ware for a second time. Plouff was then located in Lynn and traced to Beverly, where he went to work Monday morning with the United States Machinery Company.

Receivers Appointed.

Daniel E Webster of Springfield and George F. Brooks of Worcester were appointed at Worcester Monday permanent receivers of the Torkelson Manufacturing Company at Warren. Bonds were fixed at $10,000 each. The receivers were authorized to take charge of all the property of the company and to handle all the money, etc., until such time as the property can be sold.

Loses Leg by Electrics.

Peter Kupiec, 35, was struck by a trolley car on the Warren, Brookfield and Spencer railway about 10 45 Saturday night. His left leg was broken in two places and the foot was badly crushed. It was found necessary to amputate the left leg below the knee and he was removed to the state hospital at Tewksbury Monday.

PALMER NEWS.

BULLET THROUGH HIS HAND.

Nine-Years-Old Boy Claims He Doesn't Know How He Was Shot.

John Edmonds, the nine-years-old son of Mr and Mrs. Thomas Edmonds of Dublin street, was shot through the hand by a 22 calibre bullet Wednesday afternoon, the ball entering the back of the hand and passing through, coming out through the third finger and grooving the one next to it. He was attended by Dr. H. C. Cheney, who dressed the wound and anticipates no serious trouble from it. The boy's story of the affair was that he had been kept after school at the grammar school building, and that when he left the building, while passing the corner of the street he heard a shot and felt something strike his hand; looking down he discovered that it was all blood and started for home. This seemed a little chimerical however, and a little investigation revealed the fact that he was in or near the addition to the Thorndike street cemetery when the accident occurred. With him was Paul Sherman, who had a rifle, but both declare that he did not do it; Sherman says that Edmunds was behind him when he was shot.

The accident brings to notice the numerous youngsters who are parading the streets with firearms and with spring or air guns, and the only wonder is that someone has not been hurt before, and seriously. One day last week a boy of not more than 10 or twelve years was shooting a spring gun promiscuously about Main street with little regard for what he aimed at. In this connection it may be well to call attention to the law on the matter. Section 92 of chapter 102 says that "Whoever sells or furnishes to a minor under the age of 15 years any firearms or other dangerous weapon shall be punished by a fine of not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars for each offense."

ELECTRIC ROAD TRANSFER.

To Take Place Next Week Plans to Improve Springfield-Palmer Service.

A meeting of the directors of the Springfield and Eastern Street Railway Company was held at 2 o'clock this afternoon in the office of Fred T. Ley in Springfield, when it was expected that the road would be turned over to the lessees, but on account of the absence of some of the officials, the meeting was postponed for one week. The road is to be operated as a part of the Springfield system, under General Manager Harry C. Page of that company. Mr. Page informed the Journal this morning that Superintendent Hunnewell will be left in charge of the Palmer lines

Mr. Page also stated that he is planning to give Eastern Hampden passengers a better service between Springfield and Ludlow on the outward-bound cars, and do away with the crowding of these cars by Springfield passengers who might as well take the car which runs a few minutes earlier. The system is not fully worked out as yet, but the plan is to run the Palmer cars express from Court Square to Ludlow, stopping neither to take or leave passengers between these points Passengers for points east of Ludlow who might wish to take a Palmer car along the line are to be accommodated by another car which will leave a few minutes earlier, both reaching Ludlow at the same time, where a transfer will be made from the first to the Palmer car. This will be the schedule for the entire day, not simply through the rush hours.

POMONA GRANGE MEETS.

Two Sessions in Palmer Wednesday, With Many Visiting Members.

A meeting of Springfield Pomona Grange was held in Odd Fellows' hall in Palmer Wednesday, with a good attendance from ten granges, and visiting members from Monson, Westfield and Warren. The morning session was called to order by the lecturer, C. B. Bennett of Ludlow, after which C. D. Richardson of West Brookfield, one of the state deputies, addressed the meeting, speaking chiefly upon the benefits of the order of Patrons of Husbandry. He was followed by C. B. Bennett, A. L. Sanborn of Westfield, and F. A. Forward of Granby, who spoke briefly on the same topic. A recess was taken for dinner, during which time a picture of the members gathered outside the hall was taken by George Day of Palmer.

The afternoon session was open to the public, and was well attended. The exercises, which were in charge of Lecturer Bennett of Ludlow, were opened with "The Mounthank's song," by E. E. Chapman of Ludlow. Miss Bodurtha of Wilbraham and Mrs C B. Bennett of Ludlow gave readings. C C. Beebe of Wilbraham spoke upon the benefits of the grange. Mr. Simpson, master of Palmer grange, Mr. Geer of Three Rivers, State Deputy E E. Chapman, Mr. Warriner of Warren and F Burton of East Longmeadow spoke along the same line. The session closed at 3 30.

SUM OF MONEY MISSING.

Mrs. Sophia Brooks Finds She is $160 Poorer Than She Supposed.

Mrs Sophia Brooks of Maple street discovered Tuesday that she was minus $160, and thinks it very probably was taken by her adopted daughter, Miss Jennie Brooks, who left home without permission a short time ago. Mrs. Brooks kept the money in an old-fashioned safe which opens with a key, to which no one besides herself had access except Miss Brooks. Mrs Brooks did not have occasion to visit the safe since Miss Brooks' departure until Monday evening, when she missed the money. Miss Brooks owned $70 of the money, which her mother was keeping for her. Miss Brooks, who is now at the home of her sister in Niverville, N Y, has written to Mrs. Brooks' attorney, stating that she will not return to her home in Palmer. She also returned at the same time a ring and handkerchief belonging to Mrs. Brooks, which she claims is the only property she took which was not her own.

District Court.

He gave the name of John Robinson when arraigned for vagrancy last Saturday, and proved to have a glib tongue and a slick story. According to it he had just arrived from Denver and was much outraged by his arrest on the charge preferred. He was an old soldier and had served four years with the gallant Eighth Massachusetts in the Civil War. Judge Kenefick, however, knew something of Massachusetts' war history, and verified his suspicion by reference to the records, which showed that the 8th Mass. was in existence only about eight months. Accordingly Mr Robinson was sent up for 30 days He had been working the Masonic fraternity for dimes quarters and what he could get, having enough of the signs and grips to make it appear he was a member of the order.

Four drunks were arraigned Monday morning. Otis Holbrook and Charles Stoff, John Hicks and James Waters were each sentenced to 30 days in the house of correction, but the two former had their sentences suspended until a later date, pending good behavior in the meantime Yesterday morning's session had to do with one man who asked for a lodging the night before. He gave a good account of himself, and as he seemed to be in hard luck from force of circumstances rather than design, he was allowed to go.

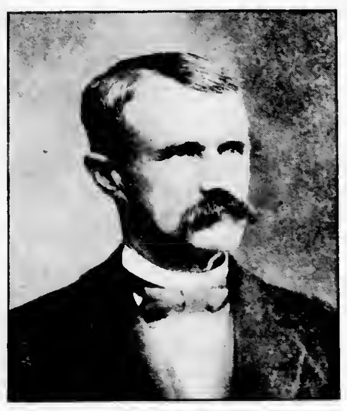
TWO GOOD MEN.

Who Ought to Receive Big Votes in Eastern Hampden Next Tuesday.

Two candidates who by reason of faithful and satisfactory public service in the past are entitled to reëection next Tuesday, are County Commissioner William H. Brainerd of Palmer and Representative Arthur D Norcross of Monson.



Mr Brainerd has served the county most acceptably for something like 15 years, first as special commissioner and later as a member of the regular board, of which he is now the chairman, also having served in that capacity during a former term. Mr. Brainerd is a man of conservative ideas and good judgment, as evidenced in very many instances and places; a man who stands by his convictions. In this particular he has been unfortunate in antagonizing a certain contingent in Springfield which is devoted to the laudable scheme of navigating the Connecticut river, his offense being in voting to allow the Chicopee bridge to be constructed at the old height, too low to admit the passage of boats — if ever that time comes. In this connection it would seem that his judgment was sound, as until the bridges further down the stream were raised — and there was no apparent possibility of this for some time — there would be no boats to pass under the Chicopee bridge and no necessity for putting additional expense on the town and the county. The friends of Mr. Brainerd are sure that his satisfactory service in the past will merit a "well done" from the voters next Tuesday, and that he will be elected for another three years by a handsome majority. It behooves Eastern Hampden to stand firmly by him.

Mr. Norcross is a candidate for election from the first Hampden representative district for the third time. Although a resident of Monson he was nominated the first time by Palmer, whose turn it was to name the man Last year he was again named by his own town, and this year he was again brought forward as the unanimous choice of the district, the nomination being conceded to no town. His work in the House has been conspicuous, in that he from the first showed a disposition to go deep into all matters and stand by only the meritorious ones. He early began to attract attention by the soundness of his positions, and is one of the strong men of the Legislature. He will be still more of a power the coming year. Eastern Hampden should see that he gets every vote in his party; it is conceded that he is to be the nominee for senator from this district next year, and a handsome endorsement now will do no harm then.

Pupils Still Saving Money.

The penny savings stamps, which were introduced into the schools last spring by the Palmer Woman's Club, are still being eagerly taken by the school children, in spite of the prediction by many that the rush for them at first was only the natural result of the excitement over a new thing and would soon die out or materially decrease. The experience since the opening of school in September proves exactly the contrary, however. There has been a slight falling off in the collections, but only a slight one, and this principally among the smaller children and those who had only small amounts at the close of school. The demand has settled down to a level, and is about the same each week, showing a steadiness of purpose on the part of those who are using them. There has been on the part of some objection to the children putting in their pennies, on the ground that they could not have their money back until of age; this is an error, as it is not the intention of the Woman's Club to retain the books after the pupil leaves school. The books are kept at all times in the vault of the Palmer Savings Bank, in which the money is deposited School Teachers Try Hallowe'en Stunts.

An unusually enjoyable Hallowe'en celebration was that given the teachers of the public schools Tuesday evening by Superintendent and Mrs R J. Fuller at their home on Thorndike street. The invitations to the event were original drawings and in the nature of conundrums; it goes without saying that every one was accepted. On arrival at the house the guests were greeted by three ghosts — the Witch of Endor, Macbeth, and Lady Macbeth. The decorations consisted of autumn leaves, and the light was furnished by genuine Jack-o'-lanterns Various Hallowe'en stunts were indulged in, a and palmist after careful consideration decided that the unmarried females in the party were scheduled to change their condition within a twelvemonth. Refreshments consisting of brownbread sandwiches and pumpkin pie were served, and a huge bonfire out of doors, with an accompaniment of roasted chestnuts, closed the evening.

Bridge Goes Down Under Load.

The Commercial street bridge over the Quaboag river, which connects the towns of Palmer and Monson, gave way Monday afternoon as a four-horse team, owned by the W. N. Flynt Granite Company was crossing it The wagon was loaded with building iron for the new building at the state hospital, and the length of the iron kept the wagon from going through. The ironwork of the bridge did not collapse, but one of the wooden cross timbers which support the floor broke and let down the planking. There were five tons of iron on the wagon. A new flooring has since been laid, including floor timbers and planking The work was done under the supervision of Superintendent of Streets C T Brainerd, and the cost will be divided between the towns of Monson and Palmer.

Managers of football elevens wishing to arrange for games with an eleven having an average weight of 143 pounds, should write to Joseph Wilder, Palmer.

Foresters' Ball.

The annual ball of Court Palmer, Foresters of America, was held in the opera house last Friday evening, and as usual attracted a large attendance The music was by Flanagan's singing orchestra of Marlboro, and the concert before the dancing was much enjoyed The grand march was led by Chief Ranger William F. Gaffney, with Miss Susie Conway, followed by 80 couples A dancing program of 20 numbers followed, and special cars took the guests to the several near-by points at the close.

False Alarm

An alarm of fire was rung from box 63 on South Main street just before 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The department hustled down to Fox avenue to find a lot of smoke issuing from a house bearing a contagious disease notice warning all persons to keep out, and as it was announced there was no need of their assistance they refrained from butting in. There was no fire except in a stove, but the chimney had become clogged in some way and when the fire was started the smoke came out into the house instead of going out through the ordinary channel.

Judge Moulton's foxhound "Sing," which was well known to all of the sporting fraternity and to many others about town, died Monday. For six years Sing had been Judge Moulton's constant companion, and was seen with him on his daily walks about town, and often ranged the hills hereabouts in search of Reynard. During the time Sing was owned by Judge Moulton they were never separated, the dog making a trip to Indiana and three to the seashore with his master.

The selectmen have been perambulating the town bounds this week. The line between Palmer and Warren was viewed Monday with the selectmen of that town, and Tuesday the Ware town fathers joined them in inspecting the boundaries between that burg and Palmer. This is the most strenuous proposition of the lot, there being eighteen angles on the line, which somewhat resembles a Virginia rail fence struck by lightning. The Belchertown, Ludlow and Wilbraham lines are yet to be traversed.

Dr. J. W. Fairing has accepted a practice in Granville, which has been offered him by a committee of citizens of that town, and will leave Palmer at an early date. His practice in Palmer will be taken by Dr. Sullivan of Thorndike. Dr Fairing has been located in Palmer about three years, and he has built up a large practice. The members of the choir of the Baptist church, of which both Dr Fairing and his wife are members, tendered them a farewell reception at the home of Rev. C. W. Williams Monday evening.

The Palmer high school football team went to Monson Saturday afternoon, expecting to play the Academy team on Flynt's park, but were doomed to disappointment. Upon their arrival in Monson they were greeted by the Academy rooters, but no football team. VOTE FOR CHARLES W. BARTLETT FOR GOVERNOR

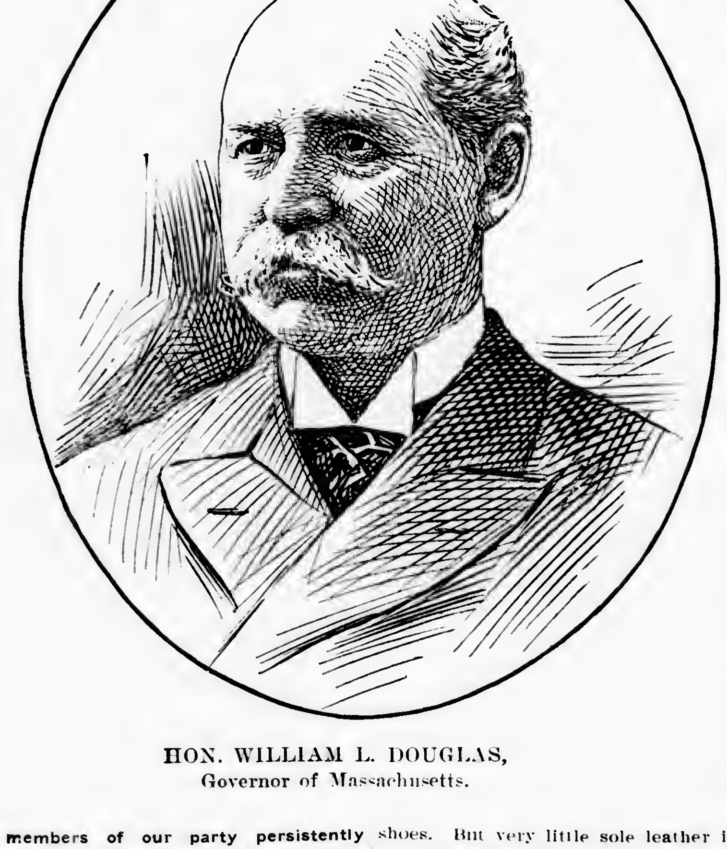
He stands fairly and squarely upon a platform favoring the placing of HIDES, IRON, COAL, LUMBER, and WOOD PULP on the free list. He is also in favor of RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA AND OTHER COUNTRIES.

READ WHAT GOVERNOR DOUGLAS SAYS ABOUT THE TARIFF, RECIPROCITY AND OTHER ISSUES OF THIS CAMPAIGN.



HON. WILLIAM L. DOUGLAS,
Governor of Massachusetts.

First and foremost, I want to say a word relative to labor legislation. The Republican speakers make the statement that all the labor legislation on the statute books was placed there through the influence of the Republican party. Every labor man in the commonwealth knows that the Democratic party has been the first to advance the labor measures, and that members of our party persistently voted for these measures long before they were adopted by the Republican Legislature. Almost every labor measure that was proposed last year was defeated by a Legislature overwhelmingly Republican. Why were they afraid to allow those labor measures to come to me? Simply because a Democratic Governor has rarely been known to veto labor measures. Why did the Legislature the previous year pass all the labor measures that were introduced and send them to Gov. Bates? It was simply because they expected those measures to be vetoed, which they were. They merely shifted the responsibility from themselves to Gov. Bates. Is not this fact enough to show that the Republican members of the Legislature this year believed that if they did permit the overtime bill and various other labor measures to reach the Governor, he would unquestionably have appended his signature to such measures?

Massachusetts and the Tariff.

For 10 or 12 years the interests of Massachusetts have been injuriously affected by our national tariff law; and our people now demand and will continue to demand, until the law is changed, such a reform in it as will enable us to procure the raw materials used in our manufacturing industries free of duty, that we may compete successfully with other countries in the markets of the world. We cannot compete in those markets merely by building the Panama canal or acquiring possessions in the Pacific ocean or the Caribbean sea, or establishing the "open door" in China. So long as our tariff laws deprive us of the right to buy freely the materials which enter into our manufactures we will be so handicapped that we can do but little business in foreign markets

Twenty or 30 years ago when our manufacturing establishments were few and small, when our supply of raw material was abundant, near at hand and cheap, and when our home market was poorly supplied with finished products, our manufacturers flourished under and in spite of high tariffs. But recent developments have changed all this. Great manufacturing enterprises have been built up, which cannot be supplied by our local resources. Vast quantities of coal are needed to supply power to operate our machinery. Vast quantities of leather and lumber are needed to supply our shoe factories and our paper mills and furniture factories. New England can now supply but a small part of the raw material needed. For example, we have in Massachusetts alone 645 establishments for the making of shoes. But very little sole leather is made in Massachusetts—indeed, very little leather of any kind. And hence we must buy leather from the leather trust, at whatever price it may fix.

Again, in these 645 factories we must use enormous quantities of coal. But New England produces no coal; therefore we must buy it from the coal trust. We cannot buy either coal or leather abroad, because there is a high tariff on both. The result is that we are obliged to pay 15 per cent. more for our leather than we ought to pay, and nearly $1 a ton more for the coal we use. Such great and unnecessary burdens upon our industries are almost unbearable.

I notice the Republican speakers have made statements attempting to frighten our working people, and warning them of the panic of 1893, saying: "We do not believe you want to go through with another panic like that. We believe that you at that time got all of the reduction in tariff that you wanted." This all sounds very nice to the people who do not know or remember what caused the panic in 1893. The real fact is that the tariff bill, which was passed by Congress in the spring of 1894, did not take effect until nearly a year after the panic began. Therefore, it seems to me that it is folly to say that the panic of 1893 was caused by a reduction of the tariff. If the speakers who are attempting to frighten the people will refer to the history of this country they will find that the reduction of the tariff never produced a panic.

We gather from the speeches of our opponents that the great prosperity of this country is due solely to the protective tariff, when, in fact, there are many reasons why this country is prosperous. We have greater resources for the production of gold than any other country, and we have the most fertile agricultural lands. These natural advantages, coupled with the acknowledged ability of our working people, enable us to produce a great deal more than we can consume.

The protective tariff is not solely the reason of our prosperity. This country has been prosperous and will be prosperous in spite of the tariff, although if we could have free raw materials such as hides, coal, iron, lumber and wood pulp, it would place us in a position in Massachusetts where we could reach the markets of the world with our manufactures.

Some gentlemen in their attempt to justify and perpetuate present onerous conditions, are prone to make false comparisons. They assume that since Massachusetts has increased more rapidly than other states in manufacturing during a period of 100 years, or 40 years, or some other very long period covering the development of our great industries, that the same is true of the present and will continue to be the case without reference to changed conditions. Such reasoning is wholly unsound. We know that for 10 years, at least, our manufacturing industries have languished by reason of restrictions imposed upon them by federal legislation. In order to get at the real truth, let us compare conditions as they exist in this state with those existing in other states at this time.

Our Peculiar Position.

The three leading manufacturing states with reference to products of manufactures per capita of population, according to the census of 1900, were Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts. Each man, woman and child of Massachusetts produced a manufacturing product of $369, and an agricultural product of $15. Pennsylvania produced a manufactured product of $33. The total value of the agricultural products in Massachusetts in 1900 was but $42,298,274, while the total gross value of the manufactured product was $1,035,198,989.

Massachusetts, standing seventh in population and fourth in manufacture, sinks to the 31st place in agriculture, while the density of manufactured product per square mile reaches the sum of $125,000. The total gross value of the manufactured product per square mile in New York and Pennsylvania respectively was $45,000 and $40,000. We are not an agricultural state and cannot look to this industry for the compensating relief which agriculture gives to those states where the manufacturing interest is not so well established. In density of manufacturing product we have three times as much on every square mile as the great manufacturing states of Pennsylvania and New York. We may, therefore, justly claim that the revision of the tariff is of greater moment to every citizen of Massachusetts than it is to the citizens of any other state, excepting Rhode Island and Connecticut.

The Democratic platform asks for a definite relief, which will enhance the prosperity of every section of the state, while the Republican platform asks for "present action" in such a confused muddle of words as to leave it uncertain whether the tariff is to be reformed upward or downward, and whether the relief is to come now or at some indefinite future time.

The Republican party of Massachusetts has retreated under the shelter of an ambiguous phrase from the high ground which it occupied last year. Either the leaders of the party were insincere last year or they are insincere this year. What does "present action" mean? Does it mean free hides, free coal, free iron, free wood pulp, free lumber? Does it mean reciprocity with Canada? Does it mean anything that the people of Massachusetts, irrespective of party affiliations, are so generally demanding? Those leaders who talk so vaguely of "present action" are in reality opposing tariff reform. Their action consists in adopting ambiguous phrases to deceive the people; in "standing pat" on the Dingley schedules; and in ringing the alarm bells of the trusts. Such is their action at present; and that is probably all they meant when they put the phrase "present action" into their platform. Compare this paltering and straddling with the plain and direct demands of the Democratic platform!

What We Really Need.

Our platform asserts that a sensible relief may be had, without any disturbance to the business of the country, by placing upon the free list a number of the raw materials demanded by our industries, such as coal, iron, lumber, hides and wood pulp. This is a definite policy stated in definite terms.

Do our people want these raw materials placed upon the free list? Do they think that such action will redound to the interests of Massachusetts labor and to the lasting interests of Massachusetts people? If so, I think they should vote as they think, and thereby give the Democratic ticket such a majority as will challenge the attention of thinking men everywhere. If our people really want free raw materials, they should vote for the men and the party that stand unalterably and unequivocally upon a platform demanding them.

Free Coal.

In my inaugural address last year I recommended a memorial to Congress asking a repeal of the duty on coal. In the hearings before the legislative committee on federal relations I am pleased to say that this recommendation was approved by many of our leading citizens, irrespective of party lines.

It is safe to say that nine-tenths of the people of Massachusetts want free coal. Free coal affects the interests of nearly all of our people and of all our industries. Why not ask the national legislature for that which the prosperity of our state demands?

The answer to this is a general one. It is asserted that the tariff on coal is a national question, and that as patriotic citizens we should suffer cheerfully in order that the greater number of our coal friends in other states may have reasonable protection. But is this so? Will free coal injure the coal interests of Ohio, Indiana, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Illinois? Our coal fields are in the interior of the country. By the operation of our tariff law the manufacturers of New England are placed at the mercy of the great railroad and mining interests of the United States. These great interests can and do dictate the price of coal, to the detriment of all our citizens. In an ordinary year Canada buys from us nearly three times as much coal as we buy from her. American manufacturers prefer American coal, and with free coal from Cape Breton there would be little danger of injury to the coal industry of our country. We should still use American coal, but the railroad combine would lose its power to dictate prices. It is a notorious fact that the leading bituminous coal producers of the South and West are formulating a demand for the removal of the duty on coal between the United States and Canada. The balance of trade in coal would still be with the United States at the ratio of three to one. Our output of coal would be increased rather than reduced. As Canada has for 30 years fixed her coal duty at about the same rate fixed by the United States, it is probable that free coal in our schedules would result in free coal in Canadian schedules. Because of the duty of 67 cents per ton we are at present paying nearly a dollar a ton more for our coal than we ought to pay. This dollar does not help the national government at all, but goes to swell the profits of the coal barons of the country. Free coal, then, would not reduce the revenues of the national government; it would aid every interest in Massachusetts and New England, and would be of far-reaching advantage to the people at large. Only the coal trust would suffer. Good business sense and the highest patriotism unite in the demand for free coal.

Free Hides.

Of course, the duty on hides should come off. It is a tax on industry that benefits a very few people and injures every one who wears boots and shoes, or who is engaged in the manufacture of leather or leather goods.

The United States Leather Company, a corporation doing more than half the sole leather tanning of the country, through its vice-president, Lewis H. Lapham, testified before the industrial commission in 1901 that the tariff on hides was a serious handicap to the business. He also testified "that the tariff on hides increased the price of domestic hides by the amount of the duty." This duty is 15 per cent. As it does not go to the government, it must go to swell the profits of the beef trust.

It is probably true, as Mr. Lapham said, that the duty of 15 per cent. on hides does increase the profits of the leather trust and greatly increase those of the beef trust. It should not be forgotten, however, that the leather trust is protected by a duty of 20 per cent. on leather, and that it in turn holds up the manufacturers of shoes, harness and other leather consuming industries, and charges them all the tariff will permit. If, as reported, the beef trust has now obtained a controlling interest in the leather trust, there will be no more quarrelling as to which trust gets the lion's share of the profits; they will both work together to get every cent possible out of both the duties on hides and leather. The tariff screws are to be applied more mercilessly than before. The proposed change in discounts on sole leather, which adds about 2 cents to the cost of every pair of shoes, indicates what is in store for us, although I am reliably informed that this discount change has been held up until after the election.

If the sole leather trust is enabled to successfully change its plan of discounts so that it will cost my company 2 cents per pair more for sole leather, it will be but a short time until the combinations controlling the other materials that enter into the shoe will alter or amend or rearrange their prices so as to get an increase in price equal to that of the sole leather trust. When that day arrives, and it is not far distant, it will cost my company 6 cents per pair more to manufacture the grade of shoes we produce. Our worst enemies are the tariff and the tariff trusts.

The total value of the hides of cattle imported into the United States for the 12 months ending June 30, 1905, was $14,949,628, while the total of all hides and skins, other than furs, exported for the same period, was $1,051,641. We can produce only about three-fourths of the hides needed for the supply of our home manufacturers of leather, and must annually draw about 25 per centum of our supply from abroad. A tariff tax of $2,500,000 upon this fourth results in an entirely unnecessary and unwarranted increase of about 11 per cent. in the price of all sole leather used by American manufacturers. When we consider that Massachusetts produces but little sole leather, the magnitude of this burden upon our manufacturers and upon our people becomes apparent.

To put $2,250,000 into the treasury of the United States as the result of our duty upon hides, we put about $7,000,000 of unnecessary tariff profit in the hands of the beef and leather trusts. This puts an iniquitous tax upon the sole leather industry of about $10,000,000, and disables that industry in its fight for the markets of the world.

Boot and Shoe Industry Handicapped.

In the boot and shoe industry Massachusetts produces nearly one-half of the factory and custom product of the United States, and more than four times as much as any other state. In the manufacture of boots and shoes the annual product of Massachusetts is more than $150,000,000, while the entire annual product of the United States is $261,000,000. New York, the nearest competitor of Massachusetts, produces but $35,000,000. A tax of $2,250,000 upon the hides imported—involving a subsidy to the beef trust of about $7,000,000 on domestic hides, makes a heavy load for the principal industry of Massachusetts, and, coupled with the duty on leather, a still heavier load upon the consumers of boots and shoes.

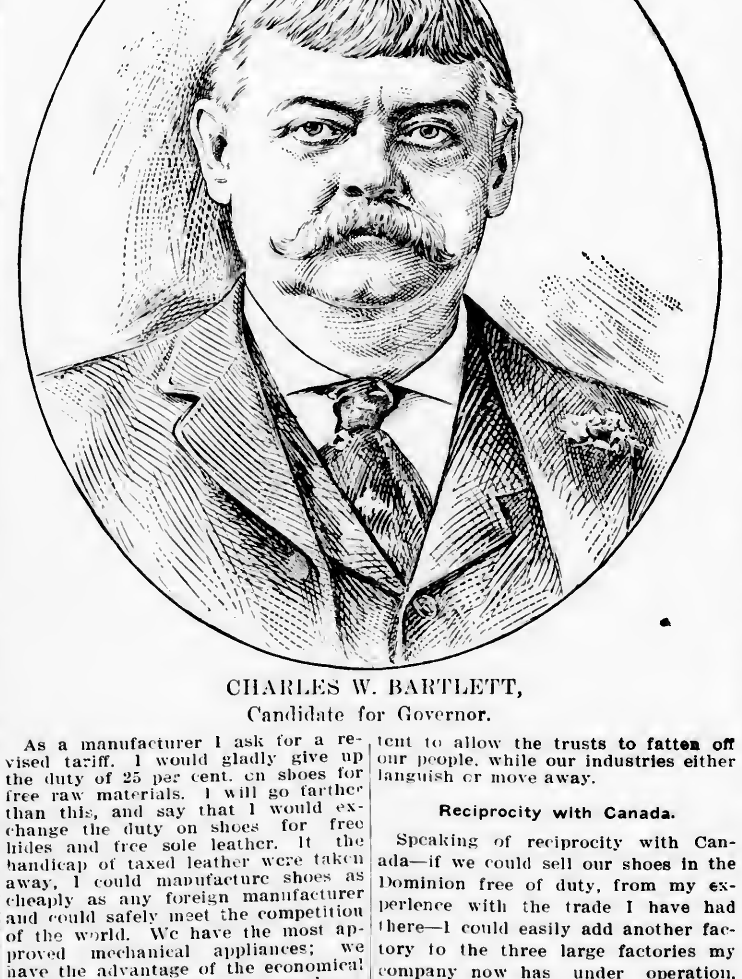
Of the total annual value, $1,400,000,000 in manufactured products for the state of Massachusetts, the boot and shoe industry creates a product annually of more than $150,000,000, or about one-ninth of the entire manufactured products of the state. To handicap an industry of this magnitude by an entire unnecessary tax upon its chief raw material is a ruinous policy which the people of the commonwealth should condemn unceasingly until it is corrected. It is not patriotic to fasten a burden of this kind upon the boot and shoe manufacturers of Massachusetts for the exclusive benefit of the beef and leather trusts. But that is what it amounts to. The most careful calculations fail to show that the American producer of cattle received one penny more for his cattle by reason of this duty on hides. The trusts that squeeze the boot and shoe manufacturers apply the screws with the same pertinacity to the cattle raiser; and with insatiable greed drive both to the wall.

We ask for free hides on high patriotic grounds. Such action will not injure the cattle producers; it will help the manufacturer of boots and shoes, and it will help the people at large. If it decreases the profits of two or three obnoxious trusts it will help to give a "square deal" to all.

How It Affects the Consumer.

Every year the factories of our state turn out about 140,000,000 pairs of shoes at a factory cost of something less than $1.20 a pair. Careful estimates show that the average tariff tax on each pair of shoes is about 9 cents, or nearly 7 per cent. of the value of the shoes. Allowing an average of three pairs of shoes per annum, the saving to the 3,100,000 souls of Massachusetts each year would exceed $900,000.

The Democratic platform demands the immediate enactment by Congress of a dual tariff law, having the present tariff for its maximum with liberal reductions in duty rates to nations that will give the most favorable trade opportunities. This means a reciprocal trade with foreign nations, and if made a law, would save the boot and shoe manufacturers of Massachusetts a sum large enough to increase the present output, and to enable them to greatly increase their foreign sales. Not only this, such a policy would give steadier employment to the 60,000 employes now engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes in Massachusetts. It would also result in either increasing the $35,000,000 now distributed to the workmen as wages, or in increasing the quantity or bettering the quality of the goods which this $35,000,000 will buy.



CHARLES W. BARTLETT,
Candidate for Governor.

As a manufacturer I ask for a revised tariff. I would gladly give up the duty of 25 per cent. on shoes for free raw materials. I will go farther than this, and say that I would exchange the duty on shoes for free hides and free sole leather. If the handicap of taxed leather were taken away, I could manufacture shoes as cheaply as any foreign manufacturer and could safely meet the competition of the world. We have the most approved mechanical appliances; we have the advantage of the economical division of labor, and our workmen are equal to any in the world. We are hurt, however, by the high cost of the materials that enter into our product. This increased cost is not a natural cost. It is artificial and unjust. It benefits no worthy industry. It fosters gigantic combinations of capital, injures labor, and destroys foreign trade. Give our manufacturers free raw materials and they will carry Massachusetts goods into every market of the world.

Nor am I the only boot and shoe man who desires a change. In 1903, 311 out of 375 important boot and shoe manufacturers in New England offered to give up the duty on shoes for free hides. I do not believe that this sentiment has changed.

That there is a demand for changes in the tariff in other localities as well as in Massachusetts is notorious. The Chicago conference of last August showed that the Millers' National Federation and the Farmers' National Congress demanded relief. Great commercial bodies from all parts of the Union have added their strength to the call for a change. The Stock Raising Associations of the Middle West are also in line with the tariff reformers of the nation.

But great as are the evils of the present schedules to other sections of our country, still greater are they to Massachusetts. The demands of other sections are instinctive. They show the magnitude and wide extent of an admitted evil calling for relief. But tariff reform in Massachusetts is more; it is vital; it goes to the roots of our prosperity; and we are warranted in demanding immediate relief.

The Shoe Manufacturers' Association of the United States have requested me—and I have consented—to act as chairman of a committee, representing this great industry, to go to Washington some time during the month of November and present our appeal to President Roosevelt, urging him to bring before Congress our request for the removal of the 15 per cent. duty on hides. If the voters of this commonwealth on the 7th day of November will cast a plurality of their ballots for Charles W. Bartlett and his associates on the ticket, they will assist this committee greatly in its work and will give the President courage to make a strong appeal to Congress, and Congress, realizing that Massachusetts has spoken in no uncertain way on this great question, will be compelled to take some action that will assist in the preservation of this commonwealth's greatest industry.

This question of free raw materials and the revision of the tariff is not a question of politics or party. It is a principle of business, and should be looked at as a business proposition. If you vote to elect the whole Republican ticket, you simply notify Congress and the administration at Washington that the people of Massachusetts and our manufacturing industries are satisfied with present conditions, and are content to allow the trusts to fatten off our people, while our industries either languish or move away.

Reciprocity with Canada.

Speaking of reciprocity with Canada—if we could sell our shoes in the Dominion free of duty, from my experience with the trade I have had there—I could easily add another factory to the three large factories my company now has under operation, which would employ certainly one thousand men and women with a payroll of about $750,000 a year. If, even having reciprocity with Canada alone I could accomplish that, how much more could I accomplish if I and my fellow shoe manufacturers could have reciprocity with all nations of the world, which we are entitled to—and what is true of the shoe business would be equally true of all other manufactures in the commonwealth

A Good Word for Bartlett.

A word about our candidate for Governor, Charles W. Bartlett. He is capable, honest, fearless, sincere, independent and conservative. If he is elected Governor he will be Governor of the whole people—he will not be controlled by any political machine, but his first thought on any and every question that is brought to his attention will be—is it right? Is it in the interests of the whole people?

Just now the eyes of the nation are centred upon President Roosevelt, who stands for a "square deal" in the interests of the people. He is earnest; he is fearless. He stands for something, and the people are with him. There is Folk of Missouri, La Follette of Wisconsin, Weaver of Philadelphia and Jerome of New York. Each and every one of them stand for something. Each and every one is doing his best to represent the interests of the people. They are not all Democrats, but they are representing democratic principles, and if you elect Charles W. Bartlett, you will add another to this list who will work in the interests of the people. What has been demonstrated in the past few years is that the people want men who administer the affairs of government to represent something, to do something, to stand for something; men who are not controlled by a machine. The people want men for public office who are not merely "good fellows." They are tired of machines and "good fellows." They want men who stand for vital principles, and if you elect Charles W. Bartlett, you will add another to the list of such men.

A vote for Charles W. Bartlett for Governor is a vote to preserve the industries of Massachusetts without taking away a single thing of value to other states

A Telegraphic Click

[Original.]

Ray Dexter and I became telegraphers when we were but little more than fifteen years old. We worked for several years in the same office and were among the first to read by ear instead of by sight. After that we drifted apart, to come together again, in telegraphic parlance, on the same railroad, Ray being operator at one station, I at another. We were bosom friends and had many a confidence over the wire.

When the civil war broke out I, who had come north from Georgia to learn telegraphing, went back to my native state and enlisted as a cavalryman in the Confederate army. What became of Ray Dexter I did not know.

One morning in the summer of 1862, while we were confronting the Union army in Tennessee, I was sent for by the colonel, who asked me if I were not a telegrapher. When I admitted that I was, he told me I was wanted at general headquarters. There I met the general, who said that a copy of the enemy's cipher code had fallen into his hands and he desired to avail himself of it to learn something of their movements. Our interview resulted in his sending me out to the enemy's rear for the purpose of tapping his wires. I dressed myself as a camp follower and provided myself with a basketful of suspenders, socks, buttons and such other wares as are usually sold by peddlers. Underneath a false wooden bottom I hid my telegraph machine and connections. When fully equipped I sallied forth.

General Rosecrans was then at Murfreesboro, threatening Bragg at Tullahoma. My object was to strike some point on a main telegraph line where I could tap the wire and, if possible, take off orders indicative of the enemy's intended movements. I followed the Nashville and Chattanooga railroad till I reached the Federal pickets, circled around their right outpost at Triune and came down in their rear between Triune and Murfreesboro. This plan had been laid out for me by my general and had this advantage: When the enemy moved against Tullahoma he must first draw in his right wing at Triune, since the troops there had the greater distance to march. The result showed that this view was correct.

For several days I lurked near the military telegraph between Murfreesboro and Triune without any results. I had no difficulty in tapping the wire, but there was nothing of moment passing over it. I concealed myself in the woods, not attempting to sell my wares to the Yankee soldiers, only relying on them to conceal my telegraph machine and have a reason for my presence in the locality if suspected. I had a lonely time of it in the woods by myself, my fears of detection having ample opportunity to assert themselves. It is one thing to be cut down in a charge and quite another to be dragged to the limb of a tree and be hanged for a spy, as I certainly would be if caught either tapping the wire or even with my apparatus.

One morning I awoke in my bivouac just as the dawn was breaking. I knew that the Federal pickets were kept under arms from about 2 till 4 o'clock in the morning every day to be ready for an attack. Perhaps it was this that induced me to try the wire. I did so, and took off an order for the general commanding at Triune to march by roads leading southeastward at once. Glad to have my watch over, I was winding up my wire prior to hiding it under my wares when a troop of Federal cavalry came riding through the bushes. It did not take them long to determine what I was up to, and they hurried me off to the general commanding the right wing.

He was preparing to march, but took time to attend to my case. He scribbled something on a piece of paper and handed it to an operator of the military telegraph, who went to an instrument in the same tent and began to click the key. I heard him send a report of my case to general headquarters and the reply: "Try by drum head court martial and hang immediately. Since you are preparing to march, never mind the court martial."

The moment the message began to come over the wire I recognized the touch of my old friend Ray Dexter. The announcement of my immediate execution and a hope for its recall or at least postponement came at the same moment.

"Take it to Captain L.," said the general to the operator when he had read the message and tell him to send for the officer of the day to execute the order."

The operator went out, leaving his telegraph instrument where I could almost reach it. I bent over and clicked:

"Ray, I'm the man you have just sent the order to hang. For God's sake, help me!"

The general was so busy with preparations that he did not notice my use of the instrument. Ray simply sent an O. K. to indicate that he understood, and I heard no more till he sent a call to the operator, who heard it as he came back. I was delighted to hear an order to send me to Murfreesboro.

I reached Murfreesboro at noon and found the center of the army preparing to move the next morning. When I was taken into the house occupied by the commanding general, Ray came to me and, taking both my hands in his, said that he would do everything in his power to save me. After much persuasion he succeeded, and I was entered on the rolls as a prisoner of war.

Cloth Dyed With Cobalt.

Cloth changes color with a change of weather if it is dyed with chloride of cobalt. In clear weather it is a blue, when a change is near it turns to violet and for rain to bright pink. The change is due to moisture, and it can be produced by breathing upon the cloth. This property of cobalt salts has been applied to the construction of floral hygrometers. The petals of artificial flowers are tinted with cobalt salts and vary in color from blue to pink according to the weather. Their action is different from that of a barometer, which indicates a change of pressure of the atmosphere and is also usually behind the change of weather. The barometer indicates the cause of the storm, and the colored cloth shows its effect.

First Use of "Magazine."

"Magazine," properly a storehouse (Arabian), has been annexed by literature, but it is interesting to assist at the birth of its now common literary use—in that venerable periodical, the Gentleman's Magazine. In the introduction to its number (1731) we read, "This consideration has induced several gentlemen to treasure up, as in a magazine, the most remarkable pieces on the subjects above mentioned."—London Times.

Hon. Curtis Guild Jr.,

Republican Candidate for Governor of Massachusetts

The Full Measure of a Man.

The honor that has come to Curtis Guild Jr. in being so clearly the unanimous choice of the Republican party as its candidate for governor of the state is but the natural reward that becomes due one who is persistent in his party service and eager and conscientious in his regard for the people whom he serves.

Curtis Guild has always been a man who has accomplished things. He has never exemplified the active life. He initiates, he carries forward, he gets to the front, and becomes an example of the man of the hour in the long list of big men of the state who deserve honor at the hands of their fellow men, the men who inspire confidence, who hold fast to the traditional tenets of the state.

Mr. Guild is at the present time 45 years old, in the full robustness of a man who has developed himself by his mental and physical activity. His career since he graduated from Harvard with big honors seems as well crowned with achievement as it is possible for a man to encompass. And it may be said his work has not been of that character that was continually aiming for public applause, but had its origin in a high sense of duty for the public and his fellow men. For instance we find that for a dozen years he worked humbly in the party ranks as a member of his ward committee, giving to the cause that sincere enthusiasm which has always been characteristic of him. There is but little fame to be gained in work of this sort, but Gen. Guild is the sort of a man who did these things because he considered it his duty. He became interested in politics for the sake of lending his influence to the success of his party by legitimate means, and, like the modest man he is, he commenced at the bottom. In 1888 he made his first speech in a campaign and since then he has been heard in every campaign with one exception, 1898, when he was doing grand work in the army as inspector-general on Gen. Lee's staff, insisting that the soldier boys in the Southern camps be well cared for.

One might enumerate a long list of achievements to the credit of the Republican candidate for the governorship, instances where he has stood steadfastly for the interest of the people against corporate influence, and where for the time his attitude might seem unpopular, but courage has always been one of his leading possessions and his face has always been set to the right.

It is good for the party that it holds such a man in its organization. It is better when the party puts forth such men for its leadership, and when a party rises to its opportunities as the Republican party has in this case and nominates one who measures up to the full standard of a man, it has a right to expect that the members of the party will deem it a duty, a privilege and an honor to pronounce their approval of the course.

The Man In South America

By EDITH DOANE

Copyright, 1905, by E. M. Doane

It was the dinner hour at the Ocean House. Inside the spacious dining room the hum of conversation and low laughter of women's voices mingled with soft strains of music. At the open windows the light curtains swayed gently in the ocean breeze.

A burst of infectious laughter came from a gay party by one of the windows, and Robert Woodruff, seated alone at a nearby table, glanced up in amused interest. Something vaguely familiar about one of the group—a girl who sat with her back to him—roused his attention. He was consumed with a burning desire to see her face, but some one was between them.

Just then the little party rose to go. As the girl pushed back her chair she turned, and with a glad thrill he recognized her—Elizabeth! How often the picture of that slender, almost faultless figure, the appealing eyes, the odd little touch of hauteur in the expressive face, had been in his mind during the past dreary months. If only she had given him a chance to explain, now, by the force of his love, grown strong through months of hunger, he would compel her to listen. Perhaps she would ignore that foolish misunderstanding after these two long years.

She was very near now—in another moment she must pass him. He rose, and his face was very bright and eager as he stood, tall and straight, beside his chair. On she came, pausing a moment at the table next to his own. Now she was so close he could have touched her, and his heart throbbed painfully. Then slowly, deliberately, coolly, without a glance, she passed him, her soft white draperies trailing gracefully down the long room.

Outside in the corridor little Billy Preston hurried past her, his fat, good natured face aglow.

"See Bobby Woodruff?" he panted. "Must be in there—name's on the register—not in room—must have come by late boat—I missed him—sailing!" he gasped explainingly.

The smile on Elizabeth's lips—everybody always smiled at Bobby—faded. With a quick shock of comprehension she glanced back into the dining room. So that was Robert Woodruff, that tall, splendid fellow smiling an answer to Billy's effusive greeting; he had been so near and she had not known.

Her heart beat in great, suffocating throbs, the lights were swimming before her eyes, and in her ears rang Billy's high pitched voice.

"Here he is, Miss Worthington. Here's the prodigal!" he bubbled joyously. "Keeping to himself just because the papers are full of that old bridge he managed to build down there in South America. Can't shake his old friends like that, can he, Miss Worthington? Doesn't he look fine, though?" And Billy beamed ecstatically.

"I am so glad to see you," she said, with a tremulous little smile, trying to speak steadily. Her dark eyes were full of tender light.

But there was no answering smile on the stern face above her. "Miss Worthington is very kind," he said courteously and bowing gravely.

Her face was very white as she turned proudly aside. She had lived in the hope of his coming—and he had come—and did not care.

Later in the evening, so late that the long suffering chaperons had already begun to issue warning signals to their unheeding charges, Billy finished a waltz with Miss Worthington. His companion had been singularly silent. "You look done up," he said anxiously. "Come out on the porch, where Woodruff and the rest of the crowd are."

"Oh, no—I"— she commenced in a quick, pleading voice, then stopped and walked beside him with gentle dignity. Billy drew her a chair within the friendly circle and she leaned gratefully back in her shadowy corner. The sound of violins came softly from the distance; below them was the muffled beating of the surf against the rocks; an unusual spell of silence lay upon the little group.

"Woodruff, tell us a story," said Billy suddenly.

"Yes, do"—"About South America"—"An adventure"—"No, a love story," chorused the others. The girl in the shadowy corner said nothing, but Woodruff's eyes turned to her for one brief instant before he spoke.

"Well—it isn't really a story; there isn't enough of it," he began. "There was a fellow down there. I knew him pretty well, better than any one else did, I think. He lived in South America—had been there for a long time—and when we began on the bridge he went out to the mountains with us. He was an odd sort of a chap and hadn't much to say to the rest of the boys. He used to go off by himself and smoke in the moonlight. Some way it was sitting here in the moonlight that made me think of him.

"Well, one night he told me his story. He had been in love with a girl in—Brazil, we will say. To hear him rave about her you would think she was the only woman in the world. He thought she loved him—she said she did—but they were not formally engaged because, while she was wealthy, he had only his profession. One day, when affairs were at this stage, he received two letters, one from a syndicate of wealthy men offering him an opportunity that meant an assured future, the other from the widow of an old friend, asking for an interview, and saying that she would be at his office that afternoon. She came and told her story. She had two little children and it seems they were pretty badly off.

"Well, this fellow was so overjoyed at his own good fortune—because now he could marry the girl—that he promised to do what he could for the poor woman. At that—she had been having a pretty hard time, you must remember—she broke down completely, fell on her knees and thanked him, and all that. Of course, the fellow was pretty well embarrassed and tried to lift her up again, and just as they were in the midst of it the door opened and who should walk in but the girl and her aunt."

He paused. There was a little tense sound from the shadowy corner. The others waited with breathless interest.

"Well, go on. What happened then?" asked Billy eagerly.

Woodruff rose and pushed back his chair sharply. "That was all," he continued slowly. "She wouldn't hear his explanation. He left without seeing her. He took it pretty hard. You see, she had filled his life so completely that when she went there wasn't much left."

The little group relaxed. "She wasn't worth it," exclaimed one girl indignantly.

"Poor chap," said Billy thoughtfully, his fat face unusually solemn.

"You must admit, though, that it did look queer," said another judicially.

The strains of a twostep floated invitingly through the windows. "Come on," called a couple from the doorway. And with much laughing adjustment of partners the little group joined the dancers inside.

When they were alone, the girl in the shadow leaned forward slightly.

"They were right. She was not worthy of it," she said bitterly, "but perhaps she suffered too."

Woodruff stopped in his walk up and down the veranda. "Then why didn't she answer his letters—make some sign?" he asked grimly.

"Perhaps she, the girl, was too proud at first, and influenced by others, and it might have been—that—afterward—she was afraid—he didn't care."

"But if she cared wouldn't she at least have spoken to him—have given him a chance—when she did see him?" he went on relentlessly.

The girl in the shadow rose and stepping forward with unconscious grace held out both hands impulsively. She was very pale, but the dark eyes were full of a sweet, tender light.

"Perhaps she did not see him," she whispered tremulously.

The twostep crashed to a triumphant close, and Billy, more breathless than ever, peered shortsightedly into the soft darkness outside.

"You two missed it," he panted, mopping his rosy face energetically. "That was great music. Why didn't you try it?"

"We preferred to discuss the man in South America," laughed Robert Woodruff contentedly.

Shooting Crocodiles In India.

Shooting crocodiles in India is a little like shooting mud turtles. A hunter describes the sport: "We suddenly came on our first crocodile about a mile from camp, asleep on the bank, with its mouth open, not more than twenty yards from us. It started to get away, but I fired two shots as quickly as I could get them off, the first into its mouth and the second into its neck as it turned its head. That stopped it effectually, and it never got into the water. The next day we found another crocodile, and my friend got it just above the shoulder. This was not enough to stop it, but we both fired as it was getting into the water, and one bullet hit it in front of the quarters. They sometimes come up again when wounded, so we waited about twenty minutes, and then looking about I saw it lying on its back at the bottom of the stream. It looked dead enough, so we got hold of the end of the tail and pulled it ashore. We gave it two more shots, one in the neck and the other in the middle of the back, and it then still had vitality enough to bite a paddle in two, though the legs were paralyzed and it could not move."

Diagnosed Her Case.

A famous American physician was summoned to the bedside of an elderly grande dame of distinguished name and many millions and who is one of the leaders of American society. The physician examined her carefully. Then he said:

"You must get up every morning at 6 o'clock. Take for breakfast a cup of weak tea and two pieces of dry toast. From 9 to 11 exercise, either walking or sweeping or dusting. At noon lunch on a slice of cold meat, filtered, uniced water and stale bread. Don't sleep in the afternoon; exercise again. For dinner take nothing but a little meat, a vegetable and toast; no sweets, no wines, no social dissipation of any kind."

The eyes of the grande dame flashed with fire as she said:

"But, doctor, do you comprehend my position? Do you know who I am?"

"Perfectly, madam," answered the physician. "You are an old woman with a sour stomach."—New York Press.

Where Bird Seeds Come From.

What we call "canary seed" is the seed of a kind of grass, and all of it used in this country is imported from Europe.

Although the plant that produces the rape seed supplied to canaries is grown in the United States to some extent for fodder, all of this kind of seed required for the feeding of cage birds is imported.

Rape seed comes mainly from Abyssinia and India, where the plant that produces it is cultivated for oil and also used as a condiment.

Hemp seed, likewise fed to cage birds, is produced quite largely in Missouri and adjacent states.

THEIR HONEYMOON

By Harriet G. Canfield

Copyright, 1905, by Harriet G. Canfield

"Jack, dear, wasn't it awful?" she whispered.

"Why, no, Beth! I rather liked it."

"'Liked it!' My hat is full of rice and your shoulders are simply covered with it. The publicity of it, Jack! If they'd only let us slip off quietly! Now every one will know that we're just married. You mustn't pay any attention to me! You must read your paper, and then"—

"'And then?'" smiling whimsically.

"Why, then you must go into the smoking car, dear."

When Jack abandoned his paper for a cigar the old lady behind Beth leaned forward. "Excuse me," she said, "but are you going far?"

"Yes, a long distance." Then the kind old face won her confidence, and she added volubly: "My husband has a farm out west. We are going there now, but we intend to stop at several places on the way."

"I was thinking," the old lady said, "of the many bridal couples that have passed over this road. How many of them, I wonder, are as happy now as they dreamt they'd be?"

"Oh, many, I hope," said the little bride wistfully. "Don't you think so?"

"It all depends. Of course the honeymoon can't last forever. A man may love his wife better every day—he probably does—but he forgets to tell her so, and a woman's heart is a curious thing. She can't live on faith and apple dumplings." Then she added, "My dear, if your husband ever forgets to show you any of the little signs of affection I want you to remember that he loves you just the same and believes in your love for him, but, being a man, he isn't continually looking for a sign."

"Thank you," Beth whispered gratefully, "and I'll remember."

The old lady left the car at the next station, and Jack returned.

In less than two months Beth was the established mistress of the farmhouse, though Jack's Aunt Mehitabel, who had ruled there so long, was loath to relinquish her scepter.

In Aunt Hitty's presence Beth's spirits were strangely subdued. Even the Swedish girl in the kitchen felt the depressing influence and hummed a dirge whenever Aunt Hitty entered her domain.

The weeks went by, and the little wife's happiness was seriously in danger. Her nature was an active one, but Jack's aunt opposed her every effort to be useful. When alone with her husband Beth was happy; their honeymoon had not waned. She longed to tell the kind old lady so. But Jack could not often be with her. The farm work demanded his attention. Once, when she supposed Aunt Hitty was taking her afternoon nap, Beth gave way to her feelings, and, burying her face in Jack's old coat, she cried as if her heart would break.

That evening, as she sat on the wide porch, waiting for Jack to join her, she overheard Aunt Hitty talking to him.

"She is so utterly incompetent," Aunt Hitty was saying, "and so childish! This afternoon I heard her crying—actually crying! I often wonder why you married her, John."

"Because I loved her—that is sufficient, I think," Jack answered. "Poor little girl—crying, was she?"

Then he came out and found Beth, standing white and still in the moonlight.

"This is a lonesome place, isn't it, dear?" he said, very gently. "I think it would do you good to return Mrs. Lennox's call tomorrow. It will cheer her up, and Tom too."

Mrs. Lennox and son seemed glad to see them and insisted upon keeping Beth until after tea. "You needn't come for her, Mr. Bradley," Tom's mother said. "My son will take her home."

This was the beginning of the great intimacy between the two families.

Jack was very busy on the farm, but young Lennox had more time at his disposal. He frequently drove over for Beth and brought her home in the moonlight. Jack rejoiced in their friendship and had no thought of jealousy until Aunt Hitty said:

"Beth is never happy unless she is with Mr. Lennox. I'm sure it doesn't look well for her to ride with him as often as she does." Jack laughed at the idea, but it came again and again until he imagined that Beth shrank from his caresses, and he resolved not to annoy her in the future. His wife felt that the honeymoon was waning at last and bravely tried to follow the old lady's advice and believe that Jack still loved her.

By and by the grain rose and fell in golden waves and the sun beat pitilessly down on the tired men toiling in the harvest fields. In the midst of it all Jack succumbed to the heat and had to be helped to the house. Aunt Hitty took immediate possession of him and prescribed rest in a darkened room. He slept heavily for some time, and when he opened his eyes Beth was bending over him.

"Jack, dear," she said, "is there nothing I can do for you?"

"Nothing," he answered stiffly. "I shall be all right in a day or two. All that worries me is the wheat. It's sure to rain before long, and there's no one to take my place in the field. Tom Lennox can't spare one of his men, and I wouldn't ask him to."

Beth waited until his tired eyes closed again and then stole from the room. An hour later Mrs. Lennox welcomed her in astonishment.

"What brought you out in this fearful heat?" she asked.

Beth told of Jack's sudden illness and the great need of help.

"And now," she said, "I want to hire out to Jack, and I want you to help me."

"You want to 'hire out!'" Mrs. Lennox gasped. "What do you mean, child?"

"I know there's not much I can do," she said humbly, "but I found some boy's clothes hanging in the wash house, and if you will help me take them up a little I'm sure we can make them fit. Don't say you won't help me, for there's nothing I can do for Jack if I stay a home." And in spite of Mrs. Lennox's objections Beth won her consent.

After dinner, while Aunt Hitty rested, grudgingly resigning her patient to his wife's tender mercies a messenger came with a note for Beth, urging her immediate presence at the Lennox farm.

"Come prepared to stay two days," Mrs. Lennox had written. She read it aloud to Jack.

"I suppose you want to go?" he asked.

"Oh, so much, dear!"

"Very well. But if I were in your place, Beth," he said dryly, "I'd drop the 'dear.' It doesn't sound well under the circumstances."

Beth's lips quivered, but she tried to smile.

"Perhaps it does sound silly, now that our honeymoon's over," she said bravely, and then hurried from the room.

"'Over,' she said. Yes, it is over," he murmured feebly and turned his face to the wall.

In the middle of the afternoon one of the hired men came to the house and asked to see Mr Bradley.

"There's a kid here," he said, "that wants to hire out."

"Where does he come from?" Jack asked in surprise.

"From some place beyond Lennox's, I guess. He says he wants to sleep an' eat home, so it can't be fur off. Shall I tell him he can stay, sir?"

"I am only too glad to get him," Jack replied.

When the men left the field at supper time the new hand was very tired. "He seemed likely to drop before he got home," they told Jack.

"Poor little chap," said one of them. "He ain't used to workin' so hard. If the rain holds off a day longer, sir, we'll get the wheat all cut."

The rain did hold off until evening of the next day, and the wheat was cut and shocked, when one of the men came running to the house for help.

"The little chap is down there in the field, with Jim—sick," he said. "Shall I hitch up and take him home?"

"No," Jack said. "Bring him up here. It will rain before you could get started."

There was something strangely familiar in the pathetic little figure they laid so carefully on the bed.

"If we can do anything for him, jest call us," Jim said.

Jack stooped and untied the big straw hat from the boyish head; then his face grew white, for Beth's soft, brown hair, released from bondage, streamed over the pillow, and Beth's blue eyes gazed into his, without the faintest sign of recognition.

"Beth," he cried, "my little Beth!" The restless head turned on the pillow, and the pale lips murmured: "Say you'll help me, Mrs. Lennox. I want to help Jack!"

Kneeling beside her, Jack kissed the little hands and sobbed aloud. Then the voice went on, with many pauses: "Yes, the honeymoon is over, but Jack loves me just the same. Sometimes—I wish—he'd tell me so—just once more."

Aunt Hitty had entered the room unnoticed. She started now, at the sound of her own name. Beth was living it over—all the weariness and heartache. "Aunt Hitty," she wailed, "I've tried so hard to please her—so hard; she doesn't love me—she never will!"

The tears rained down Aunt Hitty's face. "I didn't know," she said, "I never realized!" All that night she watched with Jack beside Beth's bed, while the rain beat against the windows, and the wind moaned through the trees. But when day dawned, all was still; the sunlight touched Beth's face and wakened her. Her eyes sought Jack's inquiringly, then rested there, in sweet content.

"I dreamed," she said, while he held her tenderly in his strong arms, "I dreamed that our honeymoon was just beginning." And Jack said reverently, "Please God, it is."

Guiglini.

Guiglini, the great tenor, was once playing Pollio to Mme. Titien's Norma. In one scene the Druid priestess summons an assembly together by the sound of a gong to decide on the punishment to be inflicted on a guilty person unnamed. Titien struck the gong with such force that in throwing back the drumstick she caught Guiglini on the nose and made it bleed. The singer was furious. He swore that he would never play in "Norma" again and insisted that the offending drumstick should be solemnly locked up. The opera was so popular that it was necessary to give it sometimes, but the tenor would not hear of appearing in it. Consequently Signor Corsi was announced to sing in his place. The house was very full, and the opera went splendidly until the time came for Pollio's entrance. No Pollio appeared. The disturbed manager flew to Guiglini's dressing room and found him hastily putting on Corsi's dress in a great hurry to come in for the applause he heard coming from the front. The audience was so delighted when he came on at last that it willingly forgave the delay. Titien struck the gong with her hand instead of the drumstick, and the opera ended magnificently.

A Storm.

The general public is of the belief that the word "storm" simply implies a precipitation of some kind, either rain, snow or sleet, when, in fact, in a scientific sense the word "storm" means "wind in motion," and when a storm is mentioned by the weather bureau it is expected that the winds will be high regardless of the attending conditions. —Toronto Mail.

When Wooing Jane

By FANNIE HAESLIP LEA

Copyright, 1905, by Fannie Haeslip Lea

Jane came slowly down the stairway, hesitated a moment at the library door, then gave herself a mental push and entered.

"I'm sorry I've kept you waiting," she said sweetly, trailing her violet chiffons across the polished floor. The big man beside the fireplace ignored preliminaries. He looked from her eyes to the cluster of double violets on her breast.

"I see you got my flowers—and the message."

She nodded. "The violets are dear—and I'm sorry you're going away. It isn't for long, is it?" with timid hesitation.

"For good and all. I leave tonight on the 11 o'clock train, so that I haven't much time."

"Oh, tonight!" said Jane and sat down with apparent indifference and a real need for support.

He leaned one elbow on the mantelshelf and towered over her.

"They've given me a splendid place in South Carolina. It's what I have been waiting for, and it's come like shot. I only got the appointment today."

"I congratulate you," said Jane, wondering what there was in the world to live for, after all.

He looked at her for a moment in silence, and she looked at her violets through a queer grayish mist.

"Jane," he said at last, "you know what it is I want to ask you, don't you?"

Jane's heart missed a beat unaccountably, then throbbed like mad to make up for lost time. She tried to speak.

"Ja-ane," called a voice in the hall. "Where are you, Jane?"

"She's in the library," Jane heard her sister answer. "Sister, here's Lilian."

"Just a minute," pleaded Jane half aloud and ran out of the room.

Thurston heard a murmur of voices in the hall.

"I won't stay—no, indeed, I won't," said one, and another, Jane's own, answered—he realized with satisfaction, not quite regretfully—"I wish you would."

There was a soft flurry of skirts, a nervous little laugh, and Jane came slowly back into the room.

"It was Lilian," she explained. "We run in on each other at all hours, and she didn't know you were here, so she wouldn't"—

"I haven't much time," said Thurston gently. "Let's not waste it on Lilian. Do you remember what I was saying?"

Jane remembered.

"Tell me, then," said the man, "is it worth while my saying it—don't we"—

"Some one's coming," breathed Jane, and Thurston released her hands just in time.

"Jane," said a mild voice from the door, "the maid said your mother was here. Why do you have the room so dark, child? I can't see a thing. Why don't you light another lamp?"

"Oh, Aunt Jane," cried her namesake, stepping forward with weak effusiveness and presenting a dutiful cheek to be kissed. "This is Mr. Thurston—you remember him, don't you?"

"Oh, yes," said Aunt Jane, "yes, indeed. I suppose you're one of the Indiana Thurstons? I had a very dear friend once, Harriet Barnes, who married a Thurston from Indiana. Any connection of yours?"

"Not that I know of," rejoined Thurston, with tense politeness. "We are a New York family."

"I never heard of that branch," said Aunt Jane, with an air that discredited it at once. "Where did you say your mother was, Janie?"

"Upstairs, dear Aunt Jane. She'll be so glad"—

"Are you quite well, Janie?" asked the old lady suddenly. "Your cheeks are so flushed and your hands are quite cold; you're not shivering, are you? She's such an imprudent thing, Mr. Thurston."

"Aunt Jane!" called a voice from the head of the stairway. And Aunt Jane departed.

They waited till the door had closed behind her. "Another half hour gone," said Thurston, with angry tenderness. "Your hands are cold and your cheeks the prettiest pink. Is it because you"—

"Oh, wait," she pleaded, drawing away from him. "I'm sure I heard some one in the hall—please."

"I don't care if the whole world were just outside the door, and it apparently is," said Thurston. "I want you to answer the question I've been trying to ask all the evening—will you"—

"There is some one," whispered Jane hysterically, and flinging herself into a chair just as Bobby Martin, noisily cheerful and sure of welcome, burst into the room.

"Just got a wire," he cried gayly. "Passed my exams, Jane. I knew you'd be dying to hear, so I thought I'd run over and let you know. Hello, Thurston! Isn't it bully, Jane? I'm going up next week."

"How do you do?" said Thurston furiously.

"Perfectly fine," said Jane, endeavoring vainly to inject some enthusiasm into her tone. "You can't think how glad I am, Bobby."

"I knew you'd say so," Bobby agreed cheerfully, coiling his awkward length into the Morris chair. "But I tell you it was no joke, cramming for those beastly things—came near flunking the German—ach du lieber six pages of translation. Ever think an exam, Thurston?"

"No," said Thurston savagely.

"Bully for you! I say, Jane, there's a fellow in the crew says he thinks I might get on if I train hard enough, and I'm going to try for end on the varsity."

"That will be nice," said Jane weakly.

"Nice! It'll be great if I can do it. I say, you're looking mighty fine tonight, Jane; been rubbing your cheeks? Your eyes are as shiny"—

"How mean, Bobby! Are they generally so dull?" Jane giggled nervously.

"Why did you look at the clock, Mr. Thurston?"

"My train leaves at 11," said Thurston gloomily.

"Going away, Thurston?" queried Bobby, with interest. "Where?"

"South Carolina."

"Mr. Thurston is leaving on—to live there," put in Jane hopefully.

"Oh, I say, that's great." Her effort died unnoticed. "South Carolina's a fine old place. I was there one summer. I tell you what, Thurston, they have the prettiest girls you ever saw. Jolliest, brightest things—not a bit stiff. A fellow can have a mighty good time there."

"I suppose so," said Jane stiffly. "I dare say you had a good time there yourself. Was that the summer you were expelled from college? I should not think, Bobby, that you would care to talk about it."

"Well, for heaven's sake!" cried the injured Bobby.

Thurston looked at the clock again, with ostentation.

"Won't you play the 'Serenade' for me?" asked Jane desperately.

"You know I can't play anything but 'The Good Old Summer Time,' with two fingers, and I'm too shy to play before people."

"I meant Thurston, Bobby," explained the girl, with suspicious sweetness. "I know what you can play."

Thurston stalked grimly over to the piano and dropped his hands on the keys with a thud, while Bobby sat back complacently in his chair and Jane fidgeted in hers. He struck several heavy chords, then began the tender monotone of the "Serenade," but the nervous irritation, vibrating to his finger tips, jarred the harmony and Thurston, breaking off with a discordant crash, swung round upon the stool.

"I can't play tonight," he said viciously, returning to the fireplace.

"Why, you were doing fine," said Bobby, with polite surprise. "You're too modest about it."

Thurston set his teeth, squared his shoulders and looked at the clock. It was nigh upon the eleventh hour.

"Mr. Martin," he began grimly, "I am leaving upon the 11 o'clock train tonight. This is the last opportunity I shall have of seeing Miss Wallis. When you came in I was about to ask her to marry me. I am going to ask her now. Will you defer your visit, or do you care to hear me?" Jane gasped; so did Bobby, the good hearted blunderer.

"Oh, I say," he began, springing to his feet in direst confusion, "I'm no end sorry. I wouldn't have done it for the world. What a duffer I've been. I'm awfully sorry."

"So am I," said Thurston.

"I hadn't an idea"—

"So it seems," interrupted the older man, with suppressed rage, "but since I have suggested one to you"—

"Oh, Bobby," cried Jane, with a hysterical little laugh.

"Young ass," muttered Thurston, taking a step toward Jane. Bobby fled incontinently and the door slammed behind him.

Thurston caught Jane and the violets and the violet chiffons in his arms, crushing them close.

"We don't have to say it; we know," he declared exultingly.

"Yes," said Jane with a laugh that was more than half a sob, "but we wanted a chance to say it anyhow."

A bit of coal fell from the fire to the hearth with a tiny crash.

"Was that a step in the hall?" murmured Jane. But she did not move.

The Antalgica
Or Vegetable Pain Reliever
was introduced to the public in 1848, since which time thousands of bottles have been sold each year to an appreciative public, which is a good evidence of its merits. It is adapted to so many ailments it should be in every household, for it cures all kinds of pains both internal and external. For Bronchial affections it is unrivaled by any article in the market. It is a sure cure for Cholera Morbus and Dysentery, if taken in season, also for Coughs. It is an effective remedy for rheumatic affections, stiff joints, swelled limbs, sprains, cramps, tooth ache and many other ills to which the flesh is heir. Try it and it will do you good. It is sold at 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle by The Quimby Pharmacy, LeGro's Drug Store and the proprietor,

AGED RES'DENT DEAD.

Mrs. Mary Whitman Passes Away at Advanced Age of 96.

Mrs. Mary Whitman died in Monson Sunday, having passed her 96th milestone. She had been in failing health for several months, but death was mainly due to old age.

Mrs. Whitman was born in Stafford, Ct., July 13, 1809, the daughter of Joseph and Polly (Carpenter) Webber. She married January 27, 1835, James Whitman of Belchertown, to which town her parents had previously removed. Her husband, born April 22, 1807, was the son of Captain James Whitman of Belchertown, and grandson of Dea. John Whitman, who died at the remarkable age of 107 years He was also a relative of Marcus Whitman, the hero who saved Oregon to our country. The couple resided on a farm in Belchertown after marriage till April, 1871, when they removed to Palmer and purchased the Caswell place at Shearer's Corner, where Mr. Whitman died February 24, 1881 The widow was left with a comfortable property gathered by the economy of many years. After her husband's death she built a cozy cottage on Walnut street in Palmer, where she resided till some three or four years ago, when she went to reside with her nephew, Martin Webber of Monson, where she remained till her demise.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Whitman were formerly members of the Congregational church at Belchertown, but on their removal to Palmer they became connected with the Advent church here. Mrs. Whitman was quiet in her tastes, kindly in the bestowment of her gifts and an exemplary Christian, beloved by all who knew her best.

The funeral was held Tuesday at the home of her nephew in Monson, Rev. L. L. Baker officiating. Burial was in the Belchertown cemetery near Bondsville.

Academy Notes.

Young, '08, has returned to school after a short vacation.

Homer and Briggs spent Sunday in Somersville, Ct.

Miss Blanche Ritter, '06, was pleasantly surprised at her home last Tuesday evening by a number of her schoolmates Refreshments were served and the evening was passed in playing games suitable to the occasion.

The basketball practice is to start soon in the gymnasium. Capt. Rourke will issue a call for candidates next week. Manager Briggs has arranged a long schedule, which contains games with the fastest high school teams of this section. The season will open on December 9th, when the team will play Warren high school.

Lino will meet this evening and will carry out the following program: Recitations, J. English, F. Holloway; reading, Hanley; news items, Salisbury; debate—"Resolved, that Socialism is a better form of government for the United States than the present form," affirmative, Purinton, Beardslee; negative, Page, Brainerd.

The "County Fair," given under the direction of the senior class last Friday evening, proved a great success and was carried out before a large gathering. The exhibition of the "half man and half beast," attracted many, while others found much pleasure in the "side show," the special feature of which was "Ki Ki," the wonderful water drinker. The chapel was prettily decorated in the class colors; blue and white.

Night Watchman Needed.

There seems to be considerable comment over the fact that no night watchman has been appointed by the selectmen, notwithstanding there has been much rowdyism about the streets recently. Within a few days Officer Osborne has been called out several times by individuals to quiet disturbances about the town. Meetings at the Congregational church have been disturbed by a gang of boys, who perhaps call themselves young men, who make the night hideous with yelling, singing, firing of revolvers, etc. This matter has been brought before the board of selectmen, and one, if not two of them have favored the appointment of a night watchman, but for some reason no action has been taken. Unless the selectmen make some move in this direction and attempt to prevent these disturbances, people residing in the north end of the town will certainly take some action in the matter. Since the recent attempt at robbery it would seem even more necessary to have night protection here as well as in other towns.

25th Wedding Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Cavanaugh celebrated in a quiet manner the 25th anniversary of their marriage yesterday at their home on Pleasant street They were married in Monson in St Patrick's church by Rev. Fr. McCarthy, who was then pastor of the church. Mr Cavanaugh is superintendent of the Helmann & Lichten straw shop and is a well-know business man. Mrs Cavanaugh was Miss Mary Grady of this town. During the day and evening many friends and relatives called to offer congratulations. Mr. and Mrs. Cavanaugh were the recipients of many gifts, chiefly of silver Several telegrams were received from relatives and friends from other cities and towns.

C W. Stoughton of New York has been spending several days at the home of his aunt, Mrs. Samuel Brown. Mr. Stoughton is of the firm of Stoughton & Stoughton, architects, who are designing the new Christian college in Canton, China. He has recently returned from a visit to China and a trip around the world, and gave a very interesting talk in the hall of the Hitchcock free academy last evening, describing scenes in the far East. His special subjects were, "Railroading in Japan," "A Chinese City," and "From Singapore to Mandalay," and his graphic descriptions closely held the attention of the audience which was composed of teachers and pupils of the Academy and Center schools and townspeople. There have been on exhibition at the town library this week curios and relics brought by Mr. Stoughton from China, Japan, Egypt, India and Greece. These have been seen with great interest by teachers and pupils of the schools and others.

BELCHERTOWN.

Honey Found in Chimney.

For some little time Dr S. W. Perry has been annoyed by the presence of bees in a chimney in his house. Yesterday William Fisher made an investigation and found a quantity of honeycomb unfilled and a quantity of honey. The presence of the bees in the chimney was explained by Mr. Fisher as being because hollow trees had nearly all been cut down in the immediate vicity.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Towne will spend the winter in New York.

Mrs. Houston of Springfield, accompanied by her parents, Mr. and Mrs Lyman Pomeroy of Sunderland, spent a part of the week with friends in town.

Samuel Wiley, a wholesale fruit merchant, died in New York Saturday. Mr. Wiley was a native and former resident of Belchertown, where he leaves a number of relatives.

At the annual meeting of the Arts and Crafts Society recently, these officers were elected: President, Miss Baxter; vice president, Mrs D. P. Spencer; secretary, Mrs H D Longley; treasurer, Miss Lillian Miller Nineteen new names were added to the membership.

Enoch Burnett of Springfield, a native and former resident of Belchertown, has presented to the Historical Society a model of a gold washer made by him from the one made and used by Mr Burnett when he was in California in 1849 With the model are two bags for holding the gold dust.

The Belchertown friends and former parishioners of Rev. Vernon C. Harrington, assistant pastor of the Presbyterian church in Cleveland, will be pleased to hear that he is to have a year's study and travel in Europe through the appreciation and generosity of the church in Cleveland. Mr. Harrington had received a call from a flourishing church in Vermont and had already dated his resignation to the church in Cleveland for November 1, when on the eve of his birthday, last week, the Cleveland people so handsomely acknowledged their love and appreciation of Mr Harrington's seven years of service. Belchertown was the first parish Mr. Harrington served, having gone there immediately after his graduation from the Theological Seminary at Andover.

WARE.

Asleep in Wrong House.

Superintendent of Streets R C. Fairbanks of Ware was greatly surprised Wednesday morning about 5 o'clock when he found a stranger asleep upon the couch in his dining-room. The stranger was in turn as much amazed when awakened by Mr. Fairbanks, who demanded an explanation. He became rather insolent and gave Mr. Fairbanks a tussle while the police were being summoned. B. W. Buckley, a member of the force, living near, took charge of the intruder and locked him up. In court he gave his name as George E Gordon of Worcester, but claimed to have worked in New Braintree for the past six weeks. He was paid off Tuesday and went to Ware that afternoon. He supposed that he was at home when he entered the house by a back door left unlocked, and attributed his mistake to a too liberal allowance of whiskey His previous record was investigated and found very good, and after he had pleaded guilty to a charge of disturbing the peace, Judge H. C. Davis imposed a fine of $10, which was paid.

Fire in Cotton Mill.

A small blaze in the picker-room in the No. 1 mill of the Otis company Monday caused considerable excitement for a time. Some men, under the direction of W. H. Morgan, overseer, were opening large bales of cotton, which were emptied into a large room below to age and to air. About 60 bales, or 30,000 pounds, had been put down through the trap-door when, in some way, a bale that was being opened caught fire, and a part of it that was ablaze fell through the trap. The cotton below was all ablaze in an instant The room was fire-proof, so that nothing but the cotton could burn, but it was some little time before the men could extinguish the blaze by means of the hose. The building was in no way damaged, but the 60 bales of cotton will require considerable attention before they can be used. No cause for the combustion can be located, but such a fire starting is not an uncommon occurrence.

House Burned.

The two-story dwelling house on West Main street, owned and occupied by Mrs. Bridget Canavan and her two daughters, Lucy and Elizabeth, was destroyed by fire Tuesday morning about 7. The fire started in the kitchen and spread so rapidly that the family lost nearly everything The basement was occupied by Mr and Mrs Blackstone, and their household goods were badly damaged by water, as the firemen played four streams upon the fire for a long time. The house was insured for $2000 in the agency of George D Storrs, while Mrs. Canavan carried $1500 on the contents with the agency of John H. Schoonmaker. In each case the loss will amount to about 75 per cent. Mr. Blackstone had no insurance.

Mrs. M. J. McDonough has resigned her position as telegraph operator, to take effect to-morrow

Mrs. David Milliken of Nashua, N. H., and Mrs J. B. Burlingame of Three Rivers spent Monday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Buffington.

The selectmen have appointed the following precinct officers for next Tuesday: Ballot clerks, D. Otis Holden, James T. Feehan; assistant clerks, H. O. Robinson, E. P. Morse; checkers, A. P. Irwin, L. S. Charbonneau; counters, H. H Turner, Fred Sharpe, Joseph St. Onge, Charles M. Lindsey, Edward J. McBride, William B. Kelly, Moise Deslauriers, George H Haley, ballot box, L Philip Deslauriers.

The fact that many natural stones swell slightly when passing from a dry to a wet condition at the same temperature, and shrink correspondingly when the process is reversed, has also been recognized in numerous tests at the Watertown arsenal. In the report for 1890 it is stated that a very decided swelling of the stones was observed in most cases after soaking them for a time in water, and that this effect seemed to increase as the temperature rose.

Knew Him.

The man got into an electric car comfortably filled and crowded into a seat next to a sharp faced woman in the corner. He took out a newspaper and shoving it half across her face he began to read. She stood it for about five minutes.

"Excuse me," she said then. "Are you a married man?"

He dropped his paper and looked at her.

"Yes," he replied curtly.

"I thought so," she went on. "Isn't your wife a little woman that won't say her soul's her own and lets you impose on her all you want to?"

"I don't impose on her, madam," he said stiffly.

"You don't let her impose on you much I expect."

The man tried to read his paper again

"I suppose she carries in the coal, makes the fires, gets your slippers, does the marketing, mends your clothes, tends to the children, submits like a lamb when you find fault and is generally an excellent wife isn't she?"

"Madam"—he began.

"Don't say a word," she interrupted; "I'm not your wife am I?"

"No, and I am—"

"That's all right and as I am not I don't propose to have you sitting down on me and crowding me up in this corner till I can't breathe without wheezing like a steam engine. Why don't you get out and walk?"—and the passengers sniggered so that he did get out.—Life.

Ann's Age.

For the benefit of those who found Ann's age too easy to decide, the problem is presented in a little more complicated form A local professional man declares that it took him 50 hours to solve it when it was propounded thus: Mary is twice as old as Ann was when Mary was as old as Ann is now. When Ann is as old as Mary is now their combined ages will be 54 How old is each of them? This is for the first class in algebra, though it can be done by arithmetic if you can carry some of the puzzling parts of it "in your head" If you don't get it in 10 minutes you lose. A "Constant Reader" wrote to the Kansas City Journal this week asking for a solution of the Ann's age problem, and this is the answer that the Journal's financial editor gave: Ann is 63 years of age. Obviously, Ann is as old now as Mary was when Mary was half as old as her present age, less the age of Ann at the time she was half as old as Mary was when she was twice as old as Ann is, unless you figure that Ann was half as old as if she were twice Mary's present age, less Ann's age when she was twice as old as Mary is now, or 24 Twenty-four and 15 are 39, and 24 and 39 are 63, which represents Mary's present age substracted from half of Mary's age at the time she was half as old as Ann I would not solve this problem for any one but a constant reader.

Mrs. J. M. Barton, of the boarding house at 10 South Main street, says:—"I have as great faith in Doan's Kidney Pills to-day as I had three years ago when I procured them from LeGro's drug store and took a course of the treatment. Before I used them I had been troubled with a pain through my loins and kidneys. Going up or down stairs hurt me and made my back feel lame and sore. If I even sat in one position for any length of time my back ached badly. I commenced the use of Doan's Kidney Pills and they relieved me entirely of the trouble. I always recommend them to my friends. My husband has used Doan's Ointment and thinks it is a fine remedy. It almost instantly relieves any itchiness of the skin. Doan's Ointment and Doan's Kidney Pills do all that is claimed for them."

CHI-NAMEL

The Chinese Varnish Made to Walk Upon

MADE IN ALL COLORS
Cherry. Mahogany. Oak. Natural. Etc

For Floors, Bar Tops, Furniture and General Household Use.

Come to our store and get a sample of Chi-Namel applied to wood. Take it home and test it

First. Strike the wood sample a heavy blow with a hammer, and note that while the wood may be indented a quarter of an inch, the varnish has not marred or cracked. This proves that Chi-Namel is very elastic

Second. Place the wood sample in a tea kettle, and note that boiling water does not turn it white This proves that Chi-namel contains no rosin

Third. Apply whiskey This proves that Chi-Namel will stand upon bar tops.

Fourth. Allow a can of the varnish to stand open over night, and note that there is no evaporation. This proves that Chi-Namel contains no benzine.

Fifth. Spread varnish over flat surface, and brush in every direction, and note "self levelling" effect. This proves that all brush marks disappear, and the result will be pleasing no matter how inexperienced the applier may be.

Old floors can be made to look like new hard wood.

No need to buy new furniture.

Chi-Namel will make old furniture look BETTER than new furniture.

Take no substitute. We invite you to prove to yourself there is NOTHING "just as good as Chi-Namel."

The Best Blankets Made, at Lowest Prices Quoted by Any Store.

The best mills from Maine to California have been laid under tribute to provide our fall Blanket stock, and there is not a better stock anywhere. We have bought more Blankets than ever before, and we have obtained better Blankets for the same money than we have ever been able to get before. The varieties of different grades covers every possible Blanket need.

A fine Wool Blanket is cheapest in the end because, properly cared for it will long outlive one of cotton, and will give vastly greater comfort. But for many purposes Cotton Blankets are satisfactory. For those who want Cotton we are prepared to supply the best value obtainable. In the following list we mention some of our most popular numbers in both Wool and Cotton, and we confidently claim for them that equal values are not to be found elsewhere at the same prices.

Pres. Roosevelt on Political Integrity.

Above all we should treat with a peculiarly contemptuous abhorrence the man who, in a spirit of sheer cynicism, debauches either our business life or our political life.—President Roosevelt at Atlanta, Ga., Friday, Oct. 20, 1905.

THE LATE GOV. RUSSELL, DEMOCRAT
ON
Henry M. Whitney's Methods.

"If I had been Governor of this Commonwealth, I would under the circumstances disclosed by the Investigation, have vetoed that bill (the Henry M. Whitney West End Bill) as quickly as I could have put pen to paper. For I hold that it is far more important to guard sacredly the purity of legislation and to rebuke the lobby than that any measure of merit should be hastened in its passage. I hold that one of the highest duties of the Governor of the Commonwealth is to protect its fair name from legislative scandal and to protect the people from the improper control of legislation by secret influences."

THE SUPREME COURT OF MASS.
ON
Henry M. Whitney's Methods.

"The practice of procuring members of the Legislature to act under the influence of what they have eaten and drunk at houses of entertainment tends to render those of them who yield to such influences wholly unfit to act in such cases. They are disqualified from acting fairly toward interested parties or toward the public. The tendency and object of these influences are to obtain by corruption what it is supposed cannot be obtained fairly." (6 Allen, 159.)

HENRY M. WHITNEY SAYS:
"I freely admit giving the dinners and making use of the lobby. * * *"

Our Boston Letter

It tells about

Various Matters of Public Interest.

BOSTON, Nov 1 1905.

Not since 1891, when William E Russell was running for governor the second successful time, has there been such a campaign in Massachusetts in an off year as is going on now. With that exception there has not been such an off year since 1886, when Gov. Butler was making his unsuccessful effort to persuade the people of Massachusetts to re-elect him. Last year's presidential campaign was not as brisk in the Republican headquarters as this campaign in an off year. Not since 1892, probably, has Senator Lodge been so exercised over the result as he is this year. Last year he, in common with all other observers, was mightily deceived beforehand in regard to the actual situation He is therefore taking hold of the work this year as if the salvation of the state to the Republicans depended upon him. His attitude is in marked contrast to that of Senator Crane, who has not been heard from since he loaned his name to the Malone movement for attorney general until this morning when his name appears in an advertisement of prominent Republicans who are going to vote for Draper. But Lodge seems to feel that the responsibility for the state is upon him and he is working very hard.

This very fact gives a peculiar twist to the campaign. If Lodge feels responsible, if it will affect his prestige at Washington and at home, if this is going to show up as a great Lodge triumph if Guild and Draper are elected, then it will take him down a peg if his candidates are defeated. Consequently there has grown up and is spreading a feeling that Lodge is the issue in the campaign. It does not require long residence in this vicinity to learn that Lodge fails to command the approval of many Republicans and the consequence of this development of the campaign is to give a rallying point for the anti-Lodge Republicans. Votes will surely be cast for Whitney in order to rebuke Lodge. This is evident from repeated testimony from different quarters.

As matters look to-day, the chances seem to favor the election of Guild and Whitney Of course the different headquarters do not see it in that light. Republicans are figuring upon from 30 000 to 50,000 margin for Guild, and that, they are sure, will pull Draper through Everybody who is studying the situation agrees that Draper will be cut. The only question is how much. At the Democratic headquarters they have it that Bartlett and Whitney are sure. They profess that the current for Bartlett, though not as evident as that for Whitney, is equally strong and will appear at the polls Bartlett is reported to be making friends rapidly wherever he speaks and he will keep on the stump till election But, to the ordinary citizen, the evidences of Bartlett strength are materially less than the evidences that Whitney will run strongly against Draper. So many Republicans say that they will vote for him, and the testimony comes from so many different quarters that there must be something to it.

The hope of the Republicans in the fight for second place is that George Fred Williams will have followers enough to turn away from Whitney as many Democrats as he gains Republicans Some at the Republican headquarters are figuring in that way now. But the total of testimony is against that proposition. Whitney is unquestionably making telling speeches and the fact that such Republicans as Richard H Dana, president of the Civil-Service Reform Association, will vote for him, in spite of his state house record, indicates that that record has not made much of an impression upon the popular mind.

A singular feature of the situation is that the Democratic leaders of the past seem to be conspicuous by their absence. Josiah Quincy is married this afternoon and his busy-ness about domestic affairs must be his excuse for his abstention from politics. But Gaston is in the background. Thayer has done something, but not as much as when he was a candidate himself. Charles S. Hamlin, the man repeatedly snubbed by the Gaston element, is the one prominent Democrat who has put his pride and resentment in his pocket for the good of the party and the state, as he sees it, and given his services freely on the stump The two candidates are the principal campaigners and they seem to be making the most of their opportunities.

Indications point to a Democratic vote for Guild, even here in Boston, unless the exigencies of party politics compel all the Democrats to line up for either Fitzgerald or Donovan There is private information that many Democrats expect to vote for Guild. The indorsement of him by the Fall River labor leaders is regarded as quite a card and there is said to be a Democratic organization in Charlestown which will give him many votes. Thus far there has developed none of the antagonism to Guild which made it so hard for Bates last year. Records show that Guild has never been a vote getter, in the common sense of the word, but he promises to make a good score this year, and the average Democrat evidently expects to see Guild win. He is a good fellow; people like him because he is so genial, frank and hearty. Of course, Bartlett is strong just on that ground, and there is where the uncertainty, for some, is found. "If this thing keeps up Bartlett will squeeze in," says a Democratic observer to-day, which is only another form of saying that Guild has it as it stands to-day.

Meanwhile real state issues are neglected. Time is occupied with national affairs and Gamaliel Bradford's point is well taken that the off year which the people reserved for state issues by their 50,000 majority in 1896 against biennial elections' should be occupied by state business. What is the judgment of the people regarding the purchase of electric roads by steam roads? The issue was very sharp before the last Legislature and it promises to come before the next one, and there will be also the renewed fight over the granting of special charters to electric roads to run on private land. Shall there be a general law granting to these roads the right of eminent domain, or shall there be a special charter for every occasion, with a corrupt lobby and free spending of money at every revival of the issue? We hear almost nothing of the contest between George A Schofield and James F. Shaw in Essex county in their struggle for the Senate, but the corporation issue is there a leading feature of the campaign.

This same issue is likely to be involved in the speakership. Though there are in the field Walker of Brookline, Cole of Andover, Luce of Somerville, Peabody of Cambridge and Ward of Buckland, yet the real issue promises to come down to Walker and Cole, with the result very uncertain Cole is reported as claiming that the result is already sure for him, but the Walker supporters regard the outlook as very favorable for him. Already about all of the Republicans from Worcester county, where Walker's father, ex-Congressman Joseph Walker, lives, are said to be committed in writing to Walker, and he has strong support this way. The supporters of Luce and Peabody will eventually turn to Walker, and the Ward men are reckoned as likely to do the same thing It is impossible to say where all the corporation interest will line up, and there are yet facts sufficient for a reasonable prediction.

It is expected that there will be at the coming session of the Legislature about the usual dozen attacks upon the principles of the civil service. Some public spirited women in Boston and vicinity are interested in pure government sufficiently to look into the qualification of members of the Legislature Just how much they have actually done in this campaign, I cannot tell, but they took steps to put upon record every candidate for the Legislature as far as the candidates would reply to circulars. If there is an assured body of senators and representatives who will always sustain the civil service laws, and another body who are sure to oppose them, then that fixes two parts of the Senate and House and reduces the work upon the doubtful members to a smaller quantity. The women promise to count for something in the support of the merit system.

Boston Democrats are really more interested in the mayoralty than in the state campaign and their contest is hot. There is not yet any assurance that Speaker Frothingham will have sufficient independent support to elect him. Republicans speak well of him, but they seem to be doubtful whether it will be for his personal gain to have thrown down the speakership to take such a bird in the bush as the Republican nomination for the mayoralty.

To-day workmen are painting the old state house at the head of State street, and they are making a very queer looking thing of it, too. It will be a very light yellow with light brown trimmings. Surrounded by solid gray stone buildings, it looks wholly out of keeping and cheap The finish is not nearly dignified enough for the important historical character of the building.

Subway work progresses steadily, but not so as to be noticed much above ground. Doubtless the entire state observes that the suit case is still with us LANDON land and erected a large number of brick tenement houses in which the rent is from $1 75 to $2 25 per week.

Though it is a town of less than 3000 inhabitants, Hopedale has all the modern public improvements It has a complete sewer system which was built and is maintained by the Draper company; it has one of the finest systems of park roads in the state, water works, electric lights, public baths, parks, play grounds and public buildings What the town is to-day it was made by the Draper interests Both George Draper and his sons have shown the deepest interest in its development. The late George Draper gave the Town Hall, a magnificent granite structure; his sons, Eben S. Draper (the candidate for lieutenant governor) and George A Draper gave the beautiful Memorial church. Gen and Mrs. W. F Draper gave the beautiful marble fountain. The high school building was donated to the town by the companies. The company also gave land worth $5000 and about $5000 in cash to the Union church. J B. Bancroft, vice president of the Draper company, gave the town its library. One of the latest gifts is the Milford hospital, presented by Mr. and Mrs Eben S Draper unconditionally to the town of Milford. In construction and appointment this is as fine a hospital as any in the United States, the pride of the beneficiaries as well as the benefactors. This hospital stands immed*iately over the line from Hopedale, in a most beautiful locality with expansive* prospects in all directions, and is easily reached from the population centres. With an innate love for the town, all the members of the Draper family have maintained their homes in Hopedale; they were born and brought up there, they laid there the foundation for their success, they reside there most of the year, beside their employes.

The people of Hopedale are prosperous because they have good wages, no industrial strife and ideal home relations at the lowest cost. They are laboring under most propitious conditions, which is conducive of contentment. To the Draper interests must be given credit for the growth and wholesome development of the town, and one of the men to whose hands the management of these large industrial affairs is entrusted is the Republican candidate for Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts, Eben S Draper.

WALES.

George B. Clark of Main street is dangerously ill with a complication of diseases.

Mrs. H. E. Shaw and Miss Josie Church of Worcester spent two days in town this week.

Mr. and Mrs Dawes S Perry in the south part of the town are rejoicing over the birth of a ten-pound boy, who arrived Wednesday morning.

A representative lady of the Moulton family has been visiting several old residents in town preparatory to writing a history of the Moulton family

Rev W. E Waterbury of Springfield commenced his labors in the Baptist church last Sunday and held meetings every evening this week and will occupy the pulpit next Sunday. A good degree of interest is shown among the young people.

William Smikkie was brought into the district court in East Brookfield Wednesday morning by Constable Clarence L. Thompson on a charge of assault and battery on Jacub Godouski. He was fined $13 65, which he paid. The assault took place Saturday night and a warrant for the arrest of Smikkie was given to Mr. Thompson Sunday He chased his man through the woods, but lost track of him until he returned to Thorndike, where he was arrested Tuesday.

Consumption

¶ There is no specific for consumption. Fresh air, exercise, nourishing food and Scott's Emulsion will come pretty near curing it, if there is anything to build on. Millions of people throughout the world are living and in good health on one lung.

¶ From time immemorial the doctors prescribed cod liver oil for consumption. Of course the patient could not take it in its old form, hence it did very little good. They can take and tolerate it for a long time. There is no oil, not excepting butter, so easily digested and absorbed by the system as cod liver oil in the form of Scott's Emulsion, and that is the reason it is so helpful in consumption where its use must be continuous.

¶ We will send you a sample free.

¶ Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

No cocoa equals Lowney's in strength. Some are blacker—colored chemically—but inferior in real strength. Lowney's Cocoa is not loaded with ground cocoa-shells, flour, starch, or other adulterants.

It consists of nothing but the choicest cocoa beans ground to flour fineness.

The result is the most delicious, purest and finest flavored cocoa possible.

Such cocoa as Lowney's, if made abroad and duties paid, would cost double the Lowney price.

An Oily Chinaman

[Original.]

"Talk about the Chinamen," said the engineer after doing a little oiling and sitting down to enjoy his pipe while the steamer was rolling off twelve knots an hour, "Bret Harte hit 'em off just as they are in his 'Ah Sin.' They've got more smooth cunning about 'em than a detective. I'll not soon forget how one of 'em tried to 'do' us in the China sea away back before Uncle Sam thought of owning the Philippines. I was running the engine of a chunky little boat used for towing called the Polly, and we were making for Canton. Our stoker got sick, and we left him at Pontianak, Borneo, and took in his place Cheng Fen, the most whipped cur appearing Celestial I ever saw. He looked as if he wouldn't dare take a drink of water without asking permission.

"Pontianak, you know, is dead on the equator, and the southern end of the China sea is as measly a region for weather as you want to strike. The night we left port the sky looked so queer that we were kept on the watch for a big blow. The clouds were jagged, and the full moon rose red as an open furnace door. Going on deck for a breath of fresh air—it wasn't fresh anywhere, but was better up there than in the engine room—I watched the wriggling serpents the moon threw on the oily water, and as soon as I thought I could stand more of it below went down just in time to catch Cheng Fen monkeying with the machinery. I yelled at him to stop, and he turned his heathen face, full of injured innocence, and said in his pigeon English that a screw on the connecting rod seemed to be loose, and he was trying to fix it. I called the captain to the head of the companionway and told him the story, adding that something was wrong with the stoker and we'd better look out.

"'There's a junk been following in our wake,' he said, 'ever since we left Pontianak. I wonder if there's a plan among the copper colored devils to do us some damage?'

"When I went below again the stoker was looking dreamily at the steam gauge, and the machinery was all agog. I picked up a monkey wrench and hurled it at him, but he dodged, and I knew I'd better leave him to a more convenient time and attend to the engine. He had loosened so many screws and the whole machinery was so limber I had to stop her while I screwed up, and stop her again and again as I found more damage. The captain came down, and when he saw what was the trouble told me to go ahead screwing up while he threw the stoker overboard. He got a nasty wound from a knife, but succeeded in dumping the Chinaman.

"The captain was as nervy a man as ever lived. When he got on deck he sang out to me to come up as soon as I got the engine together. I did so, and there, about 600 yards behind us, was a sight to make my blood run cold. It was a junk loaded with a chattering, howling lot of Chinamen, pointing dead for us. Of course she was a pirate and was bent on taking our craft, and that meant murder for us. They had shipped one of their dirty lot, Cheng Fen, on us to loosen our engine so that they could overhaul us.

"'Got the engine all right?' asked the captain.

"'Yes,' I answered.

"'Are we gaining on 'em?

"I kept my eye on 'em for a time, and told him that it was an even thing between us, but I thought they were gaining on us slowly.

"'Very well,' he said in the same cool tone, 'go below and be prepared for quick work. Our only chance is to ram her, and when I call you come up prepared to fight. Some of 'em may jump aboard.'

"I confess I needed all the nerve I owned, for the prospect was bad. I hadn't got below before I felt the captain turning her in a semicircle, and pretty soon he gave me a signal to open up for all she was worth; then called for me to come up.

"The sight I saw I shall never forget. The captain had got position between the pirate and the moon, and the light showed the ugly villains almost as plain as day. Right out on the junk's bow stood Cheng Fen, who had, of course, been picked up, with the wickedest look on his face I ever saw. The pirates hadn't got on to our intention, but they did in about five seconds later, and their jubilant howls suddenly ceased. We were making all the headway we were capable of, and as we were a solid little craft the prospect for the pirates wasn't pleasant. They had their starboard bow toward us, and instead of taking the blow bow on their helmsman sheered off to port, enabling us to hit her amidships.

"I could see Cheng Fen, who seemed to be one of their principal men, running toward the probable striking point, and he got there just in time. We cut the junk in two like a piece of cheese and rode over her keel. Cheng Fen was the only one of 'em that got aboard of us. The captain cut him down with a cutlass, splitting his skull in the middle. In another minute the floating pirates began to climb out of the water. If we had had a crew we might have let 'em come up. As it was we had all we could do to keep 'em off. I felt all the while as if I was fighting a swarm of rattlesnakes. But at last there was none of 'em left and we steamed away, listening to the dismal howls of the yellow wretches, feeling comfortable that they hadn't put us in their places.

"That Cheng Fen was an oily dog." added the engineer sotto voce.

OPERATIONS AVOIDED

Two Grateful Letters from Women Who Avoided Serious Operations.—Many Women Suffering from Like Conditions Will Be Interested.

Margrite Ryan
Margret Merkley

When a physician tells a woman, suffering from ovarian or womb trouble, that an operation is necessary, it, of course, frightens her.

The very thought of the operating table and the knife strikes terror to her heart. As one woman expressed it, when told by her physician that she must undergo an operation she felt that her death knell had sounded.

Our hospitals are full of women who are there for ovarian or womb operations!

It is quite true that these troubles may reach a stage where an operation is the only resource, but such cases are much rarer than is generally supposed, because a great many women have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after the doctors had said an operation must be performed. In fact, up to the point where the knife must be used to secure instant relief, this medicine is certain to help.

The strongest and most grateful statements possible to make come from women who, by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, have escaped serious operations.

Margrite Ryan, Treasurer of St. Andrew's Society, Hotel English, Indianapolis, Ind., writes of her cure as follows:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I cannot find words to express my thanks for the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did me. The doctor said I could not get well unless I had an operation for ovarian and female troubles. I knew I could not stand the strain of an operation and made up my mind I would be an invalid for life. Hearing how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had saved other women from operations I decided to try it, and in less than four months I was entirely cured, and words fail to express my gratitude."

Miss Margret Merkley of 275 3d Street, Milwaukee, Wis., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Loss of strength, extreme nervousness, severe shooting pains through the pelvic organs, cramps, bearing down pains and extreme irritation compelled me to seek medical advice. The doctor, after making an examination, said that I had ovarian trouble and ulceration, and advised an operation as my only hope. To this I strongly objected and I decided as a last resort to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"To my surprise the ulceration healed, all the bad symptoms disappeared, and I am once more strong, vigorous and well; and I cannot express my thanks for what it has done for me."

Ovarian and womb troubles are steadily on the increase among women—and before submitting to an operation every woman should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and write Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. for advice.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been curing the worst forms of female complaints, all ovarian troubles, inflammation, ulceration, falling and displacement of the womb, leucorrhœa, irregularities, indigestion and nervous prostration. Any woman who could read the many grateful letters on file in Mrs. Pinkham's office would be convinced of the efficiency of her advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

LESS SUNDAY SELLING.

Selectmen Warn License Holders To be More Careful.

LAST TWO SUNDAYS "DRY" ONES.

Complaint Made by Wright Wire Co. Trouble Promised Unless Conditions Changed.

For some time past it has been apparent to any casual observer that there was more Sunday liquor selling than is permitted by the statutes or the welfare of the community demanded. A different condition of affairs has been noticed within the past two weeks, and the last two Sundays have been "dry" ones compared with those previously.

This is due to a letter which the selectmen received early in October from George M. Wright, president and general manager of the Wright Wire Co, in which he stated that after investigating a complaint which had come to him he had become convinced that some of the licensed places were selling after 11 o'clock at night and on Sundays, and requesting the selectmen to bring the matter to the attention of holders of licenses. This the selectmen did, with the result stated above.

The Wright company has had a good deal of trouble with its men on Monday mornings, some of them being unable to work on account of Sunday imbibing, and Mr. Wright suggested that if there was no improvement of conditions there would be "something doing" which might not be acceptable to license holders. The changed condition is a welcome one.

FOOTBALL.

Wesleyan Academy 5, Ware High 0.

With four of the regular players out of the game, Wesleyan played Ware high school Saturday afternoon, and defeated them by a score of 5 to 0. It was a case of men in new positions, and so there was great lack of team work, although the men played well individually. Wesleyan failed to score in the first half because of fumbles; in the second half, which was only seven minutes of actual play, Wesleyan scored within five minutes. Ware was obliged to leave very early in order to return, so the second half was shortened to accommodate them. The line up:

Wesleyan Academy.	Ware High School.
Ward, l e	r e, Sjostrom
Whalen, Thompson, l t	r t, Livingston, Moore
Hall, Gurney, l g	r g, Harrett
Roelke, c	c Quirk

McCormick, q b	q b, Brannigan
Sibley, Goodnough, l h b	r h b, Bassett
Volley, Gerard, Spalding, r h b	l h b, Harrington
Young, f b,	f b, Grise

Score: Wesleyan Academy 5, Ware 0. Touchdown, Young. Umpire, Mr. Weiss. Referee, Davis. Time, 15 and 7-minute halves.

Death of Dwight Buffington.

Dwight Buffington, 79, died at his home in Ware Center Wednesday morning, after a four-months' illness. Mr. Buffington sustained a bad fall 15 years ago, breaking his hip, but he recovered sufficiently to get about with a cane until recently. But during the last two months his heart trouble prevented him from lying down at all.

Mr. Buffington was born in Monson November 3, 1826, a son of Royal and Eunice Buffington. He worked at farming and lumbering in Belchertown and other places, but since 1867 had lived on the farm in Ware Center, where he died. He was married to Elizabeth Owen in Belchertown in 1851. A singular fact in this connection is that on the same day of their marriage Mrs Buffington's sister married A. D. Randall in the same house, and at an earlier hour, in a house nearby, Mr. Randall's sister married Elisha Hubbard of Hatfield, and Mr Buffington is the first one of the six to die. He and his wife celebrated their golden wedding anniversary four years ago.

Mr. Buffington is survived by his wife, five sons, Frederick D. of North Brookfield, R Herbert of West Brookfield, Ozias B. and Charles O. of Ware and George H. of Willimantic, and one daughter, Mrs. Willard G Loveland of Ware. He was deacon of the First Congregational church in Ware Center for the past 20 years. The funeral was held this afternoon at 1 30 at the house.

Superior Court Entries.

Among the cases entered at the superior court in Springfield this week, the following are of interest to the people of this vicinity:

Actions of tort—Michael O'Neil of North Wilbraham against the Springfield and Eastern Street Railway Company to recover for causing the plaintiff's arrest without alleged reasonable cause, $2000; John E. Farrell of North Wilbraham against the Springfield and Eastern Street Railway Company to recover for causing the plaintiff's arrest without alleged reasonable cause, $2000. George C Flynt of Monson against Edmund F. Morris, also of Monson, for alleged debt and conversion of property, $10,000

Actions of contract—American Surety Company of New York against Albert T. Wing of Palmer, for amount alleged to be due as annual premiums on bond, $150; Frank B. Strickland of Chicopee, administrator of the estate of Erasmus L. Strickland, late of Warren, against William E Harmon, trustee of Fannie B Strickland, to recover for alleged debt, $430.48. Richard H. French of Belchertown against Michael F Austin of Springfield for caring for horse, $40 83.

Under Springfield Management Now.

The Springfield and Eastern Street Railway has been under the new management since Sunday morning, the Springfield Street Railway Company taking it over at that time. While the road is to be managed from Springfield, it will be operated entirely separate from the Springfield lines, the car crews changing at Ludlow as at present. The office of the company at Palmer will be discontinued, with the exception of Superintendent Hunneweil's portion. The books are to be sent to Springfield, and the money is sent to that office every day.

Tried to Take Game Into Connecticut.

Deputy Game Commissioner J. F. Luman arrested George C. Finch, who was attempting to carry four Massachusetts partridges across the state line into Connecticut, Saturday evening in the union station in Springfield. According to Mr. Luman's statement the game had been secured near Athol, and it was his belief that Finch was to go to Connecticut with it, thus taking it out of the state, which is against the law. Finch parted with $40 in the police court in Springfield Monday morning, as a result of his attempt.

Massachusetts Elects Republican Governor.

Guild Has Plurality of 23,000; Draper Wins by Less Than 3000; Whitney Wants Recount. Results in Other States.

Massachusetts dropped back into the straight Republican column again this week by electing Curtis Guild Jr. governor, giving him something over 23,000 plurality. The only place on the ticket which was in danger was the lieutenant-governorship, and that is saved to Mr. Draper by a plurality of about 2700, a wide margin but none too safe. As it is, Mr. Whitney, his opponent, has asked for a recount, on the ground that in 360,000 votes there is ample opportunity for errors to creep in. It is not deemed likely that the recount will change the result, as errors so large are not made by Massachusetts election officers.

The surprise locally was the defeat of County Commissioner William H. Brainerd of Palmer, his opponent having a plurality of 1889. It was conceded from the start that Mr. Brainerd's vote would be cut, but not even the most sanguine of his opponents dreamed of the ultimate result. But the Connecticut river navigation forces had been working tooth and nail since Mr Nutting's nomination, and there were other forces which apparently were enlisted. The Springfield Republican says of Mr. Brainerd, anent the result: "He deserved better things than came to him at the hands of the voters of the county yesterday. Most of those who went against Mr. Brainerd know and respect Robert O. Morris, clerk of courts, who has been thoroughly familiar with the work of the county board, and believes that, in the matter of the Chicopee bridge and other questions where the action of the board has not pleased some people, the commissioners have done what appealed to them and other good judges as best for the public interest. But, despite this, the defeat of Mr Brainerd is emphatic. Lots of folks wanted a change, and the tide set against him with a rush. Some of the forces which allied themselves in the anti-Brainerd camp say they 'have it in for the rest of the board.'"

Representative Norcross of Monson wins again in the First Hampden district, being given the handsome plurality of 445, in spite of the suggestion, heard before election, that his vote has been falling off since his first election two years ago. His percentage of the total vote for the three years have been 70.3, 70.5, 70, not a very great "falling off."

Ware misses having a county commissioner by just 100 votes, Josiah W. Flynt of Enfield, the Republican candidate, leading his Democratic opponent, Felix Bombard of Ware, by that number.

In the Second Hampden representative—the "Shoe-string" district,—extending from Hampden to Granville and taking in Ludlow, the Republican nominee, William H. Granger of Agawam, leads by 160.

Warren, in the Fourth Worcester representative district, still has Socialistic tendencies apparently, for it gave Milton Dickson, the Socialist candidate, 31 votes, or over 26 per cent of all he had.

Charles A. Andrews of Holyoke, a former Palmer boy and attendant at the high school, is elected representative from the Eight Hampden district.

In Other States.

The victory of William Travers Jerome, candidate for district attorney of New York, is a remarkable one, inasmuch as he was dropped by all the regular parties and ran on nomination papers. He was bitterly opposed by Tammany but wins by about 11,500. This insures four years more of housecleaning in that city and an honest attempt to have the laws impartially enforced. His election is all the more remarkable because the politicians have arranged a complex ballot, whereby a mark in a circle votes a straight party ticket, and with rules which make the voting of a split ticket a precarious matter for rank and file. This was successfully done, and by all parties, his election demonstrates.

McClellan is said to be elected mayor of New York for another term, although Hearst contests the election and says he will carry it into the courts on alleged frauds. It is certain from the reports of the day's doings in that city that Tammany hesitated at nothing which would further the success of its ticket. All sorts of interference and violence prevailed, and many arrests were made.

In Philadelphia Mayor Weaver was reëlected by the reform element by 60,000 to 70,000 plurality. The state also went Democratic, as did Ohio.

The bosses had a hard time of it Tuesday, suffering defeat in many places. The most notable instances were the election of Jerome for district attorney of New York and Weaver for Mayor of Philadelphia, but there are gratifying gains in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Ohio also, with greater or less results in other places. The independent voter is a power when he gets into the game.

The vote of Massachusetts in this vicinity follows:

HAMPDEN COUNTY.

District No 1.—[Candidates: John F. Hayden of Palmer, dem; Arthur D. Norcross of Monson, rep.]

TOWN OF WARE A WINNER.

In Suit of Daniel E. Moran for Salary as Almoner.

SOME STARTLING STATEMENTS MADE

Every Lawyer in Ware Interested, So Judge Kenefick of Palmer Hears Case.

The much-heralded case of Daniel E. Moran vs the town of Ware was tried in the district court in that town last Saturday. Mr. Moran claimed an appointment as almoner by the board of overseers of the poor at a salary of $50 a month, that he had served a month and then been fired without pay; he sued for a month's salary. Every lawyer in town was either interested in the matter or had given an opinion, including Judge Davis of the district court, so Judge Kenefick of Palmer heard the case.

The evidence was startling, to say the least, and included charges of bribery and attempted corruption, and a general intimation that Ananias had numerous descendants who had not forgotten the trait which has perpetuated their ancestor's name in history.

H. M. Coney opened the case for Mr. Moran, who testified that on the 27th of May he was appointed clerk of the board of overseers with duties of almoner. He was to be paid $50 the first month and at the rate of $800 a year after that. After the meeting of the board he met Messrs. Farrar and Casey in Farrar's office, where both told him of his appointment. He and Casey walked home together and on the way Casey promised to have his salary raised to $60 a month providing he would make a monthly payment of $6 60 to Casey. Casey informed him that all the groceries were to be bought of Casey and all the coal of Farrar. Casey took him to Holyoke and introduced him as the almoner of the town of Ware, after which he was given dinner at a hotel; on asking if the town would not kick at the expense bill, Casey replied that it would be all right, for Moran would approve the bill. After his appointment Farrar gave him a post office key and Casey told him to "Get the mail before Girard got there." Moran called every day at Farrar's office for orders. He was present July 5 at a meeting of the board, where there was a general row and Moran was fired by Messrs. Casey and Girard.

Messrs Plouff and Eldridge, newspaper correspondents, both testified to being told by Casey and Farrar that Moran had been appointed to the office.

For the defense Mr. Casey, a clerk of the board of overseers, testified that on the night of May 27 Farrar said, "I move that we appoint a secretary," to this Mr Girard replied, "I second the motion." Mr. Farrar then said, "I move that Daniel E. Moran be appointed secretary," to which Mr. Girard objected. Casey produced the records of the meeting to show that that was as far as the matter went. Casey denied telling Plouff that Moran would be appointed; he also denied any agreement to raise Moran's pay for a rake-off of $6 60, and the statements regarding the purchase of coal and groceries. He admitted that the records of the meeting were kept on bits of paper and stuck on a file, but said that the records produced at the meeting were the official records of the board.

Mr. Girard testified that at the meeting May 27 Mr. Farrar did not put the motion that Moran be appointed secretary.

Mr. Coney then called Mr. Farrar, who had been summoned by the defendants, and he testified that Casey had voted for Moran at the meeting of the board. He also said that he had notified Plouff and Eldridge that Moran had been appointed. Another statement was to the effect that the appointment of Moran had been arranged between himself and Casey, and that Casey had said that he was sick of the whole business.

The arguments of the counsel occupied an hour or more for each side, and Judge Kenefick reserved his decision. It was given later and is for the defendants on all points.

Holland Pastor Leaves Charge.

Rev. Josiah G. Willis has closed his pastorate in Holland and has moved to Wilbraham, where he has bought a home and will rest for a time, as his eyes are troubling him. He has had charge of the Home Mission Congregational church in Holland for nine years, and raised $700 for improvements upon the parish buildings. Mr. Willis, who is entitled by the state board of registration to write M. D. after his name, has carried on some medical practice in Holland and also kept drugs and medicines for sale.

PALMER NEWS.

WATCH PRESENTED

To A. J. Purinton by Members of the Palmer Business and Social Club.

The Palmer Business and Social Club gave a social and smoke talk in its rooms Tuesday evening in honor of A. J. Purinton, who has been general manager of the Springfield and Eastern Street Railway and the Central Massachusetts Electric Company for several years, but goes in a few days to a new position in Virginia. Nearly every member of the club was present, as well as a few invited guests from other towns. About 9 o'clock all gathered in the billiard room, where President E R. Pierce, in behalf of the club, presented Mr. Purinton with a handsome solid gold hunting-case watch suitably engraved. Mr. Purinton suitably responded, thanking the members for their gift, and expressing his regret at leaving town. Mr. Pierce then called on D. F. Dillon, Superintendent of Schools R. J. Fuller and C. F. Grosvenor, president of the electric road, and Representative A D. Norcross of Monson, all of whom spoke of the regret of the club members at Mr Purinton's departure. Another gift was a solid gold chain and diamond charm from the employes of the companies under Mr. Purinton's management. A splendid lunch was served by Caterer Bard, and election returns were received during the evening.

Electric Road's Good Showing.

The call for the annual meeting of the Springfield and Eastern Street Railway Company, to be held at the office in Palmer next Wednesday, has been sent out, and with it a statement of the business of the past year. This is as follows:

EARNINGS.
Receipts from passengers carried,		$106,253.70

Meeting of the Historical Society.

As the meeting of the society occurred on election night, it seemed very opportune that the subject for consideration should be "Some Famous Presidential Elections." In accordance with the program these papers were read: "Election of Thomas Jefferson and the Downfall of the Federalist Party," by Mr. Clifton Hobson; "The Second Election of Andrew Jackson, with especial reference to the overthrow of the U. S. Bank," F. W. Cross; "The Election of John Quincy Adams," Mrs. Anna Fuller; "The Rise of the Republican Party and the Election of Abraham Lincoln," Mr. D. L. Bodfish. Each of the papers bore evidence of a keen grasp of the subject, a conciseness of expression, and a clear analysis of the events described, which was highly commendable. After the reading of the papers O. P. Allen gave some account of his discovery of the location of Root's Den, about which there has been no little discussion for many years, and exhibited a photograph of the site taken by Mrs W. H. Fuller, with views of the site of the stockade and of Glassford's Pond located on the George Brown farm Clifton Hobson was elected secretary of the society to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Rice, and Rev. W. A. Moore was elected a member of the council, to take the place of Rev. M. O. Patton, removed from town.

Game Protective Association Formed.

The Quaboag Game Protective Association, which was formed in Palmer last week, is having posters put up on land which it has secured. About 800 acres east and south of the electric plant at Blanchardville have been posted, and 1000 acres in the Mason district are now being covered. The idea is to protect the game from outside hunters, many of whom are attracted to this vicinity by the good shooting and take back to the cities very many more birds than the local hunters kill; the game is thus soon killed off and the covers depleted. Membership in the association costs $1, and this covers dues until January 1, 1907. The officers of the association are: President, C. E Fuller; vice president, L. W. Parker; secretary and treasurer, Dr. S. B. Keith; prosecuting attorney, E. E. Hobson. The association offers a reward of $5 for evidence which will convict any person of tearing down or defacing any sign or poster. The association has asked the fish and game commissioners for the appointment of four special game wardens, and has received notice that they will be appointed next week.

Horse Jumps From Freight Train.

A horse was found feeding in a field near Cooley crossing early Saturday morning, and after an investigation it was learned that the animal had jumped from a freight train as it was being transported from Boston to Pittsfield the night before. The manner in which the animal escaped from the car is a mystery, and the fact that it was uninjured seems a miracle. Six horses were loaded in one car at Boston and accompanied by the shipper to Worcester. At the latter place the man decided to ride in the caboose, and carefully locked the horse car, he says. The train made no stop between Worcester and Springfield. Upon arrival in the latter place the owner went to the car to see if the horses were all right, but found the car door open and one horse gone. The animal was taken to the Weeks House stable, where it was later claimed by the owner.

Warren Gets Gas Franchise.

At a meeting of the selectmen of the town of Warren yesterday afternoon it was voted unanimously to grant a franchise to the Worcester County Gas Company, in compliance with a vote of the town at a meeting held October 23. This is the culmination of a long contest, and will now leave the way clear for extending the pipe line to Palmer and Monson. It is understood that the franchise contains no conditions other than those laid down by the Public Statutes. The pipes are already laid over a half mile this side of West Brookfield, and if winter does not set in too quickly, much work will be accomplished this fall.

Struck on Head With Drill.

An assault case from the Flynt quarry at Monson was tried in the district court Monday morning. Maurice Moriarty appeared with his head in bandages, the result of a blow from a drill in the hands of George Bleau, who with his son Paul appeared as defendants. All were employed at the quarry and Paul Bleau and Moriarty became engaged in some difficulty, during which George Bleau interfered in behalf of his son. The evidence showed that Moriarty was struck from behind with a steel drill some 18 inches or two feet long and an inch or more thick, three stitches being required to close the wound. Paul Bleau was discharged and George was fined $25, which he paid. The continued case of Willard Wallace of Monson, for throwing a stone at an electric car, was taken up and the defendant discharged.

Mrs. Hill Fails to Get Divorce.

Mrs. Emma C. Hill of Springfield fails to get a divorce from her husband, Dr. Elmer E. Hill of Palmer, Judge Hitchcock having dismissed the libel. The couple were married in the West about 12 years ago, both having previously lived in Palmer, where Mrs. Hill's girlhood days were spent. After their marriage Dr. Hill practiced dentistry in Red Wing, Minn, for a time, but they finally returned East and to Palmer, where they resided until she went to Springfield this last summer. In court Mrs Hill alleged that her husband was a victim of gross and confirmed habits of intoxication, induced by drugs, and that he had cruelly treated and abused her. The defense was a complete denial of every charge by Dr. Hill.

The music committee of the Congregational church held a successful food sale at the home of Mrs. L E Chandler on North Main street Wednesday afternoon. In the evening there was a social and musicale, the program including vocal selections by Miss Marjorie Perry of North Wilbraham and instrumental selections by Miss May Fiske of Palmer. A home-made candy table was presided over by Misses Marjorie Buck and Sophia Rice.

The hunt supper was held at the Converse House Wednesday evening, and those who attended are loud in their praises of the menu prepared by Landlord Pierce. Hunting experiences were in order after the good things for the inner man had been cared for, and some amusing tales were related. The consensus of opinion was that Otto R F. Smith, the well-known fox hunter living on the Thorndike road, was entitled to first place on the list of entertainers

The using of profane language is not counted among the desirable accomplishments at any time, much less so when it gives annoyance to others. There is a business place in town where much profanity is indulged in, a large proportion of which is plainly heard in the adjoining place of business, the walls being decidedly thin. Although sifted, it is decidedly unpleasant for proprietors, clerks and customers, but so far no protest has been made, the victims prefering to suffer rather than make formal complaint.

Emily L, 40, wife of DeWitt Richards, died at her home on Foster avenue Tuesday afternoon at 4 of heart disease, after a long illness. Mrs Richards had lived in Palmer many years and was highly respected. She leaves, besides her husband, five children, three daughters and two sons; also two brothers, Fred L Leonard of Springfield, O., and Elmer E. Leonard of Bindlay, O, and one sister, Mrs Nellie L Martin of Yuma, Ariz The funeral was held this afternoon at 2, Rev. W. A. Moore of the Universalist church officiating. Burial was in the Thorndike street cemetery. The bearers were George A. Corser of Ware, George Flint of Winchendon and J. A. Hawkes and Eugene Marcy of Palmer.

Charles Olmstead officiating, and burial was in the Palmer cemetery.

WARE.

Will Leave Town.

A. B. Paton, superintendent of the George H. Gilbert Manufacturing Company for the past 15 years, has resigned that position and will leave town some time in January. He has purchased the plant of the Central Woolen Company at Stafford Springs, Ct., and will become a manufacturer of woolen goods. Mr. Paton, who is a native of Scotland, has been engaged in the manufacturing business for 30 years, starting with his uncle in the Paton mills at Sherbrooke, P. Q, and from there coming to the states. He was chief designer in the mills at Eastdale, R. I, and was for three years in Webster. He organized a mill in Chester, Pa, and from there went to Ware. Since 1890 Mr. Paton, as general superintendent, has had charge of the mills in Ware, employing 400 hands, and those in Gilbertville, where there are 800 more, eight mills in all, with an output annually that now exceeds $2,000,000. The mill which Mr. Paton has purchased is a seven-set plant with 42 broad looms, and any kind of woolen goods can be manufactured there. Mr. Paton's departure from Ware will be regretted by a large circle of friends.

Death of James McArdle.

James McArdle, 65, died suddenly at his home on West Pleasant street Sunday night at 10 He had attended church in the morning and had been about the house until 8.30 in the evening. He had been subject to heart trouble for two years, and recently had suffered from asthma, and at times, had been in need of medical attendance without delay to save him. Sunday night, when taken suddenly ill, his wife hastened to summon a physician, but Mr. McArdle was dead when the doctor arrived. Mr. McArdle had lived in Ware between 40 and 50 years, being one of the first young men who came from Ireland to that town During the war he and his first wife went to Meriden, Ct, where he worked for a few years, but returned to Ware after the war, living on a farm. The first Mrs. McArdle died, and in 1897 Mr. McArdle married the wife who survives him He leaves no children. The funeral was held from All Saints' church Wednesday morning at 9

More Diphtheria.

Another case of diphtheria was reported to the board of health Saturday, the victim being the small son of W. A. Milos, a Polish merchant. The house and store, which are all one and near the west end of the street on the south side, were both quarantined at once, and Charles Berube, a special officer, was stationed near to enforce the law of the board until the Polish people were made to understand what it meant. Every possible precaution will be taken to check any possible spread of the cases among the Poles on Water street.

James Harrison received a painful injury Tuesday, while on his way to Gilbertville to do a job of painting. He slipped as he stepped from the electric car and both his hands were bruised and badly lacerated. He has been unable to attend to his work this week.

Ann, 59, wife of Daniel Shea, died at her home on Grove street Tuesday afternoon. She is survived by two sons, Daniel and Cornelius of Ware, and four daughters, Mrs. Michael Crowley of Gilbertville, Mrs. Michael Smith, Mrs. William Rice and Miss Nancy Shea of Ware. The funeral was held from All Saints' church yesterday morning.

A meeting will be held in the chapel of the East Congregational church next Thursday evening to act on two articles: To see if the report of the pulpit supply committee shall be heard and acted upon, and to see if the church will extend a call to Rev. George B. Hatch of Three Oaks, Mich., to the pastorate of the church. Rev. Mr. Hatch was trained for the ministry in the East, but had been in Berkley, Cal., prior to his going to Three Oaks, where he has been but a short time. The pulpit has been filled with supplies since the resignation of Rev. A. B. Bassett last summer.

The small house on West street owned by J. Thomas Webb was slightly damaged by fire Tuesday morning about 11. The blaze started in the north end occupied by Mrs. Bridget Brown, and in which she kept a small store. James McMahon occupied the other end of the house, but he sustained no loss except a little by smoke. The damage to the building will be about $100, while Mrs. Brown suffered about an equal loss on her stock of goods and household furniture. Both losses are covered by insurance. The fire is supposed to have caught from a stove in some way, but the firemen had some trouble in locating the exact spot where the blaze started and it looked rather suspicious. Fire Inspector George F. Crittendon of the state district police went to Ware in the afternoon, and in company with Thomas C. Gleason, chief of the fire department, and Maurice Fitzgerald, chief of police, made a thorough investigation, but Inspector Crittendon returned home without proceeding further.

Monson News.

Election Day in Monson.

The new method of opening the polls early proved a success in Monson Tuesday, and the result was very gratifying to those instrumental in bringing about the change. While it makes longer hours for the election officers, the change seems to be appreciated even by them, and will in all probability be continued at both the spring and fall elections hereafter. Before the departure of the 6 15 car Tuesday morning 32 had voted, before 7 o'clock 62 had voted, and before 9 o'clock, the customary hour for opening the polls for many years, 100 had voted The vote this year, while smaller than last year, is considered large for an off year. Last year being presidential year, the vote was large, it being 710. The total vote this year was 638 and in 1903 it was 694.

A. D. Norcross received a very handsome vote, as he has in the past three years A peculiar fact is the very slight variation in the percentage of the vote received by him in the past three years, although there was considerable variation in the total vote cast In 1903 the total vote was 694, and Mr. Norcross received 488, 70 3 per cent; in 1904 the vote was 710 and Mr Norcross received 501, or 70 5 per cent; this year out of a total of 638 Mr. Norcross received 446, or 70 per cent. This is a very small shrinkage. Many have remarked that there was a considerable falling off in this vote, but evidently they did not take into consideration the variation in the total vote cast.

Both parties worked hard on election day, and about every voter on either side who could be located was brought to the polls either in an automobile or hack. Mr. Brainerd received a very complimentary vote in this town, as did Guild and Draper.

Barnes—Capen.

A wedding of interest to Monson people took place at Westfield Wednesday afternoon. The following is from the Springfield Union of Wednesday: Miss Fannie Louise Barnes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. B Barnes, and Dr Elwyn W. Capen of Monson were married this afternoon at the home of the bride in Holland avenue. The rooms were attractively decorated with laurel, ferns, palms and chrysanthemums. The ceremony was performed by Rev. T. W. Davison of Springfield, a former pastor of both bride and groom As the bride and groom entered the parlor Miss Blanche Upham of Three Rivers played the Lohengrin wedding march, assisted by W. L Southland of Springfield with the violin. Miss Dorothy Southland was flower girl. The bride wore a gown of white messaline silk, trimmed with Irish point lace and chiffon, and she carried bridal roses. A reception followed the ceremony, with C. E Hubbard as caterer. The bride is a graduate of Framingham Normal school and has been a teacher in this town and in Becket. The groom is a graduate of Boston University medical school, and is now located in Monson, where the young couple will be at home to their friends after Dec. 1.

Man Found Dead.

Henry Hall, 70, for several years a resident of this town, was found dead in the road near the Robbins place at South Monson about 9 o'clock Tuesday morning by George Hopkins, with whom he boarded. Mr. Hall started to walk to the village to vote, and told Mr. Hopkins that he would probably overtake him. This Mr. Hopkins did, but found him in the middle of the road dead, lying on his face. Mr. Hopkins at once notified Assistant Medical Examiner Jacksen, who viewed the remains. The cause of death was organic heart trouble, he having had this trouble for some time. Mr. Hall was the last of three brothers and leaves several nephews in this town and Enfield. The body was taken to Enfield Wednesday and the funeral was held at that place yesterday, burial taking place there.

Monson Academy Replies.

"In the Journal of last week an article appeared which stated that the Palmer high school football team came to Monson to play the Academy football team but found no opponents, and claiming that the Academy team was afraid to meet the Palmers. Manager Page wishes this statement made: In the first place, the Palmer team is not a high school team but one composed of any players available in or about Palmer; secondly, on Saturday morning Manager Harrington of Palmer came to Monson and was distinctly told that the Academy team would not play Palmer for several reasons. In spite of this he brought his team to Monson, and of course there was no team to meet it. Monson Academy has never yet scheduled a game with a team it was afraid to meet, and has found that the greatest kick comes from the weakest team."

Miss Mollie Fitzgerald of Stafford Springs, Ct., visited her parents here this week.

The ladies' circle of the Universalist church will hold a food sale in the church parlors Friday afternoon, Nov. 24th, from 3 to 5 o'clock.

The Current Events Club will meet next Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. William L Ricketts; subject, "Current Events," in charge of Mrs. F. A. Wheeler.

Next Sunday will be observed by the Methodist church as "Old People's Day." Special attention will be given to the aged. The choir will consist of former members.

Mrs. Etta Orcutt returned to-day from Dr. Thompson's hospital in Boston, where she has been for treatment. Dr. Thompson and children will spend a few days with relatives here.

A whist party will be held at St. Patrick's Sunday school building Tuesday evening, the proceeds to be used in purchasing goods for the fair which will be held in the latter part of January in Memorial Hall.

Mrs. William N. Flynt entertained her Sunday school class at her residence on High street Wednesday evening, as has been her custom once each year for the past 24 years. There were eleven present and the occasion was a very pleasant one.

Fred S. Farrell, chemist of the City Pathological Laboratory of Springfield, will address the Men's Assembly on Tuesday evening, Nov. 14, at 8 o'clock; subject, "Water organisms " Mr. Farrell is a graduate of the Mass. Institute of Technology.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of the Methodist church is planning an old-time social similar to the one held a year ago. It will be held in the church vestry next Wednesday afternoon. All are invited to attend and bring their lunch. Supper will be served from 5 to 7.

There will be a sociable in the parlors of the Congregational church next Friday evening. A supper in charge of Mrs. Thompson and Mrs Fuller will be served from 6 to 8 o'clock and will be followed by an entertainment in charge of Miss Fitz and Mrs. Parsons.

Mrs. Sedgwick, who is spending the winter with her daughter, Mrs. E D. Cushman, celebrated her 89th birthday Wednesday. She received numerous calls from friends, and several gifts of flowers, etc Mrs Sedgwick enjoys good health in spite of her years, getting about the house with ease and out of doors in pleasant weather.

Mrs. A. B. Chaffee of Worcester will lecture at the home of Miss Cushman, Saturday afternoon, November 18, at 3 o'clock. Subject, "Edwin A. Abbey, Illustrator of Shakespeare's Works." A limited number of tickets will be sold, price 25 cents, and can be obtained from members of the Current Events Club. No tickets will be sold at the door.

H. W Bosworth Esq., of Springfield will give an address on " Benjamin Franklin," before the Men's Club of the Congregational church in the church parlors Monday evening at 8 o'clock. Mr. Bosworth is a good speaker and an appreciative address on the work of this great American at a critical period of our national history is of more than usual interest. The usual lunch and social will follow the speaking.

WALES.

Several new families are expected to move into town soon to work in the mill.

William Lucy has moved from Church street to his father's house on Main street.

Meetings are being held at the M. E. church this week with different speakers

Peter McKinnon is applying in the dyehouse of Berkley mill owing to the absence of William McKinnon.

William McKinnon has gone to Maine for a few days to assist in the coloring department of a mill there.

Rev. W. E. Waterbury of Springfield closed his meetings last Sunday evening at the Baptist church, with a large attendance.

The annual election passed off very quietly, only about one-half of the voters attending. The women of the M. E. church provided a dinner for the voters in the vestry.

Home Made

Have your cake, muffins, and tea biscuit home-made. They will be fresher, cleaner, more tasty and wholesome.

Royal Baking Powder helps the house wife to produce at home, quickly and economically, fine and tasty cake, the raised hot-biscuit, puddings, the frosted layer-cake, crisp cookies, crullers, crusts and muffins, with which the ready-made food found at the bake-shop or grocery does not compare.

Royal is the greatest of bake-day helps.

Our Boston Letter

It tells about

The State Election—The New Legislature—The Speakership Contest.

BOSTON, Nov. 8 1905.

Two conclusions may be accepted from the state election: If it had not been for Henry M. Whitney's state house record, he would have been elected. One of the officers of the Republican Club says to-day that his majority would have been 20 000 The other conclusion is that the people of Massachusetts are not satisfied with the tariff Doubtless other lessons will be extracted from the election returns, but these are perfectly plain, so that he who runs can read. Whitney made some gratifying scores. The way his home town of Brookline gave him a handsome majority, though Guild carried it, must be especially pleasing to him. He carried the neighboring city of Newton, which is strongly Republican He was strong in the centers of population, as a rule, and it was only the rural districts which saved Draper, supposing that the recount which the Democrats have asked for leaves him saved. At the time of writing, the margin for Draper over Whitney in 1994, and thus Chairman Lyman of the Democratic executive committee is right in saying that a change of 1000 votes would have given the election to Whitney. The closeness of the vote,—considerable less than 1 per cent being between Draper and Whitney, — leads Lyman to ask for the recount. It cannot be said that he expects to win, for it would take a great sum of errors, with the possibility of finding errors against Whitney, to offset such a margin as 1994 But it is well, thinks Lyman, to have the matter beyond question He says that the expense of recount is so great that he shall not ask for a recount of the vote for governor.

The returns make it clear that thousands of voters who voted for the head of the ticket did not vote for lieutenant governor. Draper falls some 15,000 behind Guild, but Whitney leads Bartlett by only some 6000 Yet those missing voters went to the polls and such a difference must be partly accounted for by the fact that thousands of men threw away their vote for second place, or cast it for one of the minor candidates. I know personally of illustrations both of throwing away the vote and of giving it to a minor candidate. By a slight margin Massachusetts has publicly given disapproval to the lavish expenditure of money to influence the Legislature. If it had not been that many voters regarded it as a "stand off" between Whitney and Draper upon the very point under discussion, the result would have been still more emphatic. But the sober judgment has been given, and now the question is what will be the effect in the state house next winter. The people approve the man who does not yield himself to corporations. To-day Senator Cummings of Brookline is joyous because of his significant success. He was the one conspicuous mark selected by the street railway interests to be defeated. There was a great fight before the caucuses, and Cummings won. Yesterday he ran far ahead of any other candidate on the ticket. Brookline went for Guild, but he got more than Guild. The town went for Whitney, but he had more than Whitney. Returns from different parts of his district, where he did not expect to find such a result, show that the same factor counted for him there. So the people have approved the senator who defended their interests against corporations. From that point of view the election of Schofield, Democrat, over James F. Shaw, Republican, in the third Essex district, is encouraging to those who would fight the railways, while the defeat of Senator Burns in Berkshire, probably in part due to corporation opposition, is an illustration in the other side of the case.

Not all of the Whitney vote is to be accounted for by his views on the tariff and reciprocity. A considerable element was the dislike of Senator Lodge and the determination to punish him by voting against the candidate whom he especially supported as the man to be elected. This I know because of personal statements to me yesterday and before, and if such talk went through the state in proportion as overheard by this one person, then there must have been a great many anti-Lodge votes in Whitney's total This dislike of Lodge is by no means the sudden outgrowth of his words at the last state convention, but it is the result of a very slow growth, covering Lodge's entire public career. Ever since Lodge made his deliberate choice, more than 20 years ago, between an independent course and a strictly partisan course, no matter where it led him, he has been regarded by some former friends with distrust, and his course in managing the party has made that number grow until he has the opposition of personal enemies as well as those who oppose him from purely public reasons.

The defeated candidate accepts the result as cheerfully as could be expected. This noon Guild was the cheerful recipient of three letters, among others, which gave him special pleasure. One was from Gov. Douglas congratulating him upon his election. The second was from Charles W. Bartlett, and the third was from Mr. and John L Bates, written by the former governor, and signed by both. Guild realizes the responsibilities which he is assuming and knows that he has no easy task. The vote proves what has been shown before, that he is not a good vote-getter and he has yet two gauntlets to run before he reaches the end of election tribulations by the accepted Republican standard. Gov. Douglas proposes to take a two-weeks' vacation and let Guild take the helm, which some of Guild's friends think is rough on Douglas's part, considering how much Guild has been on the stump and now needs to rest.

Judging from the returns, our new Legislature will have plenty of good debating and managing material. The Democrats make a net gain of three in the Senate, their conspicuous success being in the third Essex district where James F. Shaw was defeated by George A. Schofield of Ipswich, who has served four years in the House and is one of the strongest men the Democrats have sent to the state house in recent years. The fact is, since the district is strongly Republican, that Schofield was elected by Republican votes, and there are probably not many Republicans outside of the district who are sorry for Shaw's defeat But it is a fair question whether he can not carry on, from outside the Senate, just as effective a campaign for the street railway interests as he could have done from the inside. Of course President Dana will be reëlected president of the Senate. There are 24 former senators reëlected, and most of the 16 new members have had experience in the House. So the Senate will be a pretty well-seasoned body legislatively speaking. The Democrats will be stronger than they have been for several years. Both Logan and Cusick from Boston ought to serve them well. The defeat of Senator Burns was a surprise here for his friends, for he had done well in the Senate and fairly earned a second term. It is known that the district is close, but the people would not have appeared in a bad light if they had returned him. The Senate will be better in morals than it was two years ago, but still there are members whose coming retirement,—and they will be likely to retire after one more term,—can be contemplated with sincere pleasure. The stories about them are not to their credit, and the people may well keep close watch upon them. This means those who have been already under suspicion, not the men who have no taint upon them.

Now for the speakership fight! Messrs. Cole of Andover, Walker of Brookline, Peabody of Cambridge, Luce of Somerville and Ward of Buckland are all named. At this part of the state, it is not believed that Ward will remain in the fight very long, and Messrs Peabody and Luce are expected to drop out before the campaign gets very far along, leaving the real issue between Cole and Walker. The corporation question is in the people's minds as mixed up in the issue, but it has not yet taken form, and developments may be awaited of more positive nature than now. Each side just now believes that he is sure to win.

In membership the new House retains the strongest members of 1905, except that Speaker Frothingham is out, running for the mayorality of Boston. Of course James H. Mellen of Worcester will be one of the prominent figures. He has been out for recent years, but he seems to have tired out his opponents and the opposition which was so strong at home seems to have dwindled so that it is no longer visible from Boston. Charles A Dean of Wakefield, out for two years and a Democrat from a Republican district, is back again, and it is to be expected that he will introduce again his bill for an inheritance tax which the House has recently passed, regardless of party lines, and which has hitherto always found an insuperable obstacle in the Senate. There are strong men from many districts and the first impression of the House is favorable. The notorious Curley of Boston has been defeated by Former Congressman Michael J. McEttrick. Michael M. Lomasney will have command of the Boston regiment again. There is debating ability enough, the question is about the moral stature of the members, and that remains to be proved.

LANDON

WEST WARREN.

Mrs. Agnes Gibson entertained about 30 of her Scotch friends at her home on Pleasant street Saturday evening.

Mark Lung, the proprietor of the laundry in the basement in the rear of H. H. Hebert's store on North street, has been missing since last week Wednesday, and his customers are anxious to learn of his whereabouts.

Annie, the five-years-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Hutchinson, was bitten on the left hand by a small dog owned by C. O. Walker Saturday night. She was taken to the office of Dr. H. O. Moore, who cauterized the hand The dog has since been killed.

BELCHERTOWN.

Special Town Meeting.

A special town meeting was held in Belchertown Tuesday. G H. B Green acted as moderator. There was considerable talk regarding the street lights and the water supply. At present there is a highway surveyor, but the vote by which he was appointed was rescinded, and the board of selectmen will hereafter appoint a superintendent of streets. The sum of $100 was appropriated for street lights until the March meeting. A committee of four, L. W. Dillon, D D. Hazen, W. E Bridgman and M. S. Barton, was added to the board of three selectmen to investigate a water supply for the high school and Belchertown Center. The selectmen will, by vote of the town, see what the cost of lighting the streets with electricity furnished from the belt shop will be, and also ascertain the number of merchants and citizens who would place lights on their premises.

An independent basketball team has been organized.

Miss Mildred Ward of Springfield has been spending a part of the week in town.

Rev. and Mrs. Samuel Woodbury are spending a short vacation in Newton and Newburyport.

Mrs. M. W. Bardwell was called to Ashby Monday to attend the funeral of her mother, Mrs. Bailey.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Mrs Brown of Plymouth has been the guest of her cousin, Miss Rose Smith.

Miss Amy A. Hardendorf of Scottsville, N. Y, has been the guest of her cousin, Miss Olive Wartman.

Rev. and Mrs. Charles Gates have closed their home in East Wilbraham for the winter, and left Sunday for the South, stopping in New York on their way.

Charles Fillmore has sold his blacksmith business in North Wilbraham and moved to Springfield. He is succeeded by Harry Tripp of Hazardville, Ct., who will move his family into Walter M. Green's house in East Wilbraham.

The small building near F. A. Fuller's grocery store, owned by the Collins estate, and used by E T. St. Peter as a shoemaker's shop, was burned to the ground Sunday morning about 10 o'clock. Mr. St. Peter, who is a feeble old man, started a wood fire in the stove with kerosene, some of which was spilled on the floor and caught fire, setting fire the shop, which burned in about half an hour. Mr. St. Peter was slightly burned about the face, and was moved to the home of Mrs. William H. Kellogg, where he was cared for. He was taken to the state hospital in Tewksbury Monday. Good work was done by Walter Berry with a hand extinguisher in saving F. A. Fuller's grain storehouse, which stood within a few feet of the shop. Water was also brought from the tank in front of the store.

WARREN.

William J. Boughton, 63, died Monday evening at his home on Washington street, after a two-weeks' illness with heart disease and other complications. He is survived by one son, Henry E. Boughton of New York. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at 2 30, Rev. William Lawford officiating. Burial was in Pine Grove cemetery.

A special meeting of the Congregational parish was held Monday evening, when it was voted to accept the resignation of Rev. William B Oleson, and the parish committee were appointed to act with the church committee in calling a council of dismissal The parish committee were also instructed to take steps toward the securing of a new pastor.

James Horan, an employe of the Sayles & Jenks Manufacturing Company, had the second finger of his left hand badly lacerated Tuesday morning by being struck with a shuttle. It was found necessary later to amputate the end of the finger.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Hibernians have elected the following officers: President, Mrs. W. F. Duncan; vice president, Mrs. Lawrence J. Welch; recording secretary, Miss Nora T. Lynch; financial secretary, Miss Hannah Moran; treasurer, Mrs. Michael J. Callahan; sentinel, Mrs. James E. McKelligott; sergeant-at-arms, Miss Nora Eliot. These officers will be installed December 5.

Quaboag lodge of Masons elected the following officers at their annual meeting: W. M., Fred E. Wilcox; S. W., Elmer A. Lincoln; J. W., Joseph G. Hastings; treasurer, Charles B. Blair; secretary, Charles N. Perkins.

Ina Stacy, 15 years old, employed in the winding-room at Sayles & Jenks woolen mill, had the end of the second finger of her left hand cut off yesterday morning by getting it caught on the machine she was working.

Nearly Asphyxiated.

Edward Mahan of Ware narrowly escaped being asphyxiated by illuminating gas in Springfield Tuesday morning. Mahan went to Springfield Monday to do shopping and being obliged to remain in the city over night, secured a room in a boarding house on Vernon street, managed by Miss Annie Hayes, where he boarded when formerly a resident of Springfield. About eight o'clock Tuesday morning Miss Hayes detected the odor of gas coming from Mahan's room and she called for assistance. A man was secured who ascended a ladder to Mahan's room. Mahan was found unconscious, and gas was escaping from a half-open jet near the bed Dr. E. B. Adams was summoned, and after working over him for half an hour had him sent to the Mercy hospital. Mahan remained unconscious until late in the afternoon, but has since recovered.

PLEASED TO DO IT.

Palmer Citizens Gladly Speak Publicly On This Subject.

A public statement
Given to the public for the public good.
A citizen's experience,
Truthfully told for humanity's sake,
Should find ready appreciation.
Palmer people are pleased to do it;
Pleased to tell their friends and neighbors.
Tell them about the " little conqueror."
The good deeds of Doan's Kidney Pills
Are spreading o'er the city,
Lifting burdens from aching backs,
Curing the pains of kidney ills.
Read the proof in a Palmer man's words.

Otto Smith, a farmer, living out about a mile on the Thorndike road, says:—"I was greatly benefitted by using Doan's Kidney Pills sold at LeGro's drug store. My back hurt me extremely I could hardly rise from a chair, suffered from disagreeable feelings in my head and was greatly annoyed with the kidney secretions. I was never free from depression, for the dull grinding pain over my kidneys took all the snap out of me. I obtained more benefit from the use of Doan's Kidney Pills than from all the other medicines I ever took. I do not hesitate to recommend them whenever opportunity arises."

For sale by all dealers, price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents in the U. S. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

One of the most peculiar trades on record took place several days ago. A one-legged man named James Bruner was standing on the street corner, when another fellow afflicted in a like manner came swinging across the street on his crutches He paused before the first man, and eyeing him quizzically, remarked: "Say, partner, let's go up street and buy us a pair of shoes. As one man had lost his right leg and the other his left, they hobbled up to the shoe store and got fitted with a shoe apiece. Then each fellow paid his half of the bill, and the two men, with a pair of shoes between them, went on their ways rejoicing.—Punt.

LAMBERT'S LINEAGE

By Epes W. Sargent

Copyright, 1905, by R B McClure

Mollie was waiting for him in the hall "What did he say?" she whispered eagerly.

"What the governor of North Carolina said to the other fellow,' began Preston Lambert. "Then I said I wanted to marry you, and he put the bottle back in the cellaret."

"Then he won't let you marry me?" she said wistfully.

"Well, he didn't exactly say me nay,' admitted Lambert, "but he made one prohibitive condition. I've got to get a family."

"A family?" she echoed.

"Just that. I suggested that he was a trifle premature, but he explained that what he wanted was back numbers, not future issues"

"Oh!" wailed Mollie. "Why did he ever find out that he was a direct descendant of William the Conqueror?"

"Pure cussedness," suggested Lambert. "Bill didn't hand down any money or titles that reached this far It was Jabez Gordon who did most of that work."

"Grandpa Gordon was awfully poor when he married grandma," she assented. "It's funny they never thought about William the Conqueror before they got married."

"When you're poor," declared Lambert, "it doesn't matter much whether Adam or Bill Smith stands at the head of your family tree."

"I hate family trees," breathed the girl vehemently "I wish dad never had heard of his genealogy."

"Oh, well," said Lambert cheerfully, "we can't chop the infernal tree down. I'll have to study forestry and learn how to grow one."

"Did he say you could marry me if you did?" she asked joyously

"He said that for the sake of the race he wanted his daughter to marry a man as nobly born as herself. He sort of intimated that he had an eye on an English duke, with a pedigree as long as a snake's tail."

"I won't be a duchess," Mollie protested. "I want to be Mrs. Preston Lambert."

"And so you shall," he declared. "I'll have a family tree as tall as a cocoanut backed up here on a truck inside of three months."

"It took pa three years and a half to get his together," she dissented.

"That's all right," laughed Lambert, stooping to kiss her. "I'm a wonder when I get started."

Mollie followed him to the door and watched him swing down the street. Then she went into the now deserted library and gained some consolation from making faces at the elaborate design whereby the Gordon ancestry was traced in a direct line to royal blood.

More than one small fortune had been spent upon the tree, and it was the pride of Robert Gordon's life. The millions he derived from his father had been nothing to him until this ancestral line had been discovered He had been merely Jabez Gordon's son. Gordon the elder had been a "Forty-niner" and had left vast stores of mineral wealth to his son and a faint recollection of his grandfather.

Robert Gordon's respect for ancestry amounted almost to a mania, and his first attention upon becoming the heir to the fortune was given to work on his historical records.

None of them had been successful until Gottfried Shackmeister had picked up the scent, and in due course delivered to his client letters and other documents to prove that the Gordons were a branch of an old English line.

It had not only taken him more than three years, but also involved traveling far and wide. Gordon, however, had not grudged either time or money.

It was less than three months before Lambert sought a formal interview with Gordon.

"I have that tree you wanted," he announced lightly as he was ushered into Gordon's presence.

"Tree?" was the puzzled exclamation. "I don't remember any conversation I have had with you on the matter of trees, Mr. Lambert. I leave those matters to the landscape gardener."

"Don't you remember," reminded Lambert, "that you said I could not marry Mollie until I had some man whose name has come thundering down the ages to blame my existence upon?"

"I recall saying that it was a duty we Gordons owed our race to marry only into families as ancient as our own," he corrected.

"Well," continued Lambert flippantly, "this is it!" He placed upon the table a small handbag, from which he extracted old volumes, time stained parchments, papyrus and what not.

"I find," he rattled on, "that I am directly descended from the Pharaohs"

Gordon rose angrily. "This is an insult," he stormed, "to come here with this absurd collection of forgeries which you presume to tell me are records dating back more than 2,000 years and collected by you within three months. Will you leave or shall I have to call the butler?"

"Hadn't better call Peters," urged Lambert smoothly. "I hate to do it, but I want to marry Mollie Let me marry her and I'll ignore the fact that my family runs farther back than yours."

"Never!" shouted Gordon. "I would see her dead first!"

"On your own head be it then," said Lambert impersonally. "Here goes for a confession. I made these records myself."

"I know you did," almost screamed Gordon, "and you come here and have the effrontery to compare them to my own authenticated documents."

"I made some of those too," said Lambert quietly.

There was something in his manner that bore conviction. Gordon dropped into a chair. "How?" he gasped feebly

"Do you remember," he asked, "that some years ago I was suspended from college for a hazing scrape?"

"Yes," whispered Gordon.

"Well, the pater shut down on the funds. I did not want to bother my sister (mother was dead, you know), and I earned some money writing for the papers.

"I could not get a regular job, but I picked up a dollar or two from the Sunday editions One day they put me on the track of a man who was supposed to have forged a manuscript. He was not the culprit, but he was sorry for me, and gave me a good story on how it was done.

"He let me make a fake script myself, and somehow I seemed to be more than usually clever at it. It isn't a part of my history I'm proud of, but I went into partnership Remember, I had been brought up to regard myself as the heir of my father's money and had not learned to work. For three months I had starved more often than I had eaten

"This man—Shackmeister—was working on that selfsame tree at the time, and I wrote that letter of William's myself. I soaked the paper in acid, colored it with coffee and all that sort of thing Here's one," producing a paper, "just like it. You can see for yourself."

Gordon examined the paper, comparing it with the one in the frame of which he had been so proud. When he turned he had aged ten years. Lambert was sorry for him.

"It's too bad," he said as he stepped over to the bowed figure. I never would have told you, but I could not see Mollie's happiness—and mine—spoiled by your pride in a lot of manufactured history."

"It was my own fault," groaned the broken man. "I set up for myself an idol, placing it before my daughter's happiness, and upon my own shoulders my selfishness has recoiled."

He pressed a button and the well trained butler presently entered noiselessly. "Ask Miss Gordon to come to the library," said Mollie's father. Then to Lambert, "You won't tell her, will you?"

"Not unless you think I ought to."

"I must brave it out," said Gordon with a wan smile. "Let it lie a secret between ourselves."

Quietly Lambert moved to the fireplace, and when Mollie came in only a white ash over the glowing coals told of the burning of a tree.

"Man Is Nature's Enemy."

"Man," said Professor Lankaster in his Romanes lecture at Oxford, "is nature's rebel." Natural selection having, as supposed, lifted him from so low—the monad—to his present high estate is now believed by many of its advocates to be a failure as regards raising him any higher. Having done so much in the past, it is thought to be incapable of doing "the little more" which is of such great importance. While in the case of other creatures their actions are supposed to play into the hands of natural selection, so that this beneficent force becomes the alma mater of new races, in the case of man it has been otherwise. His own actions have defeated the aims of natural selection for his welfare. Darwin held similarly pessimistic views. "In one of my latest conversations with Darwin," writes Dr. A. R. Wallace, "he expressed himself very gloomily on the future of humanity." And this was on the grounds that under present conditions the fittest did not survive.—London Globe.

A Tax Dodger.

The income tax is an old institution in England, and a story which should amuse all taxpayers is told of the way in which Kelly, former owner of the Haymarket Opera House, evaded paying his tax The commissioners called to protest at his having given his income at £500. "Sir," said Mr. Kelly, "I confess I have erred in my return. In fact, I have not 500 pence." "Are you not stage manager at the opera house?" inquired one of the commissioners "I am," said Kelly, "but there is no salary attached I do it to gratify my love of music." "Well, but you teach?" said another. "I do, but I have no pupils," was the ready answer. "I think you are a concert singer?" persisted a third. "You are right, but I have no engagements." "At least you have a good salary at Drury Lane?" cried the last. "A very good one," said the imperturbable victim, "but it is never paid." He was let off.

Persia's Anthem.

Persia is an ancient country, as the world goes It has ancient monuments. It has a literature in several ages. But one of its institutions, its national anthem, is comically modern. Several French bandmasters were in Persia less than half a century ago, organizing military bands. The shah was about to start for Europe and it occurred to him that he ought to have a national anthem. Summoning M. Lemaire, the French military music master of Teheran, the afternoon before his departure, the monarch, with an instinct more imperial than musical, ordered him to have a "Persian" national anthem composed and played before him by the imperial band next morning. There was night work for everybody concerned in Teheran that night, but next morning the "national anthem" was duly played and approved, and it is the "national anthem" still.

Antarctic Penguins.

Some of the penguins in the antarctic regions weigh as much as eighty pounds and are about four feet high, with a splendid orange patch on the neck. The young take three years to develop fully, and even then the plumage is distinctly less brilliant than in the older birds. Both the movements and migration of the penguins are remarkable. When first followed the bird prefers to walk, but when in danger of being caught it drops on to its abdomen and with the help of the wings glissades at a pace too great to be overtaken by a man walking. They seem aware of the movements of the great ice fields and use them to help their migration to the pack ice in the north. They take trouble to collect stones, which they delight to steal from one another's piles, for nests.

Many of the ways of the penguins are suggestive of preserved instincts. Their attitude when sleeping is modeled on that of birds with fully developed wings. But the penguin has to be content with reaching the shelter of his wing with no more than the tip of his beak.

Ancient Indian Observatory.

At Jeypore, the pleasant, healthy capital of one of the most prosperous independent states of Rajputana, India, is the famous jautra or observatory, the largest of the five built by the celebrated royal astronomer, Jey Sing, the founder of Jeypore, who succeeded the rajas of Amber in 1693.

Chosen by Muhammad Shah to reform the calendar, his astronomical observations were formulated in tables which corrected those of De la Hire. He built five observatories, at Delhi, Benares, Muttra, Ujjain and Jeypore.

It is not under cover, but is an open courtyard, full of curious and fantastic instruments invented and designed by him. They have been allowed to go out of repair, and many of them are now quite useless, it being impossible even to guess what purpose they served in the wonderfully accurate calculations and observations of their inventor, but the dial, gnomons, quadrants, etc., still remain of great interest to astronomers.—Scientific American.

A Lost Art.

Modern stained glass is a terrible thing, and, great as is the progress of science in other directions, up to now it has failed to discover how the makers of mediaeval times produced those wonderful deep tints which never tire the eye or offend the taste.—Country Life.

Impoverished Soil

Impoverished soil, like impoverished blood, needs a proper fertilizer. A chemist by analyzing the soil can tell you what fertilizer to use for different products.

If your blood is impoverished your doctor will tell you what you need to fertilize it and give it the rich, red corpuscles that are lacking in it. It may be you need a tonic, but more likely you need a concentrated fat food, and fat is the element lacking in your system.

There is no fat food that is so easily digested and assimilated as

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil

It will nourish and strengthen the body when milk and cream fail to do it. Scott's Emulsion is always the same; always palatable and always beneficial where the body is wasting from any cause, either in children or adults.

A Question of Life or Death

[Original.]

"Am I dead?"

A man in a dazed condition had entered a rural police station lugging a coffin and stood before the sergeant's desk. His skeleton figure, his livid skin, his shrunken eyes, all went to prove that he was a corpse, voice and motion alone indicating the contrary The sergeant drew back, and something like a shiver passed over a couple of roundsmen who were lounging by the desk.

"What do you mean?" stammered the sergeant.

The man put his hand in his pocket—the policemen fancied they could hear his bones rattle as he did so—took out a clipping from a newspaper and laid it on the desk. It read:

> Died.—Kirkham—On the 25th of September, John Leonard Kirkham, aged twenty-six.

"I see," said the sergeant. "What did you die of?"

The corpse replied by drawing forth another clipping, which read:

> At midnight on the 24th inst. a young man named Kirkham bade good night to a friend at the ferry to cross the river. It proved a Styx, for he never reached the other side. It is supposed he fell overboard and was drowned, since he had no cause to be weary of life. Indeed, he was about to be married to a very estimable young lady. His body has not been recovered.

"You are the body?" asked the sergeant, looking up after reading the item.

"Yes."

"Well, tell us about it."

"When I entered the ferryboat," the stranger began, "I had just bidden good night and given my final instructions to my best man, for I was to have been married the next day to the loveliest girl in the world."

The speaker's voice trembled, and he was obliged to pause. Then he gave a frightened glance at the coffin, which he had stood on end beside him, and proceeded:

"A fortune had been left me by an aunt whom I have not seen since I was a little boy, on condition that I marry her adopted daughter, my aunt's object being to keep the property in the family and benefit the girl she had brought up and loved like a child of her own. I was her only blood relation living. Just before entering the dock on the far side of the river a man stepped up to me and said:

"'Can you tell me, sir, what that is burning back of us in the city?'

"He led the way—we were on the lower deck—to the stern, and I followed him. Since we were about to enter the dock every one had gone forward. On reaching the extreme stern, while I was leaning over the rail looking for the fire, he suddenly grasped my legs and tumbled me overboard. I was rescued by two men in a skiff. The man who had thrown me over jumped into it, and the others pulled away."

The sergeant looked at the roundsmen knowingly and remarked, "There's a clew for ferryboat disappearances." The stranger proceeded:

"I was rowed to a dock where a carriage was waiting and forced to enter it, the man who had thrown me over getting in with me. I saw him hand the men in the boat a roll of bills and concluded they had been simply hired for the job. The carriage was driven till dawn, then stopped, and I was blindfolded and led into a house. At last the bandage was taken from my eyes, and I found myself in a room from which the only view was chimney pots.

"For several days I lived, without seeing any one, on bread and water that was handed in to me. On the third day my kidnaper came in and showed me the notices I have shown you.

"'You're dead,' he said, 'and I propose that you shan't come to life again, at least on this side of the planet.'

"He did not tell me what he was going to do with me, but gave me to understand that resistance would be useless, and, whatever happened, if I failed to play any part that might be expected of me I would be murdered. When he went away he forgot to take the clippings I have shown you, and I put them in my pocket.

"That night I smelled a strange odor and slept like a log. The next morning I was in a stupor, but conscious. My kidnaper came into my room with another man, who looked me over, then sat down at a table and wrote something, the kidnaper showing him an envelope he had taken from my pocket. All that day I was under the influence of the drug, and the next I must have been given an extra dose, for I was unconscious.

"I felt a shock and opened my eyes. I was lying in the road with my legs in this coffin. I heard horses galloping away from me. I got up, walked a short distance and found myself here. Now I'd like to know if I am a dead man or a live one."

"You're alive and will continue to live till we've tracked your kidnaper. Are you sure that your aunt had no relation living who, in case of your death, would be the heir at law?"

"She hadn't a kinsman on earth. She had had a son, a scapegrace, but he was killed in a drunken broil."

"No, he wasn't. He's alive and has kidnaped you to prevent your complying with the terms of the will by the marriage and intended to furnish proofs that you were dead and claim your property. A runaway during your funeral spilled you out and spoiled his game."

The sergeant's diagnosis proved to be correct. Mr. Kirkham was married a few days later, and the kidnaper went to state prison.

CHARLES P. THURBER.

Needless.

The good fairy called her assistant and showed her a golden box.

"Take this box," she said, "and lock it carefully in the safe It contains good advice."

"My mistress," replied the assistant, "why should we lock up good advice? No one will ever take it." Puck.

Long Words.

In Frederick Saunders' "Salad For the Solitary and Social" he says, "The naturalist Lovell published a book at Oxford in 1661 entitled 'Panzoologicomineralogia,' which is nearly as long a word as Rabelais' proposed title for a book—namely, 'Antipericatametaparhengedamphicribrationes!'" And in a footnote he gives two others from a pamphlet in his possession, published years ago in London. The title reads, "Chrononhotonthologos, the Most Tragical Tragedy That Ever Was Tragedised by any Company of Tragedians." The first two lines of this effusion read:

> Aldeborontiphoscophosnio!
> Where left you Chrononhotonthologos?

It is stated that there is an English dictionary containing the only word of eleven syllables, "Honorificabilitudinity." "Disproportionableness" is given as the longest reasonable word in the English language.

One Redeeming Feature.

A Kentucky woman is responsible for the following story.

"In the tobacco region of my state," said she, "the men live and move and have their being in the smoky leaf. There was a woman whose husband died. He had been an all around bad sort, and therefore when the bishop of the diocese called he was surprised to find the widow crushed with grief. He tried to console, but, finding her obdurate, he finally became irritated.

"'You know perfectly well,' said he sternly, 'that he was a derider of religion, that he gambled away all your property and that he was an unfaithful husband.'

"'I know, bishop, I know,' sobbed the poor woman, 'but I had a great deal to be thankful for. He never chewed tobacco.'"—New York Press.

A TRULY IDEAL WIFE
HER HUSBAND'S BEST HELPER

Vigorous Health Is the Great Source of the Power to Inspire and Encourage—All Women Should Seek It.

One of the most noted, successful and richest men of this century, in a recent article, has said, "Whatever I am and whatever success I have attained in this world I owe all to my wife. From the day I first knew her she has been an inspiration, and the greatest helpmate of my life."

Mrs. Bessie Ainsley

To be such a successful wife, to retain the love and admiration of her husband, to inspire him to make the most of himself, should be a woman's constant study.

If a woman finds that her energies are flagging, that she gets easily tired, dark shadows appear under her eyes, she has backache, headaches, bearing-down pains, nervousness, whites, irregularities or the blues, she should start at once to build up her system by a tonic with specific powers, such as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Following we publish by request a letter from a young wife:

Dear Mrs Pinkham:

"Ever since my child was born I have suffered, as I hope few women ever have, with inflammation, female weakness, bearing down pains, backache and wretched headaches. It affected my stomach so I could not enjoy my meals, and half my time was spent in bed.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman, and I feel so grateful that I am glad to write and tell you of my marvelous recovery. It brought me health, new life and vitality."—Mrs. Bessie Ainsley, 611 South 10th Street, Tacoma, Wash

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Ainsley it will do for every sick and ailing woman.

If you have symptoms you don't understand write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free and always helpful.

FIRE IN BONDSVILLE.

Three Houses, a Barn and Four Horses Burned.

LOSS ESTIMATED AT ABOUT $5000.

Blaze Started About 1 in the Morning. Tenants Save Part of Their Belongings.

The worst fire which has visited Bondsville for a number of years occurred early Tuesday morning, when two dwelling houses and a barn owned by Adolph Girouard, and a four-story tenement house owned by Rev. B McKeany, the latter being occupied by Polanders, were burned to the ground.

The fire was discovered about 1 o'clock on the roof of the barn, which was in the rear of the other three buildings. The barn was soon in flames and was burned to the ground before help could get there. Four horses perished, two belonging to Adolph Girouard, one to Charles Coto the butter dealer, and one to the Polish butcher, Anthony Bigos, who carried on a business in one of the houses burned. When it was seen that the fire was likely to spread and prove serious on account of the wind, the efforts of the people were directed to getting the furniture out of the adjoining buildings.

The two houses owned by Mr. Girouard were soon consumed. Mr. Girouard occupied the lower tenement of one, and the upper part was occupied by Mr and Mrs Herbert Capen. Anthony Bigos rented the downstairs tenement of the other and used the front part as a market. The upstairs tenement of this house was vacant. The other house, owned by Rev. B. McKeany and rented by Polanders, was soon in flames and totally destroyed.

Meanwhile the firemen had been summoned from Palmer and rendered all the help possible upon arrival. Had the wind been south instead of northwest the area burned would probably have been much larger and would no doubt have included the Roman Catholic church and John Hannifin's blacksmith shop and house, as they are all closely connected. Most of the families had time to remove a large part of their household goods with the exception of Anthony Bigos, who lost practically everything.

The loss is estimated at about $5000. Adolph Girouard and Mr. Bigos were partially insured, but the others had no insurance. The property burned was situated on the east side of South Main street, near Mr. Hannifin's blacksmith shop.

ANCIENT HOSTELRY CLOSED.

West Brookfield Hotel, Open Since 1760. No Public House in Town.

The old West Brookfield Hotel, which was first opened to the public in 1760, was closed last Saturday, leaving West Brookfield without a hotel for the present.

This old hotel, familiarly known as "Ye Ancient Tavern," is considered one of the oldest hotels in this section of the United States. The building was erected by David Hitchcock in 1760, and was occupied by him for 51 years. Hollis Hitchcock bought the property in 1811, running the hotel five years, selling to Capt. Samuel B. Thomas, who was proprietor one year. From 1819 to 1821 Jesse McCarthy was landlord, relinquishing to Charles M. Delaud, who leased the tavern two years. Charles M. Hitchcock was landlord from 1823 to 1827, being succeeded by David Field, who stayed only one year. In 1828 Elisha Hammond was proprietor til 1830, Lieut. Nathaniel Lynde then buying the property, and was in control two years. Cowee & Hathaway were proprietors from 1832 to 1867. Welcome M Smith, now living in West Brookfield, bought the property in 1867, and was landlord till 1874, selling out to Lucien Blair, who remained three years. Fassett & Cushman bought the hotel in 1877, managing it till they sold out in 1895 to George Messinger, who was landlord until the present year, being arrested for illegal liquor selling last summer. The property then passed into the hands of his debtors, the family selling out all personal property at auction last Tuesday, leaving the hotel closed. It is now offered for sale by H. N Coney of Ware.

Among the many distinguished visitors who visited the old tavern was Gen. George Washington, who was entertained by Landlord Hitchcock October 22, 1789, while on a tour of New England after his inauguration as president of the United States. Three months afterward Martha Washington spent the night in the tavern. President John Adams stopped at "Ye Ancient Tavern" in 1799, driving into West Brookfield with his coach and four, being given the best room the house afforded by Landlord Hitchcock. Jerome Bonaparte, who received the appointment of King of Westphalia in 1807, was entertained with his bride, Elizabeth Patterson, in 1804. Gen Lafayette while on his visit to America in 1824, stopped at this tavern.

WARE OVERSEERS DIFFER

As to Whether Additional Funds for Support of Poor are Needed.

There seems to be a difference of opinion existing among the Ware overseers of poor as to whether or not it will be necessary to call a special town meeting to appropriate funds for their use before the annual town meeting in March. Mr Casey, secretary of the board, states that there is over $2000 due the town from the state, and towns and cities throughout the state, for the care of poor not belonging to Ware, and if this is paid a special town meeting will not be necessary. If these payments come in slowly it will be necessary to secure funds, probably in January or February. F. W. Farrar, chairman of the board, claims that there is only about $600 available of the $8000 appropriated for the poor department. The sum of $800 was appropriated for an almoner, but this cannot be used except for the purpose for which it was appropriated, and there is no prospect of an almoner being appointed. Mr Casey states that one cause of the lack of funds is the fact that there has not been, nor will there be, any revenue from the town farm. Just what the outcome of the disagreement will be is a conundrum at present.

FOOTBALL.

Wesleyan Academy was defeated at Wilbraham Monday afternoon by the Connecticut literary institution, 17 to 0.

The Wares won a hard-played game from the St. Peter's eleven on the pumping station grounds in Ware Saturday afternoon by the score of 5 to 4.

For Stock and Poultry Raisers.

The Hatch Experiment Station in Amherst has just issued Bulletin 106, entitled "Condimental Stock and Poultry Foods." This publication contains in tabulated form the chemical analysis of 65 distinct brands, together with an enumeration of the materials entering into their composition. The results of the examination are discussed briefly and pointedly under a number of headings, such as "basic or food ingredients," "quantity and value of medicines," "cost and selling price compared," "unreasonable claims of manufacturers," etc. One brief chapter is devoted to a resumé of different experiments with these foods, and another gives the results of an experiment conducted at Amherst with Pratt's food. The edition is limited and every farmer, dairyman and poultryman who has not received a copy and who desires this, as well as future feed bulletins should apply promptly.

Probate Court Business.

At a session of the probate court in Springfield Wednesday the following business of a local interest was transacted: Will proved of—Julia A. Bartlett, late of Hampden, John Bartlett of Hampden executor. Administrations granted in the estates of—Hanora Sugrue, late of Palmer, John J. Sugrue administrator; Henry Hall, late of Monson, Freelon Q. Ball of Monson administrator.

WEST WARREN.

Mrs Gilbert Labombarde, a weaver in No. 1 mill of the cotton mills, was struck below the left eye with the point of a shuttle, which flew from a loom yesterday morning, inflicting a bad wound.

Charles M. Heidel, formerly assistant in the office of the cotton mills, who has been bookkeeper in the weaving department of the Palmer Mill at Three Rivers for the past four months, has returned to West Warren and taken a position as clerk in the mill office.

WARE.

The annual meeting of Eden lodge of Masons was held Monday evening, when the following officers were elected: W. M., Minot C. Wood; S. W., C. B. Wetherby; J. W., James E. Allen; treasurer, David Woolley; secretary, James H. Schoonmaker.

The firemen were called out Saturday morning between 2 and 3 o'clock for a fire in the rear of the house on West street occupied by Mrs. Ephemie Provost, near Byrns' bakery. The damage was confined to a small shed of little value, that was practically destroyed. The blaze is supposed to have started from a stove in a room in the shed, used by some boys as a club room.

A meeting of the East Congregational church was held in the chapel last evening and it was voted unanimously to extend a call to Rev. George B. Hatch of Three Oaks, Mich., to become its pastor. It was voted to offer Rev. Mr. Hatch a salary of $2000 a year and the use of the parsonage near the church. While the members have no positive assurance, they are quite hopeful of an acceptance by Rev. Mr. Hatch of the call.

AGED WARREN MAN DEAD.

W. B. Ramsdell, One of Town's Foremost Citizens.

HAD REACHED AGE OF EIGHTY YEARS

Born in Town and Always Lived There. Held Many Offices of Trust.

William Barker Ramsdell, 80, died at his home in Warren Wednesday morning after a three-days' illness.

Mr. Ramsdell was born in Warren June 2, 1825, son of Homer and Betsy Stockbridge Ramsdell. He obtained his early education in the common schools, a private school and later in Warren Academy. His father died when he was 25 years old, and for 14 years he carried on the farm on Reed street, until 1861, when he moved into the village and took up the manufacture of shoes, which he successfully carried on for 20 years. For the past 20 years he had retired from active business, but looked after his property. When a young man he studied civil engineering, and for 30 years, in addition to his other business, he did much surveying, but poor eyesight kept him from such work for the past few years.

Mr. Ramsdell served the town many years as selectman and assessor. During the existence of the board of trade he was its president, and worked hard to obtain new industries. He was one of the founders of the Warren Savings Bank, and for many years served as a trustee, also as vice president and a member of the board of investment.

Mr. Ramsdell owned the most real estate of any one person in Warren, and paid the largest individual tax. In politics he was a Republican, but always retained the privilege of voting independently when he could not indorse a party measure.

Mr. Ramsdell is survived by a widow, Mary A. Makepeace Ramsdell, a sister, Mrs. Mary E., wife of Joseph R. Makepeace of Springfield, and two daughters, Mrs Jennie R., wife of George M. Faulkner of Springfield, and Mrs. Emma R., wife of Joseph G. Hastings of Warren.

The funeral will be held at the home on Maple street to-morrow afternoon at 2.30, and burial will be in the family lot in Pine Grove cemetery.

A COLLEGE EDUCATION FREE.

Twelve Boston Globe Free Scholarships and Other Awards Aggregating in Cash More Than $10,000 for Boys and Girls of New England.

A college education is the ambition of a great majority of the boys and girls of New England in these days, however unattainable it may seem to many of them. A university or technical training is no longer regarded as the exclusive privilege of the few, but is looked upon as the key to the advancement of the many, their main chance to rise in the world.

A scholarship, at home or abroad, amounting to $500 a year in cash for four years, or $2000, is to be the highest award. There will be three scholarships carrying $250 a year for four years, or $1000 each; four will carry $150 a year for four years, or $600 for each; four more will carry $100 a year, or a total of $400. Among other contestants the Globe will distribute more than $125 savings bank books, ranging from deposits of $50 down to $5.

The Boston Globe, which has so long been the favorite of the young people, always studying their needs and sympathizing with their aspirations, has opened a free competition for all the pupils in the schools of New England.

The Globe is confident that the distribution of all these free scholarships among its youthful readers will prove a powerful general stimulus toward higher education throughout the schools of New England, and that the more than 125 savings bank books to be distributed among the boys and girls at the close of the contest may become positive incentives to lives of thrift.

The polls are now open, and while only pupils in New England schools may be candidates, every one may vote, old or young, regardless of residence.

Read the conditions in the Boston Globe. Vote early! Vote often!

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Eusebe St. Pierre, who was taken to the state hospital in Tewksbury last week Monday, died in that institution Saturday. The shoemaker's shop, in which he lived, was destroyed by fire Sunday, Nov. 5, and Mr. Pierre had a narrow escape, and it is thought that the shock hastened his death. He leaves a widow in West Warren, and two sons and one daughter.

BELCHERTOWN.

Death of Mrs. Clarissa S. Mather.

Mrs. Clarissa Stebbins Mather, 83, died Saturday night at the home of her niece, Mrs. M. D. Longley, after a long illness. Mrs. Mather was the daughter of Samuel Hinsdale and Nancy Reed Stebbins, Mr. Stebbins being a direct descendant of the first settler of Belchertown, Benjamin Stebbins. In 1839 Mrs. Mather joined the Congregational church in Belchertown, and in 1851 was married to Henry Mather of West Suffield, Ct., who died many years ago in Hartford, Ct., where Mrs. Mather resided for many years since his death. She is survived by a daughter, Miss Mary Mather, who is a teacher in the Windsor schools, and by several nieces and nephews, among them Dea. Addison Bartlett, Mrs. M. D. Longley and Miss Sabin of Belchertown. The body was taken to Hartford for burial Tuesday.

A meeting of the Holland club was held Monday evening, with Miss E. A. Blackmer, with a large attendance. The reports were read by the secretary, after which several interesting papers on "Russia," the topic chosen for the year, were read. "The geography of Russia," by Miss Edith Towne, "The Ancestors of the Russians," Mrs. Alice M. Kendall, "The Verangians," by Miss Belle Snow were given. Other papers were read by Miss Joan Ferry, Miss Maude Bridgman and Mrs. Henry R Gould on the early Christianity and early literature of the Russians. The business transacted included provision for painting the park benches.

Vernon lodge of Masons have held their annual meeting and elected the following officers: W. M., Guy C. Allen Jr.; secretary, H. A. Hopkins; treasurer, M. S. Barton; S W., William S. Chamberlin; J. W., S. W. Perry; senior deacon, C. L. Judkins; junior deacon, M. G. Ward; senior steward, T. Dewey; junior steward, Mr. Smichd; tyler, Guy C. Allen; chaplain, J. W. Jackson; organist, Roswell Allen. These officers will be installed on the second Tuesday in December, and the installation will be private.

Our Boston Letter

It tells about

The House Speakership Contest — Some Boston Property Owners — Campaign Expenses Several Other Matters.

BOSTON, Nov. 15, 1905.

At the time of writing the outcome of the speakership contest is uncertain. Clearly, either candidate, regarding Cole and Walker as the only candidates, would rush into print the moment he had a clear majority of the Republican representatives-elect signed for him. It is certain, on this premise, that neither has the majority, which would be 85 out of the 169 Republicans in the House in all. A few are doubtless holding off, and the presumption is either that they are the conservative sort who do not propose to make up their minds in a hurry, or they are the mercenaries who want committee positions in return for their votes. Experience has shown that we have the latter kind with us. It would be a very annoying thing to the candidates, and of no possible good to the public if a few unprincipled men of this sort should hold the contest open till January, negotiating with the candidates, or trying to browbeat them. A man who has been taking a hand in the matter, not a member, but one who is working for the public good, tells me that he knows certainly of members whose first choice is Cole, but who have been negotiating with Walker to the extent of making him believe that they favor him, so that (this is my informant's conclusion) they may be able to say, in case he is elected: "We were with you in the fight." If Cole wins the prize, doubtless they will say the same thing to him. Such men as these make it possible for each candidate to claim them and do it honestly, as far as he believes that they really prefer him. At present, according to personal statements, each candidate believes that he has a majority, but neither is yet able to show the desired list of signers.

Our own wickedness as a people, politically, financially and socially, seems to be a fruitful topic in the public mind these days, hastened by the New York insurance exposures, stimulated by the discussion of tainted money, promoted further by the recent New York play which was so outrageous that it was tolerated for the first night only, and further emphasized locally by the suit case and the campaign for the Boston mayoralty. Permit me to add one specification further. A reputable physician in Boston, but connected with public affairs so much that his time goes to them and not to private practice, tells me that much property in Boston is owned by persons who stand high socially, religiously and financially who permit that property to be used for purposes which they must know to be immoral. Mention is made of a building where one of the notorious characters in the suit case matter had offices for years where the owner was one of our political reformers and figured in lists of subscribers for philanthropic causes and even had his name mentioned as candidate for the mayoralty. Other names are given of persons who stand high who owe it to their reputation to be sure that their tenants are only those beyond suspicion, but whose property is used for abominable purposes, and of whose uses it does not seem that the landlords can be ignorant. Crime would not thrive nearly as much here if the owners of property where it is carried on were rigorous in insisting that no questionable business should be transacted on the premises. Here is something for public sentiment to reach. If we are to have a moral awakening all along the line, in national politics, in high finance, in religious contributions, why not include real estate and the responsibilities of landlords in the list? It is a subject worthy to stand in the same class as these other causes.

People have questioned the value of the corrupt practices, law and candidates have complained of its annoyances. Holes in it are pointed out, big enough to drive through the traditional coach and four. Questions are reiterated whether it is worth while to go through so much bother in order to get so little result, and the friends of the law have tried, but in vain so far, to agree upon something which will be satisfactory. But the law is working good after all, for it brings out facts which the public would know otherwise only by accident, and probably never know at all. For instance, Gov. Douglas spent some $36,000 last year for campaign expenses. Current report has it that he has given about as much to the Democratic campaign fund. Somebody had plenty of money on that side to give. Eben S. Draper reported, under oath, that he spent over $9000 to secure the Republican nomination for lieutenant-governor. His returns of campaign expenses for his election show $28,920 more. Putting together Douglas's last year's figures and Draper's for this year, it is evident that, if this practice continues, no man can afford to be a candidate for high public office unless he is ready to spend large sums of money to secure the nomination or the election, either one or both. Thus the law renders large public service in advertising the fact. It is worth, in itself, all the law costs. There is no possible doubt that this publicity is due to the law. Here, then, in itself, is a great public evil at which the public will surely strike as soon as it becomes of large importance, compared with other evils. It is tolerated at present, just as intimidation was tolerated, more or less, till the Australian ballot gave perfect secrecy. But when the issue shall be made, there is no possible doubt that this enormous expenditure will be condemned as undemocratic and the man who is guilty will suffer for it, because it will be popular for the people, not the candidates, to pay the expense of getting themselves to the polls.

Scene the other day in the office of a public-spirited economist who is constantly studying public questions: Enter a canvasser for Collier's Weekly, to whom, after business, the economist speaks:

"Now, you have a chance to see a good many men. I want you to tell me what you find is the actual condition of people, as far as you can judge, in these times of great prosperity. Is this prosperity as real as it is said to be?"

Canvasser: "There are a great many people to-day who are suffering for the necessities of life. Prices are very high and they find it hard to live. I know college graduates who don't know what to do for work. Men dressed as well as you and I are walking the streets anxious to get a job."

Comment by the economist: "This is only one more indication that our so-called prosperity is a concentrated prosperity, that while statistics show that a large amount of business is being done, yet the profits go into the hands of a comparative few. Furthermore, conditions have become such that there is small chance for young men, or men of small means, to go into business themselves, but they must work

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 17, 1905.

WITH the suggestion that turkeys may be 30 cents a pound where is the occasion for thankfulness, unless it is that they are not 35?

IT'S a whole week and a half—to be exact, 11 days—since the election of a county commissioner pledged to the navigation of the Connecticut river, and not a sign of a steamer on those waters yet!

WE are patiently waiting for those express cars General Manager Page of the electric road promised from Springfield to Ludlow. Now's the time to put them on, for the shopping travel for Eastern Hampden is heavy just at present.

MR. WHITNEY'S recount of the vote for lieutenant-governor gives him a gain of about 400, with the satisfaction of cutting Mr. Draper's lead down to a little less than 2000, but it still falls a good deal short of landing him in the position he coveted.

AMONG other election results was the sweeping of Salt Lake City by the gentiles, the result of Senator Reed Smoot attempting to boss the place. The result may have an effect on the Senator's contest for a right to a seat in the upper branch of Congress.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT says that Henry M. Whitney misrepresented him in his report of a recent visit to the president concerning the matter of a reduction of the tariff on hides. Mr. Whitney says he didn't. It won't take the public long to make up its mind which is right in his claim and which is not.

AN UNUSUAL number of cases of typhoid fever in Springfield has caused that city to look sharply after the cleanliness of its several food supplies, with the result that some of the dairies furnishing milk to the city were found in bad condition and the owners notified to remedy the defects before they sold any more milk.

THE pacing record is now down well under two minutes, Dan Patch having made a mile last Saturday without wind shield in 1 58, the former record being 1.59¼. It was not so long ago that two minutes was looked forward to as something fast; two seconds off that is a whole lot. How long will it stand as a record?

ATTORNEY-GENERAL PARKER decides that he has no authority as an official to "butt in" on the Royal Arcanum assessment matter, and declines to lend his name to a petition for an injunction against the supreme officers putting the increased rates into effect. It is a matter solely concerning the certificate holders, and all have equal rights individually.

IT is announced that the "tainted money" issue is closed. Good; it has been open and odorous long enough. It is also announced that "there need be no fear that moral issues will be raised hereafter in the solicitation of money." Of course not. The rule will be the eminently proper one of taking what is offered for the good of the cause, "and no questions asked."

BOSTON is evidently in line for a housecleaning and reform, Louis A. Frothingham, who withdrew from certain election to the Legislature and speakership of the House to become the candidate of the citizens' movement of the Republican party for mayor, having been nominated last night over Judge Henry S. Dewey. There ought to be no question of his election.

WONDER of wonders! Richard A. McCurdy, president of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, has asked that his salary be cut from $150,000 to $75,000. Mr. McCurdy would have stood in a much better light if he had done this before the investigations began. But without the investigations he'd never have done it, so is entitled to no credit for a move forced upon him by public opinion.

THERE is a suggestion that the incoming Legislature will be asked to materially alter the existing abuttors' law regarding the sale of liquor, and the law which now prohibits its sale within 400 feet of a schoolhouse, in the interests of Boston hotel men who are now barred from selling on their premises. The ground is that no good hotels can be run without the privilege of supplying its guests with liquors if they desire them, and that a goodly proportion of the guests of such hotels do so desire. Such a move would be sure to bring out strong opposition. If the hotels must have licenses, cut out a few of the saloons, but the number of Boston licenses would not seem to need increasing.

A GOOD work is being done by the Massachusetts Association for promoting the interests of the adult blind in calling attention to an act passed by the last Legislature which calls upon any person, parent, physician or nurse to report, any time within two weeks of birth, the case of a child whose eyes become inflamed, swollen or red and show an unnatural discharge; the penalty for neglect is a fine of from $50 to $200. Much of the existing blindness is caused by opthalmia of the newly-born, which can be prevented if promptly attended to, and it is to this end the association desires the above information given as wide a circulation as possible.

Two election officials in the town of Ludlow found themselves in a peculiar position in connection with the recount. They signed the necessary petition for the work, and when it reached the selectmen it alleged that the signers believed certain legal ballots had been illegally counted. That made the election officers say that they believed their work was wrongfully done, and with their knowledge. They however insisted that the petition had been changed after they signed it, and with one other signer withdrew their names on that condition. This left only nine names, where the law requires ten, and the recount has not been had yet. Besides, the ballots are locked up in a safe which has gone on a rampage and it can't be opened

A CASE which is attracting no little attention and which contains some peculiar conditions is that of the death of Stuart L. Pierson of Kenyon College, Ohio, on the night of October 28 while being initiated into a Greek letter fraternity. Young Pierson was sent to a railroad bridge to wait the coming of the committee which was to escort him to the fraternity house. Later his mangled body was found there, he having been killed by a train. The body was taken to the home of the college president, hastily prepared for burial, and hurried off to Cincinnati, his home, by his father before morning. An investigation by the coroner satisfied that person that young Pierson had been tied to the track, and that he had been killed by an extra engine, not down on the road's time card. Now the father blames the coroner for his activity in the matter and wants the thing let alone, while the president of the college is sure that there has already been too much publicity over the occurrence. If the coroner is sure of his ground there is no middle course for him. It is not to be thought of that the young man was tied to the track to meet his death, but he did as the result of a foolish and senseless prank, and those responsible should be made to suffer in some way for their worse than carelessness.

PALMER NEWS.

NEVER THE LIKE BEFORE.

Strange Creature Invades the Peace and Quiet of Baptist Hill.

The solitudes of "Baptist Hill" were startled a few days ago by the advent of a strange creature, the likes of which had ne'er before been seen in that section. It was a hugh monster, belching fire and smoke and steam, and snorting at a few hundred snorts per minute as it ambled along over the quiet back country byways. Fortunately the creation was under the control of a trained and steady hand, and seemed to mind instantly the slightest turn of the driver's hand. It approached from the direction of Three Rivers, and with slow but steady progress advanced and disappeared down the side of the mountain in the direction of North Wilbraham, only to retrace its route a few days later. It turned neither to the right nor the left, but minded its own business and harmed nothing except the nerves of the domestic animals and fowls which caught a glimpse of the monster. It was the steam road roller which went prancing and cavorting so gaily through the wilds, and the reason was that it was needed to finish the state road near W. M. Green's. It had been stored in Palmer and in order to get it to North Wilbraham it was necessary to take it by way of the Sikes place and Four Corners and across the new girder bridge at Three Rivers, none of the others being considered strong enough, thence over the hill to its destination. J. W. Brainerd was in charge, and he says that some of the pitches over Baptist Hill are about as steep as the roof of a house, and that it was a long, hard, slow pull, but by keeping at it he landed the machine in good order, and returned the same way. It is safe to say that this was the first time the peace and quiet of that section had ever been broken by any similar piece of apparatus

New Fire Apparatus Is All Right.

The new hose wagon ordered early in the year by the prudential committee of the fire district arrived last Saturday; it was taken to the engine house and on Sunday was loaded up, and Monday night was initiated by the call to Bondsville. The wagon is fitted with both shafts and pole, which are changeable in a moment. When it was learned that the fire Monday night was at Bondsville the shafts which are kept on the apparatus were unsnapped and the pole snapped on, a pair of J. M. Allen's horses were quickly attached, and the outfit started for the fire with thirteen men aboard. Arrived at the blaze the men had everything to work with, for in addition to 1000 feet of hose laid—not wound—in the wagon, it carries rubber boots, coats, axes, extinguishers, poles, a couple of short ladders, lanterns, etc. The firemen were unanimous in their commendation of this addition to this district's apparatus.

Mail From New York.

A new mail arrangement, which is expected to bring New York mail into Western Massachusetts earlier than formerly, went into effect Monday. Previously the mail which left New York at 2 15 a. m. was held in New Haven until 6.35, too late to connect with the morning mails in the various directions, and not getting to Palmer until 11.29. By the new schedule this mail is supposed to reach Springfield in time to leave there for the east at 7 o'clock, which would bring it to Palmer at 7 30, but so far it has not succeeded in getting here at that time by that route. It comes in by way of New London early in the morning sometimes, reaching there from New Haven; at other times it comes from Springfield at 9 30, and at others at 11.29. Probably when the system gets down to a smooth working basis there will be a different order of things and New York mail will reach Palmer at 7 30 a. m., as it should.

Team Collision—Man Hurt.

Sherman Stebbins of Monson received a bad wound in his head and a general shaking up Wednesday evening, the result of a collision between his and another team while on his way home. Mr. Stebbins left Palmer about 6 o'clock by way of the "Quarry" road, and when near the Graves farm, a little more than a mile from the village, his buggy was run into by a heavy peddler's wagon, the rear wheel of Mr. Stebbins's buggy being locked with the wheel of the other vehicle. The shock threw Mr. Stebbins out and he struck on his head, receiving a wound about three inches long, which took eight stitches to close. The horse was thrown on its back in the ditch, and lay wedged there, with its legs in the air, unable to move, until help was secured from the Rindge farm and it was taken out, practically unharmed.

Potter & Bond to Build Almshouse.

The town farm building committee met Wednesday evening to open the bids for building the house at the town farm. There were five bids, ranging from $7662 to $5925, at which price the contract was awarded to Potter & Bond. Work on the structure will begin next Monday, as the foundations are all ready, this work having been done under the supervision of the building committee. Patrick Crowley, one of the overseers, will be the inspector for the town on the new building. The barn has been practically completed with the exception of painting, which contract has been awarded to John W. Dimock of Palmer Center. A henhouse and an ice house have also been completed. R. L. Bond has resigned from the building committee.

Young Woman Returns.

Miss Jennie Brooks, who ran away from her home on Maple street four weeks ago last Sunday, returned Monday evening, reaching Palmer at 10 o'clock on the electric car from Springfield. Her mother, Mrs. Sophia Brooks, received a telegram Monday that the girl was on her way home, and was overjoyed to see her later. The young woman says she is sorry for her conduct and that she has come home to stay, and Mrs Brooks has consented to forgive and forget. Miss Brooks took her departure on Sunday morning, after her mother had gone to church, and for a time no trace of her whereabouts could be had, but it was later learned that she was with her sister in Niverville, N. Y, where she has been until her return.

District Court.

Carl Dahl was arraigned on a charge of drunkenness last Saturday, found guilty and sentenced to 30 days in the house of correction.

Monday's victim was Ferdinand Gayoski, also for drunkenness. He was assessed the sum of $6, which he lacked, and is accordingly boarding at the expense of the county.

Arthur Silverlake and Frank Robinson, the latter a gentleman of color, were charged Wednesday morning with vagrancy and sent up for 30 days each.

John Ferrell of Bondsville was found guilty of drunkenness this morning and fined $5, sentence being suspended until Monday for payment.

The regular services will be held at St. Paul's church next Sunday: Morning worship at 10.45, Sunday school at 12, J. Y P. C. U at 4, Y. P. C. U. at 6, evening service at 7. There will be preaching by the pastor in the morning and evening, and special music at the evening service. All are cordially welcome.

Turkeys for Bowling Scores.

E D. Tufts has arranged to give two turkeys to bowlers who make the highest scores at his alleys any time between now and the close of the alleys the night before Thanksgiving. The first will go to the maker of the highest three consecutive strings of bottle pins, and the other to the maker of the highest three consecutive strings at candle pins; match game scores will not count in the contest.

Reduced Rates.

The Central Vermont railroad announces reduced rates from all points to Springfield via Palmer on Saturday, November 25th, the day of the Brown-Dartmouth football game in that city Round-trip rates for this vicinity are as follows: Belchertown, 75 cents; Three Rivers, 55 cents; Monson, 60 cents; Stafford, 90 cents.

The whist party held in the Sunday school room of St. Patrick's church Tuesday evening was a very enjoyable affair and was largely attended, there being about 150 present The first prizes were won by Miss Julia Moran and John Pendergast, and the consolation prizes by Miss Nellie O'Brien and William Welch. After the whist was over there was dancing for a short time. Refreshments were served.

The Monson fire department was called out about 11 30 o'clock Monday night by an alarm of fire from box 36 located at the corner of Bliss and Elm streets at South Monson. The fire was in a tenement block owned by H D. Moulton and occupied by Frank McKloski. The fire which was in one of the partitions is supposed to have been started from a rat's nest near the chimney, and was put out with the use of pails of water before the department arrived. The damage was slight.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

for other people. This tends to subserviency, for they are dependent for a living upon the pleasure of their employers, and the consequence is that there is a decay of courage and of public spirit."

Our new commissioner of harbors and public lands, Henry J. Skeffington, is somewhat of a humorist on occasion. Being asked to-day what the board had been doing lately, he replied that the tide was running in and out as usual, and they had concluded to let it run. He thought it was well to keep the shores of Massachusetts clean, and they needed washing especially after the Boston city campaign.

Gov.-Elect Guild presided at the council meeting to-day, while Gov. Douglas has gone on his free hide mission to Washington, but he admits that he is very tired after the campaign.

Our progressive Twentieth Century Club opens to-night, in its new club-house, its series of three concerts upon the progress of American musical composition. The program has been arranged by the American Music Society and Arthur Foote and Arne Oldberg entertain the audience with their own compositions. The club is conducting one course of Biblical lectures and another of University lectures, the former being by different lecturers and the latter being by Professor John M. Tyler of Amherst college, his broad title being the laws of growth and development; their bearing on education. He has always been particularly satisfactory to Boston audiences, composed of teachers and others from the city and suburbs. A later course in the same series will be by Professor T. A. Jaggar of Harvard upon the earth as a living organism. Following the practice of last year, the club will give three plays, coming December 6, February 28 and April 25, to illustrate the development of drama.

General Morris Schaff of our state gas and electric light commission has come out with a book which has particular merit. It is about "Etna and Kirkersville," the town and village of his birth out in Ohio. Written for simple historical purposes, for the benefit of the people of his native place, yet he has produced a book that is such a model that it is readable by strangers for the lifelike pictures of these Ohio people, while, for lovers of nature, his description of the wonders of the locality, the fish and game, the forests, streams and ponds, the immensely stocked pigeon roost, the other natural features, for the government road and local enterprises are charmingly done and the book is inviting reading for any one. It will surely delight the people for whom it is written and it is an example to all authors of local histories, for it is a vast improvement upon the usual historical style as illustrated in various town histories of places in Massachusetts.

IN EL DORADO COUNTY

By Ina Wright Hanson

Copyright, 1905, by Ina Wright Hanson

Hermione jerked her fish pole impatiently.

"I'm sure it's better fishing over in El Dorado county," she said plaintively.

"There was once a man," I answered, "who stood at the fork of a sandy, stony country road, not knowing whether he should turn to the left, or go straight ahead. As he hesitated, a farmer came along and the man said, 'Which road leads to San Fernando?' And the farmer answered, 'Both.' And the man said, 'Which one shall I take, then?' And the farmer answered, 'No matter; whichever one you take, you will wish you had taken the other.' "

"I suppose you mean that if we were in El Dorado county I should think it would be better fishing here in Placer county?" ventured Hermione.

"Possibly I do," I said, continuing my scribbling, though doggedly, for I was not in story writing mood. Presently I chanced to look down just as Hermione looked up. Something there was in her limpid eyes, her rose tinted mouth, even the dash of color in her smooth cheek, which made me shove my notebook hastily into my pocket. I told myself it was her resemblance to her sister May.

May was in Paris, selecting her trousseau. When she returned at some indefinite time—she really seemed to be in no more haste to get back than I was to have her come—we were to be married. We were not sentimentalists, but were looking forward to a successful comradeship undisturbed by disquieting elements of love. A working union in which she would illustrate what her husband wrote. We had been engaged for three years without a quarrel. This, we argued, boded well for a pleasant future. Still there was no hurry.

But lately something had entered into my placid life which was setting me all awry. The mischief of it was, too, that the disturbance was not tangible. If it had been a debt, I could have paid it; if a tale rejected, I could have revised it or laid it upon the flames; if poor health had been the disquieting cause, I could have sought a remedy, but it was none of these. It was an omnipresent ghost which walked with me, unseen, unheard. I had a faint idea of its birth. On the day of May's departure for Europe we had been discussing Hermione.

"She must live with us," I said.

"Oh, yes," answered May, "until she is married. I fancy she will marry young. She is going to make a very attractive woman."

Before that day I had been a contented man; since that day I lived in a misty world except when I resolutely forgot my absurd, unreasonable feeling.

"Come on, chicken," I called gayly to Hermione, "we'll go into El Dorado county."

Over the rocks we clambered, laughing—it is so easy for a child to be happy and for a grownup child to catch the spirit if he will—over the rocks, across the suspension bridge spanning the American river, and we had gone from Placer county into El Dorado.

"There! This is lots nicer," she said when we were again seated to her satisfaction.

How sweet her voice was, and really the child was going to be handsomer than her sister, though May was considered a beauty. Hermione was changed lately, somehow. Ah, it must be her hair, which used to hang down her back in a frowzy braid. Today—why—a golden coronal, cleft here and there with a turquoise blue studded comb and topped off with a black bow. Why—

"What are you staring at me so for?" she asked, putting on her hat and blushing.

Fancy Hermione blushing!

"There was once a man," I answered hypocritically, "who was a—a—well, Cicero, for example, who was at work on a difficult mental problem, and at the time he was gazing hard at the—the family cat, for example, but he had no conception of the cat."

Hermione pouted. "If you call yourself Cicero, you might be a little more complimentary to me."

I laughed. Hermione always laughed if she had the faintest reason, so in a moment her dimples were in sight again. Strange I had never before noticed what a wealth of them there was.

"How old are you, child?" I asked suddenly.

"Eighteen," she answered, pulling her fish hook gently away from a snag.

I mused over her answer, the tangle in my head trying hard to straighten itself. May was thirty-one—my own age—though she didn't look it. Eighteen—ah!

"If the trouble is in your story," suggested Hermione, "maybe I can help you." Her hazel eyes looked innocently into mine. May's eyes were blue.

"If only you might!" I groaned, but I wasn't thinking of the half finished tale in my notebook. Suddenly all things had become plain to me. The ghost was laid, but what profit was it to me to gain understanding when it came three years too late?

"Well, who are the characters?" she asked precisely.

"A queen of beauty and wisdom and one little maid. It has three chapters. The first deals with a colossal mistake, the second with a fool's lethargy and the third with an awakening which came too late."

"Oh, not too late!" protested Hermione. "You really must change that. It ought to end well."

"Some stories can't end well, little girl," I answered with conviction.

"We'll make it end well," she continued decidedly. "And the king?"

"The king?"

"Yes; if a story has a queen, doesn't it have to have a king too?"

"This story hasn't. There's no king—only the king's fool," I answered bitterly.

"Is the king's fool in love with the queen?" Hermione's eyes followed the gentle eddying of her fish line.

"He—that's the approved predicament, I suppose."

"And the little maid loves the fool," she supplemented, "but he doesn't know it. By and by something happens"—

Just then something did happen. Hermione's pole went frolicking down the river, and like lightning out of a clear sky Hermione, joyous hearted Hermione, was sobbing tempestuously. In my moment of astonishment I took her into my arms. Shouldn't one comfort one's golden haired little sister? I opined that one should.

"There! There, little girl!" I shouted. "What is it?"

"Oh, it's May! How could she treat you so, and you so good and kind, and—and—oh, it will break your loving heart! It will make you an outcast—fugitive from justice!"

I smiled at her extravagance of expression; but, no matter what was the calamity, I was in no hurry to give up the warm little bundle in my arms. This was a new sensation, and altogether delightful, but quite too soon she drew herself gently away and began the explanation.

She had just received a letter from May. May had met a man in Paris, one "so dear and so handsome." Hermione quoted her sister's words with ineffable scorn—he "came of good family, he was rich, and, and, and—

Was ever sweet deliverance so opportune?

"Hermione," I said joyfully, lifting her tearful little face up to mine, "Hermione, you said the little maid loved the fool?"

"But that was in the story." She was blushing again.

"And so is this," I declared, bending my head.

"There was once a man," I observed contentedly, as we loitered along the homeward way, "who believed that somewhere between the Amazon and Orinoco rivers lay a land marvelously rich in gold and precious gems. He called this fabulous country El Dorado but he never found it. I am more fortunate than Sir Walter Raleigh. I have found my El Dorado, a 'golden region,' indeed, little girl."

And Hermione, snuggling her small hand into mine, asked naively:

"Then it was better fishing over in El Dorado county, wasn't it?"

Kind Words.

As the breath of the dew on the tender plant, they gently fall upon the drooping heart, refreshing its withered tendrils and soothing its burning woes. Bright oases they are in life's great desert. Who can estimate the pangs they have alleviated or the good works they have accomplished? Long after they are uttered do they reverberate in the soul's inner chambers and sing low, sweet, liquid strains that quell all the raging storms that may have before existed. And, oh, when the heart is sad and, like a broken harp, the sweetest chords of pleasure cease to vibrate, who can tell the power of one kind word? One little word of tenderness gushing in upon the soul will sweep the long neglected chords and awaken the most pleasant strains. Kind words are like jewels in the heart, never to be forgotten, but perhaps to cheer up their memory a long, sad life, while words of cruelty are like darts in the bosom, wounding and leaving scars that will be borne to the grave by their victims.—Saturday Evening Post.

Coral Church on an Eastern Island.

The church built of coral is one of the curiosities of the isle of Mahe, one of the Seychelles islands, in the Indian ocean. The Seychelles islands, which are supposed by many to be the site of the Eden of the Old Testament, form an archipelago of eleven islands and are situated about 1,400 miles east of Aden and 1,000 miles from Zanzibar. They rise steeply out of the sea, culminating in the isle of Mahe, which is about 3,000 feet above the level of the ocean and is nearly the center of the group. All these islands are of coral growth. The houses are built of a species of massive coral hewn into square blocks, which glisten like white marble and show themselves to the utmost advantage in the various tinted green of the thick tropical palms, whose immense fernlike leaves give pleasant and much needed shade. These palms grow as high as 100 feet and more, overtopping both the houses and the coral built church. They line the seashore and cover the mountains, forming in many places extensive forests.

The Truth Beautifully Told.

A miniature painter had been employed to paint a portrait of Mrs. Gladstone in her old age. It was intended that it should be a present for Mr. Gladstone on one of his birthdays. Mrs. Gladstone was particularly well pleased with the portrait, but some of the grandchildren had opinions of their own about it. One of the younger grandsons drew Mr. Gladstone aside and asked him if he did not think that the portrait was somewhat flattering. "It isn't much like grandmother, is it?" he asked. "My boy," replied Mr. Gladstone in his beautiful voice, "it is the truth beautifully told; that's all.—Dundee Advertiser.

The Case of Adam and Eve.

"In a certain church in Colorado Springs," said an Oregon clergyman, "there used to be a queer old, crusty character, a Scot who was noted for his profound knowledge of the Scriptures. I lectured in that church one evening, and after the lecture the Scot and I and some few others fell into conversation.

"I was urged to put the old man's Scriptural knowledge to the test. I was urged to question him and to let him question me. He would get the better of me—that, every one said, was certain—but I had my doubts and, turning to the Scot, said confidently:

" 'I will try you, my friend, with the grand, leading, insurmountable question, How long did Adam remain in a state of innocence?'

"The Scot answered:

" 'Till he got a wife.'

"Then, with a grim chuckle, he went on:

" 'But can you tell me, sir, how long he remained after?' "

A Sign of Economy.

The Old Man—H'm! Is he a saving and economical young man? The Sweet Young Thing—Indeed he is, papa. Why, he trims his cuffs!

Without earnestness there is nothing to be done in life.—Goethe.

BROUGHT TO LIGHT.

Palmer People Receiving The Full Benefit.

There have been many cases like the following in Palmer. Everyone relates the experience of people we know. These plain, straightforward statements will do much toward relieving the suffering of thousands. Such testimony will be read with interest by many people.

Mr. Charles C. Hamilton of Palmer Center says:—"I gave for publication in April, '98, a testimonial about Doan's Kidney Pills after I had used them and after they had done me considerable good. I can only state to-day that I have as much faith in them as I had at that time. When I commenced their use I had severe pain through my back and almost any movement caused it to ache more severely. I suffered from headache in the front and in the top of my head caused, the doctor told me, by overexertion on the wheel. I got Doan's Kidney Pills at LeGro's drug store and they gave me prompt relief. The aching left my back and I was freed from the headaches. I can re-endorse and recommend Doan's Kidney Pills most emphatically."

For sale by all dealers, price 50 cents per box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no substitute.

Bathers Who Sleep Floating.

"To fall asleep floating on the waves is not an impossibility," said an Atlantic City life guard "On the sun warmed billows on an August afternoon I once floated off to sleep, and when I awoke I was nearly half a mile out at sea. I know a Camden man who often takes a floating nap off Chelsea.

"A good many people can't float even though they can swim. They can't float because they keep the line of the body, from head to heels, stiff and straight. The line should be kept curved a little it should resemble a very broad V—and all the muscles should be loose, relaxed. It is easy to float. I have taught many children of six and seven years to do it."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Branding Criminals.

Until the end of the eighteenth century the prisoners' dock in most important English law courts was furnished with an iron upright and collar fixed in front of the person who was being tried. If a conviction followed and the judge elected to include a decree of branding in the sentence that portion of it was carried out upon the spot. The criminal's hand was put through the collar, which was effectually screwed round the wrist and, the necessary branding irons having been previously heated in the courthouse fire, was forthwith marked upon the thumb with the letters which the judge directed to be burned upon it.

A queer case for damages has appeared at Martinsburg, Va. A prisoner in the town jail tried to make his escape through a window, and disturbed a nest of hornets, which stung him very badly. He was forced to retreat into his cell and call for help. Now he has brought suit against the authorities.

The craze for giving and accepting coupons for purchases of merchandise, to be redeemed by prizes, was given a more or less merited rebuke by Nat C. Goodwin. He bought a bill of goods, and the salesman offered him the coupons that the amount of the purchase called for. Mr. Goodwin shook his head. "I don't want them," he said. "You had better take them, sir," persisted the clerk; "we redeem them with very handsome prizes. If you can save up a thousand coupons we give a grand piano." "Say, look here," replied Mr. Goodwin, "if I ever drank enough of your whisky and smoked enough of your cigars to get a thousand of these coupons I wouldn't want a piano. I'd want a harp."—Argonaut.

Mrs C. one morning last week thought she smelled gas. Bravery came to her mysteriously, and she crept down stairs to investigate. After smelling about for some minutes she rushed upstairs, called Mr. C., then shook him, and at last roused him. Then this was heard: "John, there is a leak in the gas pipe in the kitchen. We'll all die if it is not fixed." Leaks had been heard of before, and Mr. C. sleepily asked. "Is it a-leaking much now?" "Not much!" screamed his wife, and then, as Mr. C. turned over, this soothing advice was given, "Put a bucket under it and go to bed."—Birmingham Post.

The Antalgica
Or Vegetable Pain Reliever

was introduced to the public in 1848, since which time thousands of bottles have been sold each year to an appreciative public, which is a good evidence of its merits. It is adapted to so many ailments it should be in every household, for it cures all kinds of pains both internal and external. For Bronchial affections it is unrivaled by any article in the market. It is a sure cure for Cholera Morbus and Dysentery, if taken in season, also for Coughs. It is an effective remedy for rheumatic affections, stiff joints, swelled limbs, sprains, cramps, tooth ache and many other ills to which the flesh is heir. Try it and it will do you good It is sold at 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle by The Quimby Pharmacy, LeGro's Drug Store and the proprietor,

O. P. Allen,

Is Your Stomach Disordered?

If it is, indigestion naturally ensues; the kidneys become clogged with impurities that impair or stop their secretory functions; the blood is vitiated and actually poisons the whole being. Let this go on to its natural ending and the sure result is—death. The one medicine that will arrest this fatal progress is which stimulates and strengthens the digestive organs, restores the secretory functions and speedily casts out the gathered impurities in the organs affected. If you have bad breath, sluggish bowels, pain in the back, discolored skin, nervousness or dizziness, you may be certain that your vital organs are sadly out of condition and that is a medicine that will cleanse your system of the impurities that clog life channels and restore vigor and health. Medical science proves that diseases, no matter how great a variety, seem to proceed from comparatively few causes. It is for this reason that some single medicines relieve or cure so wide a range of complaints. When a medical preparation acts at once upon the digestive and urinary organs and also the list of difficulties subject to its control is astonishing. It is conceded that Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the most effective preparation now in use for all diseases arising from a foul or impure state of the circulation. A persevering use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy according to directions, will soon relieve and ultimately cure when no other medicine or treatment is of any permanent benefit.

Every Two Minutes

Physicians tell us that all the blood in a healthy human body passes through the heart once in every two minutes. If this action becomes irregular the whole body suffers. Poor health follows poor blood; Scott's Emulsion makes the blood pure. One reason why is such a great aid is because it passes so quickly into the blood. It is partly digested before it enters the stomach; a double advantage in this. Less work for the stomach; quicker and more direct benefits. To get the greatest amount of good with the least possible effort is the desire of everyone in poor health. Scott's Emulsion does just that. A change for the better takes place even before you expect it.

We will send you a sample free.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy

Real Elixir of Life.

Contentment is the real elixir of life. It is the real fountain from which flow the waters of perennial youth. Sometimes it costs an effort, a tremendous effort, to say it is all right, but the man or woman who can say it is much better off for thus looking at the sunny side of the world than the person who harbors a grievance against all mankind and walks through the world burdened with the somber thoughts of his disappointments. The discontented perhaps never stop to think how much worse off they could be; that, no matter how few their pleasures, there are those in the world who have fewer or none at all; that, given health and strength and the full possession of the senses, they are advantaged and blessed in the race of existence.

The Tempering of Copper.

The expression "the tempering of copper" arises from a thirteenth century misunderstanding of the Greek word baphe—a word used by the Greco-Egyptian alchemistic writers of the third century. Berthelot, the eminent authority on alchemy, has shown that this word may mean tempering, coloring (of cloth, glass and metals), the coloring materials or the coloring bath. Egyptian alchemy was busied originally in producing brilliant bronzes on copper and the copper alloys, and this expression "the tempering of copper" means, and always has meant, bronzing copper so that it may simulate silver or gold.—Arthur Jones Hopkins in New York Times.

Honey in the East.

In ancient Egypt honey was employed as an embalming material, and in the east to this day it is largely used for the preservation of fruit and the making of cakes, sweetmeats and other articles of food. In India a host will offer to his guest a dish composed of honey and milk or of equal parts of curds, honey and clarified butter. It is given to a bridegroom on his arrival at the door of the bride's father. In the east, also, when grafts, seeds and birds' eggs are to be transported a great distance they are often packed in honey.

Another Victim.

"Poor Mrs. Boozer suffers terribly from the liquor habit," said Mrs. Gabb.

"How is that?" inquired Mrs. Chinn, scenting gossip.

"When her husband comes home at night is he is too far gone to pay attention to her remonstrances and the next morning he has such a headache he can't listen to her."—Portland Telegram.

Unlike Fishing Lines.

"That fishing song in the new opera is clever, don't you think?" asked the critic.

"No," replied the hard luck angler; "it isn't at all natural."

"No?"

"No; the lines are too catchy."

She Quotes an Authority.

Elsie—When I grow up, mamma, I'm going to be extravagant like you. Mamma—What makes you think I'm extravagant? Elsie—Well, I'm sure I've heard papa say so lots of times.

Now They Don't Speak.

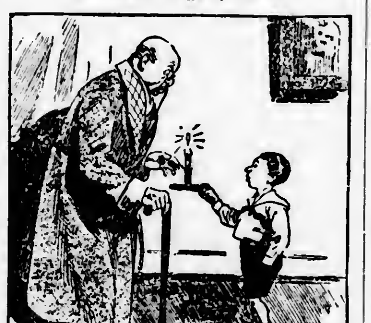
Clara—I always tell my real age. Estelle—Well, you can afford to. You see, you're not as old as you look.—Detroit Free Press.

Probably.

"Kind words cost nothing."

"Exactly. I think some folk distribute them freely on that account."

Another Legacy Lost.



Tommy—Grandpa, will you please blow this candle out?

Grandpa—Why, Tommy?

Tommy—Because I heard pa say we get $2,000 when you snuff out.

FROM GIRLHOOD TO WOMANHOOD

Mothers Should Watch the Development of Their Daughters—Interesting Experiences of Misses Borman and Mills.

MATILDA BORMAN
MYRTLE MILLS

Every mother possesses information which is of vital interest to her young daughter.

Too often this is never imparted or is withheld until serious harm has resulted to the growing girl through her ignorance of nature's mysterious and wonderful laws and penalties.

Girls' over-sensitiveness and modesty often puzzle their mothers and baffle physicians, as they so often withhold their confidence from their mothers and conceal the symptoms which ought to be told to their physician at this critical period.

When a girl's thoughts become sluggish, with headache, dizziness or a disposition to sleep, pains in back or lower limbs, eyes dim, desire for solitude; when she is a mystery to herself and friends, her mother should come to her aid, and remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will at this time prepare the system for the coming change, and start the menstrual period in a young girl's life without pain or irregularities.

Hundreds of letters from young girls and from mothers, expressing their gratitude for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished for them, have been received by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., at Lynn, Mass.

Miss Mills has written the two following letters to Mrs. Pinkham, which will be read with interest:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:— (First Letter.)

"I am but fifteen years of age, am depressed, have dizzy spells, chills, headache and backache, and as I have heard that you can give helpful advice to girls in my condition, I am writing you."—Myrtle Mills, Oquawka, Ill.

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:— (Second Letter.)

"It is with the feeling of utmost gratitude that I write to you to tell you what your valuable medicine has done for me. When I wrote you in regard to my condition I had consulted several doctors, but they failed to understand my case and I did not receive any benefit from their treatment. I followed your advice, and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am now healthy and well, and all the distressing symptoms which I had at that time have disappeared."—Myrtle Mills, Oquawka, Ill.

Miss Matilda Borman writes Mrs. Pinkham as follows:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my monthlies were irregular and painful, and I always had such dreadful headaches.

"But since taking the Compound my headaches have entirely left me, my monthlies are regular, and I am getting strong and well. I am telling all my girl friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Matilda Borman, Farmington, Iowa.

If you know of any young girl who is sick and needs motherly advice, ask her to address Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., and tell her every detail of her symptoms, and to keep nothing back. She will receive advice absolutely free, from a source that has no rival in the experience of woman's ills, and it will, if followed, put her on the right road to a strong, healthy and happy womanhood.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound holds the record for the greatest number of cures of female ills of any medicine that the world has ever known. Why don't you try it?

SMALL FIRE IN HOTEL.

Blaze Starts in Converse House Late at Night.

CAUSED BY PIECE OF SNAP MATCH.

Flew in Closet and Set Clothing on Fire. No Alarm and Little Damage.

There was a small blaze in the Converse House last Tuesday night which might have developed into a serious matter under different conditions, but which fortunately was extinguished with small loss and without rousing the guests of the house. Landlord Pierce, in retiring for the night, struck a match to look for something in the closet. A piece of the head of the match flew off when it was lighted, and although Mr. Pierce looked carefully for it he could discover no trace of it. He closed the closet door but not tight, and continued his preparations for retiring. Happening to glance toward the closet a little later he was startled to see a bright light through the crack of the door. He pulled the door open at once and found one side of the closet in flames. He seized the water pitcher and emptied the contents on the blaze, but there was not enough of the fluid to put it out; he then attempted to smother it with a wool rug, but that was not successful. Next he tried pulling the burning garments from the closet and attempting to smother them on the floor of the room, but in so doing a spark caught the lace curtains and they blazed up instantly; some sparks also communicated with the bed clothing and there was danger of trouble there. By this time the smoke was getting pretty thick and there was fire in too many places for safety, so Mr. Pierce rang the bell in the office; help came at once and with a few more pitchers of water and a little lively work with rugs the fire was drowned and smothered out without alarming the guests of the house. The damage was about $75

New Candlepin League.

At a meeting in Springfield Sunday afternoon a candlepin league, to be known as the Western Massachusetts League, was formed. It is composed of teams representing the City Hall and Appleton alleys of Holyoke, the Independent and Boston Star teams of Springfield, Westfield and Ware. The first game of the series to be played will take place next Tuesday evening. The teams will play two games each week, one on Tuesday and the other on Friday evening. One game will be played on the home alleys and the other abroad. All of the matches will be rolled under the rules of the National duck and candlepin congress, four points to constitute each game, each string counting one point and the total one. A total of $120 will be given in prizes. The winning team will receive $40, the second team $20, third $15, fourth $10 and the fifth and sixth teams $5 each. The player making the best individual average will receive a prize of $15 and the one having the best individual string will receive $5. The best individual three-string total winner will also receive a $5 prize. Each team will be made up of seven men, five regular players and two substitutes.

S. and E. Gets Brimfield Location.

The selectmen of Brimfield, at a meeting held Monday afternoon, removed the last obstacle, so far as they are concerned, in the way of the Springfield and Eastern Street Railway's extension through that town from Palmer to Fiskdale, by granting it a right of way asked for. It will be remembered that a right of way was granted some time ago, but it was found later that the Hartford-Worcester line held a franchise over the same location for about a quarter of a mile in the village, and the railroad commissioners refused to approve the location under this condition. Later the Springfield and Eastern petitioned for the same location and also that the other road's be changed to the opposite side of the road over the quarter of a mile where the layouts conflicted. This the selectmen granted on Monday, and the matter will now come before the railroad commissioners for approval.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Boss—Calkins.

A pretty home wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Walter M. Green in East Wilbraham Wednesday, when Mrs. Green's daughter, Elizabeth M. Boss, was united in marriage to Raymond H. Calkins of Monson, Rev. Vernon H. Deming officiating, in the presence of a number of relatives and friends. Miss May Boss, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, and Willis A. Calkins of Three Rivers was best man. The ushers were Mrs. Bertha Butler of Springfield and Edith Calkins of Monson. The bride was gowned in white Persian lawn, with lace trimmings, and carried bride roses. Mendelssohn's wedding march was played during the ceremony by Miss Gertrude A. Chase of North Wilbraham. After the ceremony refreshments were served. Mrs. Everett Brooks of Mittineague, Mrs. Carl Schlatterbeck of Springfield and Mrs. Wilbur Brassard of Chicopee assisted in serving. Mr. and Mrs Calkins left in the afternoon for a trip to Boston, after which they will make their home in Springfield for the present.

A baked-bean supper and entertainment will be held in the chapel of Grace Union church this evening.

THANKSGIVING PRICES.

What Table Supplies Cost Twelve Years Ago and What They Cost Now.

So much is being said at the present time about the increased cost of living that a comparison of the prices to-day and twelve years ago will be interesting. Accordingly the Journal reprints below a list of Thanksgiving prices which it published in 1893, and the prices for the same articles in the local markets this week.

Nuts,	15—20c lb.
Confectionery,	15—60c lb.

It will be noticed that with the exception of turkeys and beef there is very little change from the cost of a dozen years ago. Beef has advanced practically five cents a pound for the best cuts, and turkeys have advanced three to six cents a pound, according to quality. The greatest advance has been in the price of lobsters, which are growing scarcer every year and so high just at this time that the local markets have them only on order. The catch of mackerel is scarce just at present, so that no price can be quoted on them. In some instances the prices are lower than twelve years ago, but on the whole the average—with the exceptions noted above—are about the same. Accordingly Thanksgiving will be celebrated next week in the usual manner by those who have been accustomed to give the day its due observance.

Rates and Rate Inequalities.

In his Raleigh speech the President advanced no new argument in support of Federal control of railway rates. With characteristic vigor he pounded a recognized evil for the suppression of which existing laws are only a little short of duly adequate. He made no allusion to the possible results of a stern and unrelenting enforcement of laws already provided for the restraint of what he calls "unscrupulous and ruthless cunning in railway management," by which "some big shippers and some railroad managers who are always willing to take unfair advantage of their weaker competitors force other big shippers and big railroad men who would like to do decently into similar acts of wrong and injustice, under penalty of being left behind in the race for success."

This, which is the main line of the President's argument, does not seem to touch the principal issue of the present consideration, namely, the question of reasonable rates. Upon the issue of the equality of rates and treatment for all shippers there is little room for argument. Shippers, railways and the public are in general agreement upon that point. With some elaboration of the present laws, to which little or no objection will be raised, the point of unfair discrimination may be covered as well as it can be. It is doubtful if any such law could be made absolutely effective.

But that is an issue which is quite distinct from the proposal to place rate making powers in the hands of an administrative body. There appears to be confusion upon this point. There is a wide difference between the prohibition of any form of unfair discrimination between shipper and shipper, or between point and point, and the determination of rate charges by a Federal commission. It is to the latter and not to the former that objection is made. Mr. Roosevelt said that "actual experience has shown that it is not possible to leave the railroads uncontrolled." I do not know the exact period of this actual experience. I am under an impression that railways are, and always have been, subject to a long list of restraining laws, statutory as well as economic.

Our transportation system has made this country what it is to-day. Our development has not come in spite of our system, but because of it. That abuses have crept in is undeniable. Abuses have crept into our Government controlled postal system and into our Government supervised and regulated banking system. But freedom of action in rate making has enabled railways to open enormous areas of otherwise valueless land, and to distribute the products of our farms and our workshops in a manner impossible under restrained action. The history of all State rate making shows the inevitable tendency of that method toward the flat distance tariff. Such a system in this country of enormous areas and distances would turn farms into waste places and valuable machinery into junk.

Nowhere in the entire range of the railway discussion has it been shown that the country has suffered or that it is suffering from excessive railway rates. Outside of individual instances, whose rarity makes them almost unique, there has been neither complaint of excessive charges nor clamor for reduction by a Federal commission. The call for rate regulation by a commission or by a court does not come from our thousands upon thousands of shippers. It is the cry of a few who hope to gain by it, augmented by the roaring of non-shippers who have little or no knowledge of transportation questions.

The country, the shippers and even the railways will support the President in any effort to remedy evils, to correct abuses, to stamp out inequalities and unfair discriminations. But it is not railway managers only who are staggered by proposals that a commission be empowered either to fix rates or to regulate railway tariff.—New York Sun, November 9, 1905.

WEST WARREN.

About nine acres of land owned by Michael Brosnahan were sold at a mortgagee's auction Saturday afternoon to Mrs Mary L. Stanton, mortgagee, who later sold it at private sale to John O'Connor of Springfield, formerly of West Warren. The land contains two lots of land below Marks mountain.

FOR BETTER CONDITIONS.

Womens' Clubs Discuss Village Improvement Plans.

SUGGESTIONS OF SEVERAL SPEAKERS

Smoke Nuisance, Accumulation of Ashes, Street Signs, Cemetery Beautification.

The members of the Palmer Woman's Club and Woman's Tuesday Club held a joint meeting at the home of Mrs E. G. Hastings on North Main street last Friday afternoon, with "Village Improvement" for the topic. Various phases and conditions were presented and discussed by Principal Hobson of the grammar school, Principal Cross and Miss Genevra Clark of the high school, Superintendent Fuller and Mrs. D. L. Bodfish, and plans for the betterment of the undesirable conditions were considered.

Mr. Hobson mentioned the railroad smoke and whistling nuisances, which have been alluded to in these columns several times, and suggested that the only remedy was an appeal to legislation; this has been successful in other places and there was no reason why it could not be made effective here. The condition of Main street was touched upon and several conditions which might be improved alluded to. The waste cans which have been provided by local societies are a good thing if there are sufficient of them and they are kept emptied as often as necessary, but if they are so few and far apart that much of the rubbish and paper goes into the street instead of into the cans, and if they are allowed to fill up and run over, or are not replaced when worn out, then they fail to be of much service. The removal of ashes problem was taken up last winter with partial success, and might be handled again this year if rightly managed; the truckman cannot be expected to cart away ashes for the fun of it, however, and if individuals decline to pay the cost the club might get from them permission to have the ashes removed and the cost borne by the club; unsightly heaps of ashes should not be tolerated when for a small weekly sum they can be removed. But before attempting to revolutionize the conditions in other places, the members were cautioned to be sure that their own lawns and the gutters in front of them were in a condition above criticism, then the work aimed at could be done more effectively. With the natural attractions which exist in and about the lawns and yards of Palmer homes, social ostracism was only fair treatment for those who insisted in making them unsightly by pig pens in the rear or henhouses in the front, or other similar excrescences.

Superintendent Fuller spoke of the lack of street signs, there being very few now in existence to inform the stranger the name of the street he may be on or wish to find.

Principal Cross also touched on the smoke nuisance, as brought to his attention in different parts of the village. He too deprecated the lack of street signs, and called attention to the corner of Thorndike and Park streets, where he had witnessed several narrow escapes from accident by autos coming from Park into Thorndike street across the electric car track just as cars came down Thorndike street; a warning sign at that point was suggested, as is used in many other similar localities. This is an important auto corner, and the lack of signs directing tourists to Boston and Springfield, which can be read on approaching the turn, was also commented upon.

Miss Clark's suggestion was that the three-cornered spot of ground at the junction of the Thorndike and Palmer Center roads, now an unsightly dumping ground, might be filled in and beautified at no great cost; the land is the property of the town and is of no use whatever.

Mrs. Bodfish deplored the removal of all the trees from the west slope of the addition to the Thorndike street cemetery, and hoped that something might be done to beautify that now barren spot. In this connection, after the meeting a petition from the village improvement committees of the Palmer Woman's Club, the Woman's Tuesday Club and the Palmer Historical Society was sent to the cemetery commissioners, asking them to consider the question of beautifying that locality, either by the planting of trees and shrubs, or in some other manner.

Round Trip Rates Reduced.

If you have occasion to visit the western country before the first of the year, now is your opportunity, because tickets will be on sale via the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, from Chicago on the first and third Tuesdays of each month, to various western destinations and return, good for 21 days, at 75 per cent of the one way fare. To other sections of the country, one fare plus $2 for the round-trip is charged.

If you are going West, write to us, and we will figure out the lowest combination possible, and give you advantage of it. Don't hesitate to ask for all the information necessary to make your trip pleasant. Tickets can be obtained from your local ticket agent, or from Geo. L. Williams, N. E. P. A., 368 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

WARREN.

Lycett—Lathe.

The marriage of Miss Bertha Lovina, daughter of John J. Lycett of East Main street, and Milton Hopkins Lathe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Royal F. Lathe, took place Monday, Rev. A. L. Howe of Wilbraham officiating. Mr. and Mrs Lathe left in the afternoon for a ten-days' trip to Boston and vicinity.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson H. Fairbank have returned from Portland, Oregon, where he has been in charge of the Massachusetts interests at the exposition for the past eight months.

The funeral of Jonathan Hitchcock, who died last week Thursday, was held Monday afternoon, Rev. W. B. Oleson officiating. Burial was in Pine Grove cemetery. The bearers were Charles B. Blair, Lewis W. Pearce, George E. Tarbell and Joseph G. Hastings.

The funeral of William B. Ramsdell, who died last week Wednesday, was held Saturday afternoon at his late home on Maple street. Services were conducted by Rev. William B. Oleson, and selections were rendered by a quartet composed of A. A. Gendron, Sidney H. Little, Frank W. Bliss and William H. Hallows. Burial was in the family lot in Pine Grove cemetery. The bearers were Fred W. Kimball, Charles B. Blair, Walter A. Putnam, John M. Drake, Calvin H. Richards and Dr. Edgar J. Buck. There were numerous handsome floral tributes.

FOR CLEAN GARMENTS.

Good Work Being Done by Consumers' League Along This Line.

At the recent fair of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society an exhibit of photographs and garments in the upper hall attracted a good share of attention. The garments were samples of the work done in shops which have the approval of the Consumer's League, an organization which is attempting to see that this work is done under sanitary conditions and without the aid of child labor, and the photographs were of actual conditions under which garments are made in sweat shops and in tenements, the latter showing a most unhealthful and offensive state of affairs. More of the work and aims of the league is given below, and will be found interesting to every purchaser of ready-made garments of every description.

The Consumers' League is an organization of men and women who realize how much can be accomplished from the position of the consumer in righting many unjust and distressing conditions.

The first work was done by state leagues, and was in the direction of securing better conditions for sales-women and cash girls in retail stores. Here was the opportunity for the consumers to make their influence felt. The banding together, the formation of leagues in different states in the Union, increased this strength many hundred fold and much good was accomplished.

Then came the formation of the National League; its first work was the investigation of the conditions under which garments were made. Its efforts to try to do away with child labor and sweat-shop work have been most effective.

Every effort has been made to secure better legislation affecting these evils. Last year the Consumers' League of Massachusetts was largely instrumental in defeating the proposed amendment to the so-called Fifty-eight Hour Law. This change in the laws meant the return of long hours of work for the clerks and cash children in our retail stores during the month of December. In other words, it meant absolutely no Christmas for a great body of laboring people. This league was also interested in securing the passage of House Bill No. 1067, which provides that no minor under sixteen years of age can be employed unless he can read and write the English language intelligently.

The newest feature of the work of the National League is the investigation of the conditions under which foods are prepared and distributed. Its aim is to arouse and interest the public in the effort to secure national legislation. In no other way can justice be had both as to the purity of food and also wholesome conditions surrounding its manufacture.

The exhibits as shown at the fairs consisted of women's and children's stitched garments, each garment bearing the label of the National Consumers' League, which shows that it has been made in one of the many factories that has the endorsement of this organization.

No manufacturer can ever have the right to the use of this label if any child under sixteen years of age is employed; if any part of the work is done off the premises; if more than fifty-eight hours a week work is allowed of any one of the employes; and the State Factory laws are obeyed implicitly.

This label is therefore a positive assurance that the garments on which it is found are free from child labor, free from sweat-shop work and that no over time has been worked.

Unless the attention has been called directly to these matters there are many people who rarely stop to think of the conditions under which garments are made. The material, the style and the cost are the matters which appeal to them for consideration. Yet these purchasers are not by any means unfeeling or undesirous of being of service to their brothers and sisters, nor do they represent any particular group of people; they simply belong to that part of the community that has given little study to problems of this kind. It is to these very people that we would say that it is the demand that governs the manufacture. In almost every particular articles are made to suit the purchasers, who are the demanding public.

To buy garments with this special label attached often requires a little more time and a little more effort. They are not always to be found in every store; nor, in the stores where labelled goods are kept constantly in stock, is there always the variety to be desired. But perseverance in demanding garments of this particular variety will do much to increase the trade of the righteous manufacturers and also will do much to turn into school children the large army of child laborers and will also help to destroy the frightful system of sweating.

The garments shown in this exhibit were not for sale, but this means has been taken to extend a knowledge of the work of the League and to show those interested in assisting in the battle to oppose the labor of children and the sweating system that attractive and comparatively inexpensive garments may be purchased, that have been made under both fair and sanitary conditions.

There is also much literature for distribution, so that those interested may send to their friends a printed word in regard to the work of the League, both as to the part it is taking in the investigation of the manufacture of pure foods and also in the making of garments that are free from disease and free from the life-blood of the thousands whose waking hours are spent in sweat-shops or over sewing machines in their own homes.

Home work and sweat-shop work means child labor, every time, no matter how fine a child labor law there may be or how good a compulsory school law. Home work and sweat-shop work command the lowest possible prices, never a living wage, and in order that the barest existence may be eked out, all the members of the household must be urged to assist. Some of the prices paid for home work and sweat-shop work are here quoted:

Making women's wrappers,	per doz.	60c
" " aprons,	" "	12½c
" men's denim blouses,	" "	50c
" children's dresses, to 2½ yrs.,	" "	25c
" " dresses, 8 yrs.,	" "	50c

Some of the ways in which everyone can help to forward the work of the Consumers' League:

By remembering not to shop after 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

By remembering not to shop on Saturday afternoons.

By remembering not to leave your Christmas shopping until the week before Christmas.

By remembering not to give your address carelessly to sales people.

By remembering not to neglect to ask for garments bearing the Consumers' League label.

By becoming a member of the League. Fee $1.00 a year.

Football.

The Palmer Junior football team will go to Ware to-morrow to play the Work and Win team of that place.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 24, 1905.

One can hardly help wondering what would really have happened if William Randolph Hearst had really and truly been elected mayor of New York.

It cost Prince Louis of Battenburg $1000 to have a New York dentist fill four teeth, putting in twelve hours' work on them. The job might have been a good adv. for the dentist, but the price will prohibit most of us from taking our work to his office.

It's an ill wind, etc. The mayor of Minneapolis is trying to keep the saloons of that city closed on Sunday, and the electric roads are gathering in thousands of nickels every Sunday from the thirsty travelers who ride over to St. Paul to wet their whistles.

That British sailors evidently appreciate the land of the free and the home of the brave is evidenced by the 200 desertions from the ships of Prince Louis of Battenburg while his fleet was in New York for a few days. The squadron sailed Monday with that number of men short.

The fight for the speakership of the House has narrowed to John L. Cole of Andover and Joseph Walker of Brookline Both claim the requisite number of pledged names to give him the election. Mr. Cole is a newspaper man and has the endorsement of the Suburban Press Association in the contest

President Roosevelt is to assist, it is said, in putting the big insurance companies on a safer and more economical basis He is also interested in reforming football and eliminating some of the brutalities of the game. If there's anything else which needs adjusting just bring it along, Teddy's equal to most anything, and not afraid to tackle it.

Gee, but it costs to run a political campaign! Mr. Hearst spent $66 000 trying to be elected mayor of New York. Draper blew in $9000 to get the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor of Massachusetts and $23,920 more to get elected Last year it cost Gov. Douglas three dozen thousand dollars for the privilege of sitting one year in the governor's chair.

After a serious accident which cost one life and numerous serious injuries, both motorman and conductor on the cars of the Springfield Street Railway Company are to be held responsible for running block signals. Heretofore the motorman alone was held accountable, and the accident was caused by one running by a danger signal. Both have been held to account on the Palmer lines since the first introduction of the block signals.

The Spencer Leader offers the following pertinent suggestion: "The various trades are struggling for the eight-hour day. The clerks have in most places finally secured the early closing of stores with a half day closure in the summer season. Why does not the eight-hour agitation, the early closing and the half holiday agitation strike the liquor business, that friend, professedly, of the laboring man?"

Maine has a law against the killing of birds, especially insectivorous birds, and the wearing of their feathers on women's headgear, and proposes to enforce it. Women wearing such feathers are liable to arrest, and the chairman of the fish and game commission has issued a circular to milliners suggesting that they withdraw all such for sale and return them to the wholesalers. The reform is one which every state might adopt with profit.

If there's any one thing about this insurance investigation now going on in New York it is the cheerfulness with which the lie is passed between witnesses. Richard A. McCurdy of the Mutual Life says that he had no knowledge of his company's contributions to state political campaigns, while Boss Platt swears that he got $10,000 a clip at various times on arrangement with McCurdy. You pays your money and takes your choice.

A Peculiar funeral, and one entirely different from any in previous history it is believed, was held at Philadelphia Sunday. Two workmen in a pit beneath a crucible in a steel works were overwhelmed with 80,000 pounds of molten metal, and the mass in which they were incinerated,—although containing no trace of their bodies or clothing,—an oval ingot 28 feet long, six feet wide and five feet thick, was buried with impressive ceremonies.

Who wouldn't be a life insurance official, with the soft snap some of them had—provided he didn't get found out? Second vice president Tarbell of the Equitable has admitted that he has been drawing the agents' commissions on $500,000 of insurance which he placed on the lives of himself and his family. Taken all in all, the insurance investigation has revealed about as rotten a state of affairs as could well be imagined; and the half has not yet been hinted at, it is said.

The "dress suit" case, as it has come to be known, is to be tried in Boston next week; that is, the physician who cut the girl up and the two men who disposed of the body are to come before the court, and the judge has warned the newspapers not to print anything which would tend to have an influence in the matter before it comes out in the course of the trial. It is well to have these cases tried in court and not in the newspapers, as has happened sometimes before.

There is no question but that Mr. Draper owes his election to the lieutenant-governorship to the country press of Massachusetts. The leaders in the gubernatorial contest were lost sight of, practically, and the fight was made against Draper. The country papers rallied to his support and kept his business ability and fair dealing with the large number of employes of the Draper plant before the public Had it not been for the efforts of these papers he would undoubtedly be numbered now among the "also rans" Immense amounts of newspaper advertising were also carried by both parties this year, in continuance of the system inaugurated last year by Mr. Douglas, and it is safe to say that for some years at least, until a better method of reaching the people can be invented—if it is possible, which is doubted—there will be no diminution of this class of reading matter throughout the month of October. The days of the rallies, with brass bands and red fire, are past for campaign purposes, in Massachusetts.

PALMER NEWS.

1000 MILE TRIP IN VAIN.

Freight Wreck Keeps Chicago Man From His Boston Lady Love.

There was a slight mixup of freight cars at West Warren about 6 30 last Saturday night, and while on the surface of things it was just an ordinary wreck, with the usual accompaniment of delayed trains, there were several peculiar features connected. In the first place Nat Goodwin was aboard the 6 42 train out of Palmer, which arrived here all right but was sidetracked because of the smash and followed the wrecker east at 8 30, with the wrecker and several freights ahead. Mr. Goodwin was scheduled to play in Worcester that night and there had been a big sale of seats He seemed not at all uneasy at the prospect of not reaching Worcester until about midnight.

But Mr. Goodwin's predicament wasn't a circumstance to that of a Chicago young man who had come all the way to Massachusetts to see his dearest beloved bride-to-be in Boston. Business engagements made it absolutely imperative that he reach Chicago Monday morning, consequently he must take the Twentieth Century Limited from Buffalo Sunday noon. He had planned for six or seven hours in Boston, but trains were late and he arrived so far on his journey over four hours behind time, and was held up here for two more. In order to get home on schedule he had to terminate his trip at Worcester and return from there, without even a sight of the Hub or his dear one. Hard luck.

Division of Hibernians Organized.

A division of Hibernians was organized in Palmer Sunday afternoon in Odd Fellows Hall. The new division, which will be known as division 15, starts with 50 members. Visitors were present from most of the divisions of the county, as well as County President E J. McCarthy of Westfield, County Vice President, J. J O'Connor of Holyoke, County Secretary William E. Flannery of Springfield and County Treasurer J. A. McCarthy of Chicopee. The following officers were elected and installed by the county officers: President, Daniel Fogarty; vice president, T. F. Donahue; recording secretary, William T. Brown; financial secretary, Daniel J. Sullivan; treasurer, Nicholas Haniey; sergeant-at-arms, John Conway; doorkeeper, Matthew Hurley. A meeting will be held Sunday, when the various committees will be appointed.

The subject of the sermon next Sunday morning at the Baptist church will be "The Truest Thanksgiving." Sunday school at 12, Y. P. S. C. E. at 6, evening song service at 7, followed by a short sermon on "Simon Peter and Simon Magus."

Miss Myrtle Johnson of the wire mill district celebrated her birthday last Sunday by entertaining a party of friends, visitors being present from East Longmeadow, Springfield and Easthampton. She was the recipient of a number of presents.

The members of Revere chapter, Order of Eastern Star, were entertained at the home of Mrs. George Ezekiel on Main street Tuesday evening. The entertainment was in honor of Mrs. W. H. Norton, who was presented with a gold pin bearing the device of the order.

L. L. Merrick, Woman's Relief Corps, celebrated its 19th anniversary in Memorial Hall Monday evening, when there was a chicken-pie supper, followed by speaking and music. The corps presented to L. L. Merrick, Grand Army Post, a portrait of Abraham Lincoln, Mrs D S. Davis, the first president of the corps, making the presentation speech.

At the meeting of Revere chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, last Friday evening, Mr. and Mrs W. H. Norton were presented with a case of silverware. Both have been prominent members of the chapter, and are soon to remove to Canada. Mr Norton, who has been master of Thomas lodge of Masons, was presented with a handsome past master's jewel by the members of the lodge.

H. T. Brighton of New London, F C. Broomhead and H. Smalley of Providence, E K. Arnold of Bridgeport, L. P Damon of West Ossipee, N. H, A. T. Bartlett of Boston and F. E. Marble of Lynn, '04 and '05 Brown University men, are guests of Clifton H. Hobson at his home on Pearl street. The party will attend the Brown-Dartmouth football game in Springfield to-morrow.

A stated council of Tockwotton tribe of Red Men was held in Odd Fellows' hall Tuesday evening. The union sleep for work, which occurred all over the United States the last meeting in November, was observed by the tribe. Several candidates received the adoption degree, which was conferred by the degree team of Tockwotton tribe. A collation was served after the work.

The dust on Main street has been "something fierce" for the past few days. The surface of the street has become as fine and dry as at any time during the hot weather, and the slightest winds send clouds of the dust whirling along, into the faces of pedestrians and into the doors and windows of the houses; nothing will keep it out, and snow or rain would be welcome if only the dust is done away with.

The signs for the express electric cars which are to run from Springfield to Palmer have arrived, but Manager Page states that the schedule has not been worked out yet and he does not know when the cars will start. There was a report on the street to-day that they would run only from 1 to 4 in the afternoon, but Mr. Page says that they will certainly be run later, through the rush hours.

The marriage of Miss Mabel Edith Taft of Providence, a niece of ex-Gov. Taft of Rhode Island, and Robert Earle Stebbins of Palmer took place in Springfield yesterday afternoon, Rev. Dr. S. H. Woodrow officiating. After a short wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins will be at home at 31 Elliott street, Springfield, where Mr. Stebbins is employed in the office of the Massachusetts Life Mutual Insurance Co.

The Palmer Woman's Club will meet next Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. P. E. Bard on Converse avenue. Miss Helen Parsons of the Northampton high school will read a paper on "The Absence of Beauty in the Modern Short Story and Drama," and Mrs. Bard will read a paper on "Some Phases of Recent Literature." Those who have not already paid dues for the year are requested to do so at this meeting

Charles Hall of Springfield advertises in this issue the six department rooms on the second floor of his store. They are very attractive in fittings and decoration, and each is stocked in a distinctive way with the unique and beautiful productions of the world's best workshops. There seems to be something for every taste, and something for every purse as well, in this varied display, of which the advertisement speaks more in detail.

There was a small blaze which might have resulted seriously in the residence of L. G. Stacy on Pleasant street Wednesday evening. William Merriam, who lives opposite Mr. Stacy's house, noticed a lamp blazing in the hall and called Chauncey Whitcomb, who went into the house and put out the blaze before it had done serious damage. Mr. Stacy's family, who were in another part of the house, did not know of the accident until the danger was past.

The monthly meeting of the Westfield Baptist Ministers' Conference was held with the Baptist church in Palmer Tuesday. There were about 25 present, and in the morning there was a paper on "Haggai's Message for To-day," by Rev. C. W. Williams of the Palmer church, and one in the afternoon on "The Remarriage of Divorced Persons," by Rev. D. C. York of Three Rivers; both were followed by a discussion. The ladies of the church served a turkey dinner to the visitors.

The street railway company is having considerable trouble at the wire mill crossing with obstructions on the rails and the breaking of globes in the five-cluster lamps which it maintains in that vicinity. Various things have been found on the tracks, and one day this week a sizable piece of timber was found across both rails. A large number of lamps have been smashed, causing a good deal of annoyance and expense. Superintendent Hunnewell has a list of names, the owners of which will be inquired of concerning the matter provided it continues.

There was a man hunt in town Monday afternoon, but without any exciting or serious results; in fact without a sight of the game. Word was sent along soon after noon to be on the watch for the assailants of Officer McDonald of Indian Orchard, who were headed in this direction. The local officers gave their attention to the matter, but failed to locate any suspicious characters. One of the men wanted was caught later at North Wilbraham, but the principal one—the one who hit the officer on the head with a large stone—is still at large.

The school committee and selectmen held a joint meeting Tuesday evening, when Charles L. Waid was elected a member of the school committee, in place of A. J. Purinton, resigned. Mr. Waid has been a resident of Palmer for many years, and is treasurer of the Palmer Savings Bank. W. E McDonald was elected chairman of the school committee, in place of W. H. Norton resigned. Mr. Norton, who is soon to remove to Toronto, Ont., will resign from the school committee, and in the discussion for a suitable candidate to fill the vacancy which will thus be caused the name of L H. Gager is prominently mentioned.

District Court.

John Fagan of Saugus was charged last Saturday with drunkenness. He gave a fairly good account of himself, and moreover did not appear like an habitual boozer, so his case was placed on file.

The case of Daniel Young of Ludlow, a juvenile drunk, continued from August 21, was still further continued until the first Monday in January.

Monday morning Moses Lapine of Stafford and William Googins of Springfield were arraigned for drunkenness on Main street Saturday night. Lapine was fined $5 and paid; Googins was assessed $6 and went up in default of funds He was ordered off an electric car three times Saturday night but insisted on making himself obnoxious. Subsequent knowledge showed this to be the third arrest within a month.

Daniel and George Duquette of Ludlow were charged with assault with a dangerous weapon on James Watson of the same place, the weapon being a bottle. Their cases were continued until next Monday.

Willis Bedford, a state boy boarding at Mrs. White's in Ludlow, was charged with breaking and entering and larceny, and committed to the Lyman school.

UNCLE MORT'S THANKSGIVING

By ALICE LOUISE LEE

Copyright, 1905, by Alice Louise Lee.

WHEN a man stands on the verge of nervous prostration, ready to slide over any minute, it's time for him to change climates. I realized come Thanksgivin' time that I was fixin' to take the slide, so I rented my place and am searchin' out a spot destitute of hens and women. That combination cost me forty-five pounds of good flesh and more language than I've cast loose in years before.

You see, the Peters place lays alongside of mine—houses not more'n twenty-five feet apart. A year ago it was rented to some girls—graduates of an agricultural lunatic asylum that does business as the La Plume Agricultural college. Them graduates had made a scientific study of hens and laid out to show folks how a hen farm ought to be run.

They landed on the Peters premises with 100 Brown Leghorns, a few turkeys and enough assurance to run a county campaign. They discovered me the first day, and a mighty fine discovery to 'em I've proved to be. They begun callin' me "Uncle Mort" as soon as they sighted me and acted like I'd been born 160 years ago for the express purpose of waitin' on them!

There's four of 'em, and each has just as little sense as the others unless it's Helen. She's the youngest, and has either more or less, I hain't decided which yet. She's little and thinks she's cute. They always sent her over to ask me to do any of them little acts of "neighborly kindness" that kept me on the jump for a year. Her plan of attack was to hook her hands over my arm and shake her topknot over her eyes and lisp in baby talk to her "dear Uncle Mort" until I felt so like an idiot I couldn't think of a blamed excuse for not doin' such "neighborly kindnesses" as squeezin' into a two foot space under the barn to kill a woodchuck or climbin' on to the roof durin' a thunder shower to fix the lightnin' rod or buryin' a batch of Brown Leghorns.

HER "DEAR UNCLE MORT."

I didn't object to this last job because I knew the poor critters longed to go. They didn't have half a chance to live or lay, they got such a lot of scientific care. They wa'n't let alone one minute in the twenty-four hours, and if there's a hen under the canopy that's fond of solitude and its own society it's the Brown Leghorn. They'll take a twenty foot board fence backwards any day at the swish of a skirt, and skirts never stopped swishin' around that henhouse. The poor things got reduced to pinfeathers and wishbones. They made a break for liberty whenever they see a chance, and they see a good many chances last winter when there was just enough crust on the snow to hold them up—and let me through at every jump. I chased 'em until I got thin as they was and as low in spirits.

I got so'st I couldn't sleep nights thinkin' of their sufferin', and when Thanksgivin' brought Billings I clutched at him as a drownin' man grabs a straw. He ain't very strawlike in appearance, bein' six feet one and over 200 pounds, but in him I thought I see sort of a Thanksgivin' for the hens.

One day the last of November Helen come billin' and cooin' around over her "dear Uncle Mort." I sized her up and waited. I wondered whether it would be mendin' the hen yard fence or doin' the fall house cleanin' or what not. I wasn't long findin' out. Wouldn't I be dear and lovely enough to allow Mr. Billings to sleep in my house and take his breakfasts with me? Then she blushed. He was a man she just happened to know, and he just happened to be passing through New Jersey a few days before Thanksgivin', and it happened that it would be convenient for her to entertain him, includin' his dinners and lunches, if her dear Uncle Mort would do the rest.

Well, as all the fools ain't dead yet, her dear Uncle Mort let him come. He proved a likely fellow, with a heap of common sense back of the homeliest face I ever saw move on legs. That is, he exhibited a deal of sense until he had been with that youngest hen farmer awhile. Then he lost it all. Got so he couldn't tell whether his head set on his shoulders or mine or whether his feet was located under him or over him. He left his shoes on his pillow and his white tie in the wash bowl. He dumped gravy in his coffee and poured cream on his bread until I was considerin' sendin' for a lunatic asylum with the idea of havin' it patronized extensively around that hen farm, when I woke up to the fact that he hadn't lost all his head. There was a corner left, and it was devoted to raisin' hens.

He was a farmer's son, and all the law he had put into his cranium hadn't knocked out the previous knowledge about hens. As soon as I realized that fact I tried to organize him into a Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Brown Leghorns. I sneaked him out to the girls' hen lot and told him what them Leghorns had to put up with. I asked him if he ever see hens before with such loppin', discouraged lookin' combs.

He looked at 'em thoughtfully and chewed a straw. Then he allowed that they did look a bit under the weather.

"What's the reason?" says he.

"Reason!" says I gloomily. "Such a word ain't in use around these premises. Them hens have put up with enough lack of reason to kill 'em! You ought to have been here last summer. First hot day after they fell into this lunatic poultry scrape they went around hangin' their bills open, but they've never tried it since. The girls thought they had the gaps and acted accordingly. They caught them swelterin' birds and poured so much kerosene down 'em that the critters had sense enough to keep out of the sun for days for fear they'd explode!"

IT WASN'T THOUGHTFUL OF HIM.

Says Billings solemnly, "Do you swear to that statement?"

"Yes," says I, "when I ain't swearin' at it!" says I. "Now look at that rooster. He is the peakedest critter the sun ever shone on—looks for all the world like a henpecked husband. His eyes are almost turned wrong end about from lookin' behind him so much to see what new kink is comin'. He ain't crowed once since the red pepper campaign in September. It was moultin' season, only the girls didn't sense it. They'd never heard of hens moultin', and when they see so many feathers blowin' around loose Helen come over and borrowed a few pounds of red pepper. She explained that there was microbes workin' at the roots of the feathers and that pepper blowed inside would kill 'em. She didn't make it plain which would be killed, but time did. About half of the hens died, and that old rooster got so much of the hot stuff inside him that he thought he'd been overtook by the day of judgment. He thinks so yet. He ain't crowed since."

That finished Billings. He saw the sufferin's of them hens and remonstrated. He couldn't have done a worse thing for the hens or himself—or me—as it turned out.

He begun Thanksgivin' afternoon. I suppose he thought he'd got along far enough to give advice. It was as warm as September that day, and they was settin' out on an upheaved rock in their back yard while I wrestled with their henhouse door, which had dropped off its trolley arrangement. He begun by mildly suggestin' that they'd get eggs if they'd just drop the hens awhile from their callin' list and let 'em scratch for themselves.

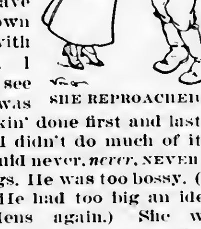
Helen stiffened, as I could see out of the tail of my eye, and asked where he'd made a study of hens. He said he hadn't studied 'em. He'd made a point of avoidin' 'em back on his father's farm, and the process had agreed with both him and the hens.

She got stiffer and stiffer. Said she had made a special classroom study of them under one of the most scientific farmer professors in America and had learned that the best results ensued if the birds was made perfectly familiar with the human voice!

He sort of indicated in a general and inoffensive way that hens rather hear themselves squawk than any one else.

That's all I heard, but I wa'n't a bit suprised at the result. He generally come in nights pretty late with his homely face lookin' as if St. Peter had opened the gate a crack. That night he come in early lookin' like he'd glimpsed another spot. He set down and told me all about it, blubberin' like a six-year-old. While the quarrel had begun on hens, it hadn't stayed there. As near as I could make out, the difference had ended by includin' everything in heaven above or earth below. Them hens had played the mischief with his Thanksgivin', that was sure!

Then I did something I'm ashamed to own. I offered to mix in. I said that I was sure her dear Uncle Mort would have some influence with her. So I mixed in and found out that her dear Uncle Mort could have minded his own business with advantage. I went over to see her. There was a deal of talkin' done first and last, but I remember I didn't do much of it myself. She would never, never, NEVER marry Mr. Billings. He was too bossy. (That was hens!) He had too big an idea of himself. (Hens again.) She would never, never live with a man who did not place a higher value on her brains. (Again, hens.) She was grateful she had found him out in time. And then, shades of Ebenezer, if she didn't fall to and pitch into me! She reproached me for havin' harbored him. She said that if I had remonstrated with her when she asked my advice about his comin' she would have been spared all this. At that I mopped my face and come home. The last thing I heard just outside my door was that she should devote her life to bringin' up hens the way they ought to go.



SHE REPROACHED ME.

That was the first and last matchmakin' job I ever tackled voluntarily. Next mornin' I was back into the business involuntarily.

That man Billings come downstairs to breakfast deaf, dumb and blind. He looked as if he'd lost his last friend except me. I had reason to wish before many hours that he'd lost me. After breakfast he wrung my hand loose at the wrist, picked up his grip and started for the train. I have two doors in my sittin' room close together. One leads into the hall and one don't. He opened the one that don't and landed on the stone floor of my cellar.

It wasn't very thoughtful of him to do it, seein' there's only one of me and more than enough of him for two, but I done my best with the fragments. I gathered 'em up and carted 'em upstairs. The doctor and I fitted the pieces together as near as we could judge where they belonged and stretched the result on the parlor couch. There's no gettin' around the fact that Billings is homely when he is whole, but, viewed as a lot of fragments, he was enough to give a man the nightmare. His left arm was bandaged. His lip was sewed. His right eye and forehead was done up. The rest of his face was held down by court plasters.

SQUEEZIN' INTO A TWO FOOT SPACE TO KILL A WOODCHUCK.

Of course I didn't send for Helen. I thought I'd miss bein' a bigger fool than I knew I was, but I didn't. It seemed I'd left undone just what I'd ought to do, and it didn't take me long to find it out either. I had started for the well, when she come racin' and boohooin' across the back yard from the henhouse. She seemed out of breath, but she wa'n't. She had enough left to stop and tackle me with on the spot. I learned more in two minutes about my general disposition and tendencies than I'd learned before in forty-five years.

Why had I left her darlin' in rough men's hands when there was she a-lovin' him to distraction only a few feet away? Why was I so insensible to her feelin's as not even to send her news of his condition? And didn't I realize I was guilty of murder in the first degree to have a cellar door next my hall door?

This wa'n't all, but it's a fair sized specimen. She disappeared inside the door like a small monsoon, leavin' me staggered. After I'd recovered some I went in and found her on her knees in front of the couch kissin' every spot she could find vacant on that chap's face. And after she got through with it each spot looked better than a whole face taken together does ordinary. But it was her language that I couldn't stand. It wasn't exactly on the order that she'd been usin' to me, and I judged it wa'n't exactly what he'd been used to hearin' from her either, but I gathered from her remarks that she was ready to give up hen raisin' and devote herself to fragments.

About that time I bolted. There is things that a sensible man like me can't stand up against. I went out on the back stoop, and there I found I wa'n't the only critter that was makin' a break for liberty. Helen had left the hen yard gate open, and every bird was makin' a bee line for parts unknown. Then and there I see my finish. I see I'd be called on to hunt stray hens till Christmas, and I decided on this here healthful change of climate.

KISSIN' EVERY VACANT SPOT.

I set down on the spot and wrote an advertisement. I made it strong. I showed up all the advantages of rentin' a neat little country place with all the improvements, includin' delightful neighbors so near by. In less'n a week that ad. had done the business.

Just passin' my troubles along to some man? Not by a long shot! I wouldn't be so underhanded. I rented my premises to a widow and two small children—lively little chaps, I hear, that charge 5 cents a run per hen!

What Turkeys Eat.

Turkeys are the greatest grasshopper exterminators in the world. When very young they must be fed bran, but after that they pick up their own food. For the starchy elements they eat waste wheat from stubble fields; for the vegetable part of their diet they devour several varieties of weed and grass seeds, and for meat substance they consume grasshoppers and bugs.

A Sign of Economy.

The Old Man—H'm! Is he a saving and economical young man? The Sweet Young Thing—Indeed he is, papa. Why, he trims his cuffs!

Without earnestness there is nothing to be done in life.—Goethe.

A Thanksgiving Lay

By CHARLES STOW

[Copyright, 1905, by Charles Stow.]

IN the wooing and mating time of spring,
When bluebells blossom and bluebirds sing,
By the shy hen turkey hidden away,
To greet May's coming, an egg there lay.

BUT the sly bird vainly seeketh a screen
In distant cover of vernal green,
For a bright eyed lassie pursues the quest
Till she discovers the stolen nest.

A bright eyed lassie pursues the quest.

CAREFULLY stepping, she daintily holds
Her bran-specked prize in her apron folds
Till deftly and snugly consigned to rest
Under the sitting hen's ruffled breast.

AND the teeming month of June shall see
In the shade of the old sweet apple tree
A top-heavy bantling flutter and sprawl,
Whenever it hears the good dame call.

IN the sultry days of ruddy July,
Roaming afield where the grass is high,
With a plaintive peep and vigilant peck,
Skulks something, princip'ly legs and neck.

WHEN leaves are falling and flowers have fled,
In black and bronze and cardinal red,
With a proud spread tail and a rampant wing
Struts the barnyard's pride, the menu's king.

MID the falling flakes of a wintry night
The farmer looms in the lantern's light,
And with gleaming blade and a final flop
A foul deed's done for the poultry shop.

The farmer looms in the lantern's light.

AND gobbler that gobbled the early worm
Is festively gobbled in his turn,
And the egg the sly turkey hid away
Proves to have been a Thanksgiving lay.

THANKSGIVING IN JAPAN.

"Yankees of the Orient" Have a Day of Their Own.

Americans have fondly imagined that Thanksgiving day is an institution peculiar to themselves. Not so. The wonderful "Yankees of the orient," as the Japanese have been called, are like us in more ways than one. One of the resemblances lies in the fact that both countries have a national thanksgiving. Perhaps it would be more modest to say that we are like the Japs in this respect, for they had their Thanksgiving first. It is not known just how old the institution is with them, but it must date back some centuries. The day is celebrated on the 17th of October, and thus, with them as with us, it is a thank offering for the harvests and so occurs in the autumn.

The day opens in Japan by the mikado going to the shrine before sunrise and offering thanks and supplications to God and to the spirits of his ancestors. After the rising sun, which is Japan's emblem, comes out over the picturesque hilltops of the island empire a state banquet is ordered, and similar banquets are had all over the kingdom. The Japs have no turkeys to grace the occasion, but they have other toothsome dishes peculiar to themselves. It is probable that they do not indulge in gluttony quite as much as we, for they are an abstemious people. Then the day, if not inclement, is spent in parks and under the trees.

It is safe to say, however, that while the Japanese Thanksgiving antedates ours, nothing was known of it by our Puritan ancestors.

Washington's First Thanksgiving.

The initial national Thanksgiving was held under a proclamation by George Washington in the first year of the new republic, 1789. Washington issued one other proclamation of like nature in 1795. Adams also issued one or two, and Madison called for a day of thanks after the close of the war of 1812. So far as presidential notice was concerned, the day was allowed to lapse, however, until permanently revived by Abraham Lincoln in 1863. In 1870 congress passed a law making the day set apart by the president as one for offering thanks a national holiday.

A Time For Thanks

By ARTHUR J. BURDICK

[Copyright, 1905, by Arthur J. Burdick.]

'TIS rest time an' blest time, an' time to lift the voice
In glad Thanksgivin' anthems—time now to rejoice
That fruit time brought a plenty; that harvest toil is o'er;
That larder, granary an' bin hold now a bounteous store.

Swing back the smokehouse door, there,
An' take a peep within!
Those hams so brown a-hangin' down
Say, "Let the feast begin!"

Fiddler, let 'er go!

'TIS rare time an' spare time, the time to lift the heart
With swellin' thoughts o' gratitude to Him who doth impart
To us such bounteous blessin's; to us such pleasures rare.
'Tis time to ope the generous hand an' all these blessin's share.

Set goin' the corn popper;
Lay chestnuts on the coals;
Thanksgivin's here, dispense the cheer
An' gladden other souls.

'TIS cheer time an' dear time, an' time to gather in
The loved ones o' the neighborhood, an' all the kith an' kin;
Lengthen out the table, an' let the cloth be spread;
Time fer fellowship an' love, an' time fer breakin' bread.

Tune the fiddle, strain the string,
Rosin well the bow;
Get yer pardners on the floor—
Fiddler, let 'er go!

Let the feast begin.

'TIS glad time, but sad time, fer memories arise
O' loved ones givin' thanks this year up yonder in the skies;
An' though we know 'tis better so, an' they are happy there,
Our eyes will dim whene'er they fall upon the vacant chair.

But let us be rejoicin'
An voicin' thankful prayer;
Those friends so dear blest us when here,
An' we shall meet them there.

UNCLE SAM'S THANKSGIVING

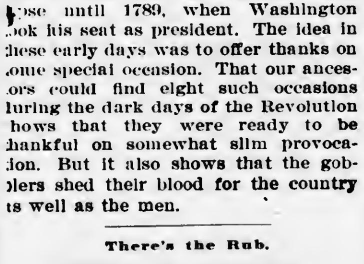
In These Days It Covers Much of the Earth's Surface.

It must be remembered that the president's proclamation appointing a day of thank offering and praise to the Most High goes not only to the forty-five states and territories, but also to the new island dependencies of the republic—Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines. The natives of these tropical climes take quite kindly to any sort of a holiday, especially a holiday that involves a feast, so that Thanksgiving is already popular among them. Uncle Sam's national bird, the gobbler, is not well known to them yet, but it is quite probable that they will appreciate his highness when they are better acquainted with his succulent qualities. There are enough native Americans in the various islands, including soldiers, merchants, officials, schoolteachers and the like, to see that the introduction is properly brought about.

Thanksgivings of the Revolution.

There were eight Thanksgiving days appointed by the Continental congress for observance among the colonies during the war for independence. After the one called for the purpose of celebrating the peace treaty, which was held in 1784, the day was allowed to lapse until 1789, when Washington took his seat as president. The idea in these early days was to offer thanks on some special occasion. That our ancestors could find eight such occasions during the dark days of the Revolution shows that they were ready to be thankful on somewhat slim provocation. But it also shows that the gobblers shed their blood for the country as well as the men.

There's the Rub.



"Do you know, I sometimes grow so tired of this idle butterfly existence that I'm almost tempted to go to work."

"And why don't you?"

"Oh, I'm afraid I'd find work even more tiresome."—San Francisco Examiner.

Another Victim.

"Poor Mrs. Boozer suffers terribly from the liquor habit," said Mrs. Gabb.

"How is that?" inquired Mrs. Chinn, scenting gossip.

"When her husband comes home at night is he is too far gone to pay attention to her remonstrances and the next morning he has such a headache he can't listen to her."—Portland Telegram.

Hoyt, the playwright, said to a friend: "I've a couple of tickets for 'Nathan Hale' tonight. Come along; it's a good show." "No," replied the person invited. "I don't like Goodwin, and I won't go." "But come and see the play." "No, I don't like Goodwin on the stage or off, and I won't go." "Oh, this is just the play you want to see him in, then," said Hoyt, earnestly; "he gets hanged in the last act."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Turner Tanksley, a representative of an insurance company, called upon Edmund Grant, an elderly colored man, with a view of getting him to insure his life. "Good morning, Uncle Ned," said Mr. Tanksley. "Mawnin', boss," said the old man, raising his hat and making a low courtesy. "Uncle Ned, do you carry any insurance?" inquired the solicitor. "Do I carry what?" asked Uncle Ned, in great surprise. "Do you carry any insurance? Is your life insured?" asked the solicitor by way of explanation. "Bless Gawd! yas, yas," replied the colored man, "long ago—long ago." Then the solicitor asked: "In what company?" Uncle Ned answered: "I'm a Baptist, sah; I'm a Baptist—a deep-wattah Baptist."—Lippincott's.

RUBBER TRAVELING CASE.

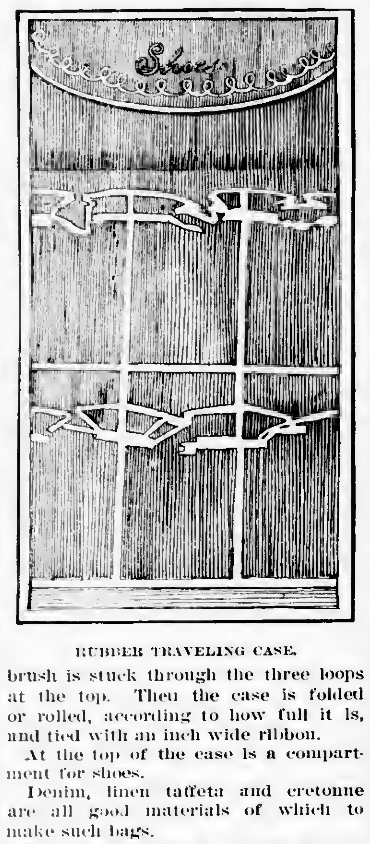
Christmas Gift That Will Please an Orderly Person.

It's always a question what to do with sponge and toothbrush or a wash rag when you're traveling, if it's only the tiny overnight trip. So, if you're thinking of making a Christmas gift for some one who is going away, try a rubber case for these very things.

Get sheet rubber (the light color is best) and tape (there's regular tape that comes for binding rubber), and for covering a thin silk, or, better still, one of the linen or cotton washable stuffs, so that the wet things can't stain it.

Cut your rubber sheeting twenty-four inches long and nine or ten wide and cover on one side, being careful to baste the rubber and covering together close to the edge. Bastings will pull out of the cloth without leaving a mark, but make tiny holes in the rubber, which grow larger in spite of the most careful handling.

Line pieces of the covering with the rubber for the patch pockets and stitch rubber lined bands for the comb and brush holder. The long pocket at the bottom is for the wash rag and the big pocket for the sponge, while the tooth brush is stuck through the three loops at the top. Then the case is folded or rolled, according to how full it is, and tied with an inch wide ribbon.



RUBBER TRAVELING CASE.

At the top of the case is a compartment for shoes.

Denim, linen taffeta and cretonne are all good materials of which to make such bags.

Each row of pockets is made in one, with the divisions made by tapes stitched flat, and each pocket is a big box plait, with a casing running clear across, through which a strong elastic is run to keep the tops from sagging down.

The decoration at the top is a form of buttonholing, with the stitches widely spaced, or featherstitching, with a heavy mercerized cotton, may be used.

Dainty Bags as Presents.

Ribbons make beautiful opera bags by overcasting the selvage, leaving a heading of several inches and lining them with a corresponding color.

Bags to hold large pieces of fancy work are made from two strips of wide ribbon put together to give the effect of a huge ball. One, in flower pattern, was formed by felling together the selvages of two strips three-quarters of a yard long. The outer selvages were then gathered into tight knots, forming the poles of the ball. There ends of the ribbon were hemmed, inclosing a strip of whalebone which kept the ball in shape.

Vanity Bags as Presents.

Vanity bags designed as Christmas gifts are shaped like money pockets and are easily thrust into the corsage. Delicately scented ribbon is used, and the case and flap are neatly bound in narrow white ribbon. Inside is a watch shaped chamois bag with several slits cut in it to let the powder out. A prolongation of this bag forms a cover to stay over the slit side. The edges of the flap are pinked. In the pocket is also a round mirror, and several safety pins are also caught to the case.

She Quotes an Authority.

Elsie—When I grow up, mamma, I'm going to be extravagant like you. Mamma—What makes you think I'm extravagant? Elsie—Well, I'm sure I've heard papa say so lots of times.

"SAVED MY LIFE"

—That's what a prominent druggist said of Scott's Emulsion a short time ago. As a rule we don't use or refer to testimonials in addressing the public, but the above remark and similar expressions are made so often in connection with Scott's Emulsion that they are worthy of occasional note. From infancy to old age Scott's Emulsion offers a reliable means of remedying improper and weak development, restoring lost flesh and vitality, and repairing waste. The action of Scott's Emulsion is no more of a secret than the composition of the Emulsion itself. What it does it does through nourishment—the kind of nourishment that cannot be obtained in ordinary food. No system is too weak or delicate to retain Scott's Emulsion and gather good from it.

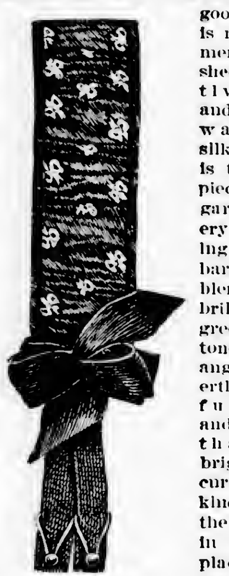
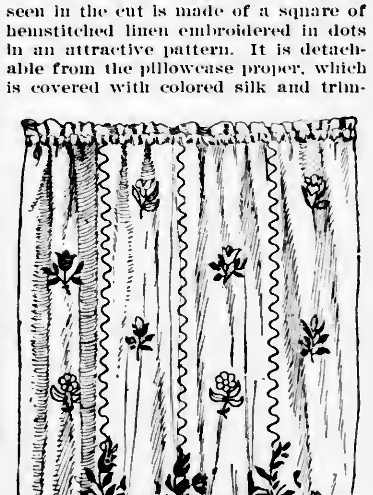
Some Dainty
Embroidered Gifts
For Christmas

THE artistic decoration of the bedroom has become a kind of fetich lately, and the more unusual and individual a room of this character is fitted up the smarter it becomes. The girl who is skillful with her needle will find that a pair of embroidered sash curtains will be appreciated as a gift to a chum who is fitting up her bedroom or den. The curtain shown in the illustration is a good example. It is made of casement linen, a sheer and attractive material, and is worked in wash floselle silk. The design is taken from a piece of old Hungarian embroidery. The coloring is almost barbaric in the blending of its brilliant blues, greens, reds and touches of orange, but is nevertheless wonderfully effective, and in a room that needs brightening a curtain of this kind would be the right thing in the right place. The satin stitch in which the design is worked makes an appearance equally good from either side of the material. Sash curtains could be treated in a simpler way, possibly with a border of conventional character or of natural flowers done on a coarse kind of canvas in a deep shade of twine. This material hangs with admirable softness. Others again might be of clear muslin worked with shadow embroidery. In fact, the idea is capable of endless variations and developments which an inventive worker will be quick to perceive and to turn to account in imparting an individual touch to her curtain.



SILK GARTER.

The dainty little lingerie pillow cover seen in the cut is made of a square of hemstitched linen embroidered in dots in an attractive pattern. It is detachable from the pillowcase proper, which is covered with colored silk and trimmed with a frill around the edges to keep the lingerie cover out firm and fluffy.

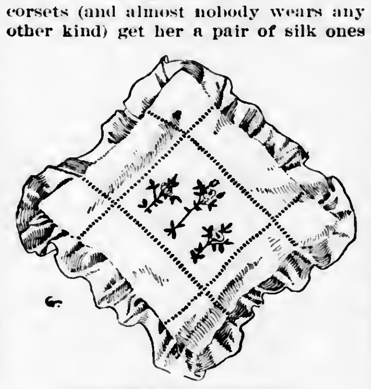


EMBROIDERED SASH CURTAIN.

Stocks, those airy, frivolous bits of lace and filmy strips, are fascinating and becoming enough to call down blessings on your head every time the girl you give one to has occasion to wear it. The newest trick this year is to have tiny finely plaited ruffles at the base of the collar that spread out fan fashion and do away with the severe line at the base of the throat.

White is the most satisfactory to give, unless you're sure that the color you choose to make one of will "go" with your friend's clothes.

If she wears garters attached to her corsets (and almost nobody wears any other kind) get her a pair of silk ones and set the elastic in a full easing of heavy ribbon that will stretch out with the elastic. Keep them all in one shade and finish them off with small flat bows. If you want to make them still more effective, put silver clasps on them, for, although the others are really more satisfactory to wear, a girl likes to feel she has the silver clasps. The garter shown in the cut is very pretty and dainty.



LINGERIE PILLOW COVER.

A Sofa Pillow Hint.

Sofa pillows are always splendid Christmas gifts, and the burlap covers that have come out this year are inexpensive and effective without a great deal of a friend's work to them.

Exact Obedience.

Native servants in India have the generally desirable, though sometimes inconvenient, virtue of the Chinese—doing exactly as they are told. The trouble is that they seldom use judgment.

Lord Roberts during a campaign in India had ordered his man to prepare his bath at a certain hour. One day a fierce engagement was going on, but the servant made his way through a storm of bullets and appeared at his commander's side.

"Sahib," said he, "your bath is ready."

Even a better story comes from an unknown soldier who was awakened one morning by feeling the servant of a brother officer pulling at his foot.

"Sahib," whispered the man, "sahib, what am I to do? My master told me to wake him at half past 6, but he did not go to bed till 7."

The Old, Old Story Boiled Down.

She (early in the evening)—Good evening, Mr. Sampson. Same She (late in the evening)—Good night, George.

An old Chinese proverb says, "Be very appreciative, and the people you admire will spit in your face."

How to Make Pretty Presents
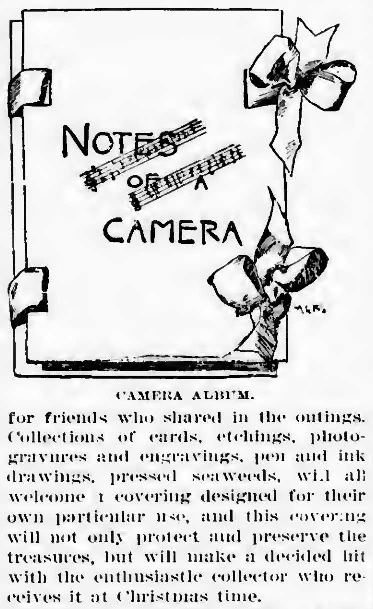
For Christmas

A COLLECTION of photographs or blue prints is the inevitable result of a summer's vacation. The ardent amateur photographer, having assailed every attraction in nature's keeping and snapped an instantaneous impression into his camera, must transfer his efforts to a background of white cardboard, and with these souvenirs of out of door good times one can originate Christmas gifts for friends who shared in the outings. Collections of cards, etchings, photogravures and engravings, pen and ink drawings, pressed seaweeds, will all welcome a covering designed for their own particular use, and this covering will not only protect and preserve the treasures, but will make a decided hit with the enthusiastic collector who receives it at Christmas time.



CAMERA ALBUM.

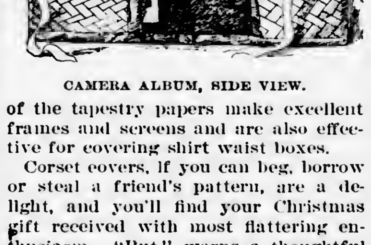
Taking this illustration for a guide, a very pretty and artistic portfolio may be fashioned. Cut from stiff white cardboard two pieces the same size as the mounted photographs. Letter first in pencil—and over this use ink or paint—some name or title. The first two bars of "Should Auld Acquaintance Be Forgot" thrown back (by using lighter ink) of "Notes of a Camera" will suggest other combinations for outside designs. If pressed flowers are to be inclosed in your portfolio, fasten a maidenhair fern or spreading leaves to the cover, or if seaweeds are pressed on the inside cards attach one to the outside, with an appropriate quotation lettered in one corner. Or fasten an unmounted photograph to your top card.

A decoration possible to the owner of a camera is done by pinning on a large board several of the photographs you intend to cover and photographing them in a small group. The print is pasted on the portfolio, and no explanations are needed to tell what is inside.

A clever use of the slits through which the ribbons are passed for tying the covers together will give considerable variety to your portfolios. Experiment with these before you destroy your best cards, and you will find out some different devices for yourself. Instead of using ribbons you will like silk braids or gilt or silver braids or cords for variety. By selecting tying strings, cardboard and lettering ink in different shades of one color a harmonious looking portfolio will be the result. If you wish the letters on the cover thrown into relief, cut them out of paper, glue them on firmly and gild or paint them.

The second sketch shows a portfolio made of Japanese tea matting. The inside is lined with green velvet, and pockets are added, and the whole is bound with green ribbon, with strings for tying around sewed to the back. This makes a serviceable and dainty portfolio for choice cabinet photographs.

Unless you have tried it you cannot imagine what pretty and inexpensive picture frames for Christmas can be made of wall paper. Select paper of a small design or of plain color and cover the panels, which have been cut from heavy cardboard, turning the edges over and gluing in place. Place the front panels in a row close together, face down, and lay a piece of ribbon at the top and bottom to form hinges. The backs are then glued to these, except the lower edge, which is left open to slip the photograph in. Place a board over this with a heavy weight until dry. Some very effective frames for large photographs are made of flowered designs and are quite as pretty as hand painted ones if fine, carefully selected paper is used. Some of the tapestry papers make excellent frames and screens and are also effective for covering shirt waist boxes.



CAMERA ALBUM, SIDE VIEW.

Corset covers, if you can beg, borrow or steal a friend's pattern, are a delight, and you'll find your Christmas gift received with most flattering enthusiasm. "But," warns a thoughtful woman, "don't make a corset cover unless you know the kinds she wears or you'll be giving a full, fussy one to a girl whose taste in underclothes is severely simple, or a plain one, embellished in true French style, with only fine little vines and dots and scallops embroidered by hand, to the girl who always wears frills and fluff."

Ringer and Wind.

Making a ringer in the pitching of quoits must have been a part of the training which made the English longbowmen so terrible in siege that by gauging the distance and taking the lay of the wind they could send up a deadly volley at the exact angle to drop their arrows with destructive force into the heart of a beleaguered city. Getting the lay of the wind is the first thing to be learned in the noble art of pitching horseshoes. If the wind be contrary, the nicest calculations as to everything else will be in vain. It is only a supreme master of the game, a dazzling genius in its mathematics, who can play against the wind—that is to say, one who, if the wind be from the east, can, by throwing at exactly that degree of an oblique angle needed to make it meet the wind full at the point opposite the goal, may hope to have it carried to the right spot.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Unlike Fishing Lines.

"That fishing song in the new opera is clever, don't you think?" asked the critic.

"No," replied the hard luck angler; "it isn't at all natural."

"No?"

"No; the lines are too catchy."

Pretty and Useful Christmas Gifts
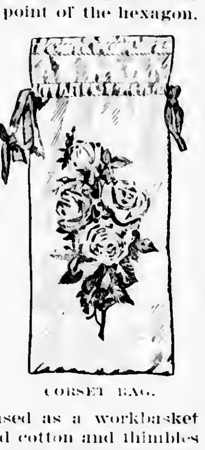
Made at Home

NO matter how many workbaskets a woman owns, she is always pleased to have another pretty one added to her stock in trade.

Singularly attractive and new is the basket illustrated.

A base is made, six sided, nine or ten inches wide, with each side measuring four to five inches. A bag seven inches high, half as wide again as the base, is gathered to it and slashed down half the way at every point of the hexagon. Then they are secured and finished exactly like separate bags, with the division line carried all the way down by brier stitching, and a narrow ribbon is run through a casing in each bag which draws up independently of the rest, or six little bags can be made and set on and then joined part way up from the base.



CORSET BAG.

The center is used as a workbasket where scissors and cotton and thimbles are to be found, while each little bag holds its kind of work entirely separate and out of a general disorder.

They are pretty in almost every material, but the newest are of scrim.

Other new bags come of cretonnes in small designs cut into four oblongs and the seams joined on the outside and bound with tape. A pocket is put on each side, with a flap that buttons down flat, and the whole bag is sewed on a square base. Tapes instead of ribbons to match the binding tapes are used for drawing strings.

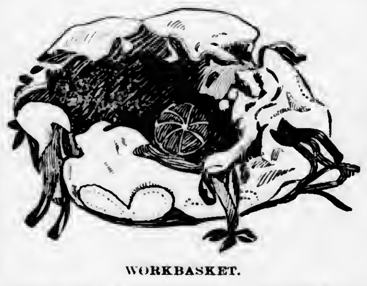
Shoe bags, just plain bags about a foot long, are made of cretonne in the plainest of bag fashions and drawn up with tapes. A set of half a dozen is a pretty, inexpensive gift and are a luxury to a girl who travels a good deal and who knows the bother of wrapping her shoes up in paper.

Corset bags are a great protection to that best pair of corsets. They are long, slim affairs, just big enough to snugly cover up the corsets when they're rolled from each side toward the tapes. Six inches wide, sixteen inches long, is the best length to make them. Some are of thin nainsook simply made up over pink lawn and with a narrow casing made by two rows of brier stitching with embroidery cotton. Dotted swiss over a color is equally pretty, while the most elaborate are of white satin, painted with roses in delicate colors, or of brocaded silks. But the simple ones are the prettiest of all and a little more in keeping with the piles of snowy underclothes, delicate lingerie or sturdier things that share a drawer with it.

Renaissance has been called in for everything from table covers to hats, but the newest, prettiest idea is to make fans of it. The creamy braids and the white ones are equally pretty, and designs with great butterflies spreading their wings seem particularly appropriate to the frivolous toy that is meant to flutter as gracefully as they. Lovers of renaissance work will welcome this new departure, and the girl with a dilapidated fan, but a pair of lovely fan sticks—mother-of-pearl or ivory—will achieve a rare gift if she makes the lace and mounts it on the discarded sticks.

Umbrella handles are greatly in vogue as presents, and some of the newest are exquisite works of art in crystal, jade and enamel, with circlets of tiny rubies and diamonds cutting the center of the ball. The charming idea of inclosing the miniature or a photograph of the "beloved one" in the flat circular case forming the top of the umbrella stick or cane is truly Parisian. This is certainly a graceful fashion, especially as a present for a fiance.

Guest books are especially appropriate for the people who are just married or are moving into new homes. Stunning ones can be found in the shops, bound in leather and mounted in silver, but the prettiest of all are handmade, embroidered or painted or done in burnt work. Sheets of paper are tied inside—a paper that will take ink well. Sometimes a gay little penholder is tied to it or run through ribbon loops. The idea is for each guest who comes to the new home to write a verse or a sentiment and sign his name and the date.



WORKBASKET.

Spools of thread for handy use are kept in all sorts of contrivances. There are tiny little basket hampers that will hold two spools and a diminutive emery. When filled they are most convenient for traveling. They are lined with a pretty, plain silk, and the tiny emery is attached to a corner of the basket by a fine silk cord. Flannel leaves for needles are fastened to the cover.

Whistler's Idea of Hands.

Whistler, the artist, said: "I always use Irish models for hands, with their long, slender fingers and delightful articulations, the most beautiful hands in the world. I think Irish eyes are also the most beautiful. American girls' hands come next. English girls have red, coarse hands; the German girl has broad, flat hands, and the Spanish hand is full of big veins."

To Break It Gently.

Mike had been appointed a committee of one to break the sad news to the widow.

"Here," said Pat, "where are yez goin'?"

"To the tillegraph office. I'll sind her a dispatch, and whin she gets it she'll faint and the turrable shock'll be painless."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Now They Don't Speak.

Clara—I always tell my real age. Estelle—Well, you can afford to. You see, you're not as old as you look.—Detroit Free Press.

Probably.

"Kind words cost nothing."

"Exactly. I think some folk distribute them freely on that account."

A Patent Medicine Talk

Readers of such leading magazines, as the "Ladies' Home Journal" and "Collier's Weekly" must have noticed recently many articles relative to patent medicines.

The editors of these magazines are seeking to bring about by legislation and agitation, what they choose to call a reform in the patent medicine business. They make the statement that it is not only unsafe, but unwise, and in many cases destructive of health, for people to purchase and consume patent medicines the ingredients of which they have no knowledge.

It it not our purpose to enter into a discussion of the merits or demerits of this agitation or crusade. Thousands of people have used patent medicines and have been benefited by them. At the same time there are undoubtedly evils existing in the ABUSE of some so-called patent medicines. Because you have a thief in your neighborhood you would not say the whole neighborhood is composed of thieves. We know that we have plenty of customers at our counters who tell our clerks what benefit they derive from this or that preparation.

Yet even with this knowledge it is hard for us to say what one among the patent medicines is the "neighborhood black-leg." The unfortunate part of our position is that we do not know the formulas of the patent medicines we sell. We do not believe that the proprietors of patent medicines are dishonest or that they are intentionally misrepresenting their products. If we did we would certainly refuse to sell their goods over our counter.

Our exact position in this patent medicine agitation is this: We are the servants of the public. We sell and will continue to sell patent medicines just the same as the grocer sells you canned corn or potatoes. We want our patrons to find in our stock just what they demand, only we can positively say that at any time we find a medicine is injurious we will throw it out of our store.

Several years ago, a thousand of the leading druggists throughout the United States organized themselves together in a co-operative company to produce remedies which they could back up with their own names and their own reputations.

The first object of this co-operative company was to produce a line of remedies that every druggist would know thoroughly. There were to be no secret formulas; the ingredients of every remedy would be known to every druggist.

Each of these thousand druggists contributed to the organization all that his knowledge and experience had brought to him in the way of advice as to different remedies. The formulas of something like 2,000 or more remedies were sent to the company. A committee of experts was appointed and this committee went over the various formulas conscientiously and earnestly for a long period of time and selected from the entire list about 200 standard remedies, the manufacture of which the company then undertook.

The company in the meantime had erected a perfect laboratory—large, well-appointed, with every appliance known to modern skill. The combined capital of a thousand druggists made it possible for the company to purchase in the largest quantities, the fundamental drugs and herbs, etc., that form the ingredients of the various remedies. This meant not only the highest quality in manufacture, but the very greatest economy—the cutting out of every wasteful item and every unnecessary expense.

The remedies when manufactured were shipped directly from the laboratory to the retail druggists. This insured their freshness and made it impossible for their quality to deteriorate. Not only that, but it also did away with the jobbers' profit. Here again the co-operative system added not only quality but brought about economy.

Most of our patrons are familiar with these facts. Most of them are already acquainted with the formulas of Rexall Remedies which are manufactured by the United Drug Co., with laboratory and principal offices in Boston, Mass. These are the remedies and this is the co-operative company that we believe has done more to bring about a change in patent medicine conditions than any other element in existence.

Each of the Rexall druggists know absolutely what each Rexall remedy contains. He has the formula of each remedy on file in his safe. He will gladly give it to anyone who is interested. There is nothing secret about any of the Rexall formulas. On the contrary, we are thoroughly proud of them. We want you to know about them.

No one Rexall remedy is a "cure-all." It is not necessary for us to invent diseases and symptoms and then endeavor to convince you that one Rexall remedy will cure you of every ailment in the world. To our minds that has been one of the fundamental errors of patent medicine manufacturers, and that has been corrected by the Rexall people. One remedy for each ill, and that remedy the unquestioned best in the world, is the principle upon which Rexall success is founded.

We are proud of our connection with Rexall. We are proud to be able to offer to the people of this community, a line of remedies that we can back up with every bit of reputation we have earned by square dealing and honest, conscientious treatment of our trade.

Our confidence in Rexall is shown by the fact that we absolutely guarantee every Rexall remedy we sell. This is not an empty phrase with us, we mean just what we say. If you buy a Rexall remedy and are not entirely satisfied with it, all you need to do is to bring the empty bottle or package back to us and say "I was not satisfied, please give me my money" and we will return the money to you instantly and cheerfully.

We feel that you are conferring an obligation upon us when you do this. We want to know every case that the Rexall remedies fail to cure. We want you to get your money back if the remedy has not done the work you expected it to do.

Can any principle of business be fairer than this? Is it not thoroughly in accord with President Roosevelt's doctrine of the square deal for every man?

From time to time in newspaper announcements, we shall say various things about various Rexall remedies. We want the people to understand thoroughly what the word Rexall means to every family in this entire community. If the real facts about Rexall were appreciated to-day, no other patent medicines would need to be offered to the people.

Principal F. W. Cross of the Palmer high school will give a talk on "Richmond and Its Environs" before the Teachers' Study Club at the home of Supt. F. A. Wheeler to-morrow evening.

Mrs. Harriet Bradley entertained a whist party at her home on High street Monday evening in honor of her guest, Mrs. Whipple. The prizes were won by Mrs. L. C. Flynt and R. D. Tucker.

Two more cases of typhoid fever have developed in town the past week. Two children of John Johnson on Pine avenue are now ill with the disease. What causes so much typhoid fever in town seems very hard to determine.

The loss by fire on H. D. Moulton's tenement block at South Monson has been settled by the Peck & Fay insurance agency. In the last six years this agency has settled 20 claims and paid losses amounting to $43,000

Louis W. Packard and Miss Margaret Matthieson, daughter of Mr and Mrs. John Matthieson of Granite street, were quietly married Sunday evening by Rev N. M. Pratt. Mr. and Mrs. Packard will reside on Granite street.

Prof. Davis of Wilbraham Academy gave a very interesting lecture on "Russia," before the Century Club and invited friends at the home of Mrs. E R. Cooke on North Main street Tuesday afternoon. Light refreshments were served.

Mt. Ella lodge of United Workmen will observe their 11th anniversary in Workman hall next Monday evening. The members' families and friends have been invited. The committee in charge of the entertainment is: William S. Hughes, William J. Lewis, Joseph Foster and James Burdick

A stereopticon lecture will be given in the Academy chapel the evening of December 15 on "Ben Hur," by Rev. Albert L. Squier of Newton. The lecture will be given under the auspices of the Epworth League of the Methodist church and the proceeds will go toward the organ fund.

The second whist party for the benefit of St. Patrick's church fair was held in the Sunday school room Tuesday evening with a good attendance, and was a very enjoyable occasion. The first prizes were won by Miss Mary Moran and Walter Clark, and the consolation prizes were won by Miss Elizabeth Welsh and William Kennedy.

At the meeting of Day Spring lodge of Masons held Tuesday night, these officers elect were installed by District Deputy C. M. Gage: W. M, George H. Seymour; S W, Frank L Bliss; J. W., Dr P. W. Soule; treasurer, R. F. Bradway; secretary, N. A. Bugbee; chaplain, Rev. N. M. Pratt; marshall, F. J Entwistle; S. D, A. J. Buffington; J. D, E. R Sisson; S. S., C F. Aldrich; J. S, L A. A Charles, George A. Harvey.

The Emerald.

An emerald that has no flaw in it is typical of the purest love. Some people say that, as few such stones can be found' purest love is necessarily rare. An emerald was always thought to possess the power of discovering treachery in the shape of alleged friends. The emerald is exceedingly popular in courtships and in marriages. After marriage it is supposed to bring harmony into the household and to further domestic joys in every possible way. To lose an emerald is said to bring business misfortunes and disaster.

Our Boston Letter

It tells about

The Speakership Contest—Boston Mayorality Nominations—Boston's Albinian Visitor—The Garrison Centennial Celebration—State's Insane Hospitals.

BOSTON, Nov. 22, 1905.

State and city problems press upon the voters these days between the state election and the opening of the new year. In state matters it is the speakership which is especially important. To-day it is a straight fight between Messrs. Walker of Brookline and Cole of Andover, with the result still uncertain, if the best judgment can be trusted. Cole claims that he has a pledged majority of the Republican members-elect. Yet he does not produce his list as candidates always do when they have the requisite number. One of his supporters who said on Saturday that there were still 20 men unpledged, said within three hours the same day that Cole had 86 men pledged in writing, that number being just the total necessary. Such freedom of statement tends to throw discredit upon both accounts of the situation. Cole's further statement, as reported afterward, that he should not have given out the claim on Saturday, as his friends did, that he had 86 signed, goes to make that claim look fishy. It is of the highest importance to the state to know who is deciding this question of the speakership, which is so important for the people. We have been accustomed in times past to have the railroad and railway companies settle this vital matter for us and the people have not rebelled. But this is not a good year for the corporation influence. The companies have become used to exercising their power and doubtless they look upon the mass of the people as the South seemed to Hosea Bigelow to look upon the North before the war:

> "Folks begin to think it's natur
> To take sass an' not be riled;
> Who'd expect to see a tater
> All on eend at bein' biled?"

But our people have had about all they want of corporation "sass" in the election of their public officials, and it will be very profitable not only for the Republican representatives-elect to make sure that their candidate is not run by the corporations, but for the people to look out that their representatives do not lay themselves open to the charge of voting for the corporation candidate. Great issues are at stake for the people at the coming session, with the report of the special committee on the consolidation of the railroad and railway laws, and we need to be sure that we do not have a corporation speaker in the chair.

Next to this matter, and exciting for the public mind, is the city campaign. Doubtless Judge Dewey has a large number of personal friends, but he has laid himself open to severe criticism for running as an independent and thereby making utterly hopeless any chance that Frothingham might have been elected. As it was the chances of Frothingham were of the most shadowy sort. Fitzgerald had at the primaries 7000 more votes alone in advance of the combined vote for the three Republican candidates, saying nothing about the Donovan votes, some 3000 fewer than those for Fitzgerald. Dewey's entry simply makes Fitzgerald's election all the more certain, as far as human eye can see, and Dewey himself cannot have the slightest chance of success.

Boston comes for the first time this year under the new law whereby she has only five on her school committee, instead of 24. Nominations will be made with great care and the friends of good government regard the outcome as almost equal in importance to the election of mayor. Some first-class names are being put up, such as that of James J. Storrow, and certainly the law will be given the benefit of strong support on its first trial. Boston's schools have lost much of their reputation, and hard work is necessary to bring them back to the standard.

One of the arrivals in Boston by the steamship Canopic last week was an Albanian patriot named Shaban Bey Gotsha, who is here to secure the help of the generous Americans in securing for his ignorant and poverty-stricken people the opportunity for education. He has been in London and brings an indorsement from the Balkan committee, of which James Bryce is president, of the idea of Albanian nationalism and approval of the movement for Albanian independence. But what this ardent worker wants just now is the joint recommendation of prominent Americans, joined with that of the British friends of the cause, whereby the Sultan will give the Albanians a system of public schools. Years ago they had a promise, but it was revoked after four months for fear that education would lead the Albanians to agitate for independence. But education is wanted and it is believed that if prominent Englishmen and Americans join in a request to the Sultan, it will have much influence.

Boston is the center of influence of this sort, doubtless from the workers of former years more than of the present, and such hungry souls for education and liberty as this one come here deeply impressed with the generosity and power of the Americans which they hope to have exercised in their behalf. Boston still stands by the Filipinos and the negroes. November 27 will occur the annual meeting of the anti-imperialist league, with a strong address from Moorfield Storey strengthening the unfavorable aspect which even such supporters of our policy as Congressman Gillett, in his address Tuesday evening this week, admitted was the most prominent and discouraging part of the situation As to the negroes, the American Unitarian Association (doubtless still regarding itself as a Christian organization) has just issued a small book, "From Servitude to Service" It contains the six lectures delivered before the old South audiences last season on the history and work of Southern institutions for the education of the negro. These lectures were by Prof. Kelley Miller of Howard University in Washington, President W. G. Frost of Borea College in Kentucky, Tuskegee Institute by Prof Roscoe C. Bruce, Hampton Institute by Principal H. B. Frissell, Atlanta University by Prof W. E B Dubois, and Fisk University by President James G. Merrill. Miller, Bruce and Dubois are colored men, and this summary of the progress of the black people on their way up from slavery is the best possible answer to all doubters Here, in brief space, is sufficient to convince all who are affected by the adverse statements of pleaders on the other side.

Right in connection with this subject comes naturally mention of the great preparations which are in progress for celebration of the centennial of the birth of William Lloyd Garrison. The day falls on Sunday, December 10. On Monday three will be an all day celebration in Faneuil Hall, with adresses by prominent people, black and white. In preparation for it is being distributed a card having on one side a portrait of Garrison under his own words: "My country is the world; my countrymen are all mankind." Under the portrait are three stanzas of Lowell's poem, the first of which is:

> "In a small chamber, friendless and unseen,
> Toiled o'er his types one poor, unlearned young man;
> The place was dark, unfurnitured, and mean;—
> Yet there the freedom of a race began."

On the other side are pictures of the old grammar school in Newburyport and of Garrison's birthplace, close by the old country meetinghouse with antique steeple and spire. There has just been issued by Houghton, Mifflin & Company a little book with the most important utterances of Garrison, selected by his sons, Wendell Phillips Garrison and Francis J Garrison. A biographical sketch is added, and those who have no time for big books can get the cream of his life and sayings here.

Yesterday's session of the trustees of the different state institutions for the care of the insane was well worth the time of those who came. It was devoted to a subject about which the large Boston papers are somewhat disposed to be sensational, namely, the escape of prisoners, or inmates, as they should rather be called, from insane institutions, or institutions for the insane, if one is disposed to criticise language which has come to be official. Every one of the trustees who spoke said that he favored the present practice of giving the inmates as much liberty as possible. It is much better for the afflicted persons. Inevitably it increases the number of escapes. To the careless and thoughtless public, this seems like bad management and consequently, when such an escape occurs as that of the young women from the Taunton hospital last spring, a great sensation is made about it But, in almost all the cases, it is better to give the liberty. Dangerous persons are not trusted where there is liability of escape, so the public may feel assured that no murderously disposed lunatic is permitted to wander at will. These persons who do run away are almost all returned immediately Frequently they go home and it is not infrequently found that they are better off there than in the asylum or hospital. In one case the trustees know where a man is who escaped a year ago and they could have him brought back any time they said so. But he is earning a fair living, benefiting himself and harming no one. It is better that he be out than in. In other cases they are left at home when it seems best No one could have attended that meeting yesterday without realizing that the helpless wards of the state are in good hands and that the welfare of the inmates is of much more consequence than the enforcement of rules. Employes not infrequently assist inmates to escape, and the most of the trustees thought that there should be a law to punish the offense.

LUDLOW.

Fred Simonds and family of Southbridge have been visiting T. Leroy Simonds on West street.

Rev. T. W. Adams of Southwick, a former pastor, will preach in the Methodist church Sunday morning and evening.

Mrs. Putnam Webber and Miss Marion Webber are spending a few weeks in Thorndike.

A number of men and teams have been at work grading the rear yard of the Methodist church. A tar walk has been laid in the front yard.

Dr. A. L. Bennett has finished the annual inspection in this town. He inspected 132 herds and found 734 cows in milk and 45 dry ones, 463 swine and 25 sheep. Only two cows were quarantined as suspected tuberculosis cases and these have recently been brought into town. Dr. Bennett reports the sanitary conditions very much improved and all the herds in fair condition. There is a large increase in thoroughbred stock, especially Holsteins.

The drama "A Retreat," was given in the town hall Monday evening before a large audience by members of the Grange. Following is the cast of characters: Col. Wilfred Barlow (U S. A), M. T Kane; Capt. Philip Barlow (U. S A.), Archer C. Bennett; Pompey (servant to Col. Barlow), John Kane; Corp Yost (First Georgia Wildcats), Charles Chapman; Mrs. Kate Wainwright (Col. Barlow's sister), Addie F. Bennett; Dorothy, (Mrs Wainwright's adopted daughter), Lillian Jones; Henrietta, (the maid), Mrs Bertha Taylor. The parts were particularly well taken. An old-fashioned supper was served after the entertainment, under the direction of J G Taylor and Frank Adams.

What Happened to Jones.

"What's the matter, old man?" he said, as they met the next morning after. "You look blue."

"I feel blue"

"But last night you were the jolliest member of our party."

"I felt jolly."

"You acted like a boy just let out of school."

"I felt like one."

"You said that your wife had gone away for the first time in three years, and there wasn't any one to say a word if you went home and kicked over the mantel clock."

"I remember it."

"You said that if you stayed out until 4 o'clock there was no one to look at you reproachfully, and sigh, and make you feel mean."

"Yes, and I stayed out until 4 o'clock, didn't I?"

"You certainly did."

"And I gave a warwhoop on the front doorstep"

"Yes, and you sang a verse from a comic opera song, and tried to dance a clog."

"Yes, and my wife missed that train. Now, please go away and let me alone."—Chicago Record-Herald.

HAPPY WOMEN.

Plenty Of Them In Palmer, And Good Reason For It.

Wouldn't any woman be happy,
After years of backache suffering,
Days of misery, nights of unrest.
The distress of urinary troubles,
She finds relief and cure?
No reason why any Palmer reader
Should suffer in the face of evidence like this:

Mrs. L. Lafarr, living out in the Carpet mill district, says: "I can truthfully say that Doan's Kidney Pills did me more good than any remedy of the kind I ever tried. Before I used them, for some time I had a severe backache and pain through my head. I awakened in the morning with my back so stiff and sore that I could hardly get out of bed. After a time it gradually lessened, but I was never entirely free from pain in my loins and kidneys. A friend told me about Doan's Kidney Pills and I got them at LeGro's drug store. I used two boxes, taking two pills three times a day, and they cured me entirely of the trouble. I shall be glad to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills to anyone annoyed as I was."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents, Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no substitute.

Change of Habit.

The chimney swallow built its nest somewhere long before the white man constructed chimneys, the potato bug had its home on the plains before it ever knew a potato, and the common elm beetle has fed voraciously in the mountains of North Carolina on a species of skulleap scutellaria, touching apparently no other plant, in localities where the elm was not to be found. In gardens half starved bees have taken to grapes and raspberries. Once when there was no rain from the Fourth of July until Oct. 12, everything having become parched long before, and insects living on green food did not increase, the robins took to seeds and green fruits The apples in the orchards were dug out as if by mice. An American Golden Pippin, with a heavy crop, presented a remarkable appearance with what should be apples hanging on the trees like empty shells. In brief, no creature will ignore the promptings of nature. It will change its habits when necessity demands.

Position in Sleep.

A French scientist claims to have established a distinct connection between our health and the position which our beds occupy with regard to the points of the compass. He relies upon the fact that the sap of trees is gradually driven toward the east by centrifugal force, so that they develop more on that side. This induces him to argue that when we remain in bed for several hours with our heads toward the east this will tend to drive the liquids of our body from the west to east, and our blood has a tendency to flow toward the brain, so that we sleep uneasily and find ourselves less fresh when we awake than if our feet had pointed eastward.

If our bed stand north and south it is better to lie with the head northward, as the centrifugal force acts from north to south in our hemisphere.

This old inscription on a bedstead is good: "So that ye harte be rite, it matters not which waye ye head laye."

Mr. and Mrs Ernest Bordeaux of Commercial street are receiving congratulations on the birth of a son last Friday.

The young men of this place are planning to have a dance in Union Hall next Wednesday evening, Thanksgiving eve.

Jeremiah Sugrue of Waterbury, Ct., formerly of Thorndike, is the guest of his brothers, Patrick and John, on Main street.

Several from this place went to Palmer Sunday afternoon to attend the organization of the order of the branch of Ancient Order of Hibernians.

William Arecotte, manager of Bond's bowling alleys, is offering a fat turkey to the person making the largest score during the month of November.

The dance given recently at Union Hall by the married people was so thoroughly enjoyed by all present that there is talk of holding another in the near future.

Mrs. Daniel Flynn of Pittsfield, wife of Sergeant Flynn of the Pittsfield police force, is the guest of her parents, Mr and Mrs Edward McKelligott of Gay avenue.

Mrs. Thomas Tagan and daughter Mary returned to their home in West Warren this week, after being the guests of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. Lawlor on Summer street.

Cornelius Connor of Thompsonville, who was among the list of persons seriously injured in the trolley accident on the Hartford line Saturday, was formerly a resident of this place for years, and is a grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Sullivan on Harvey avenue.

The funeral of Jeremiah Crowley, son of Mr and Mrs. Daniel Crowley, who died on Thursday of last week at the home of his parents on High street, was held Saturday afternoon at 2 from St Mary's church, Rev Francis J. Lynch officiating Burial was in St. Thomas's cemetery. The pallbearers were Dr. Daniel O'Connor, Dennis O'Connor, James O'Connor, Jeremiah Sullivan, James Sullivan and Daniel Sullivan, all cousins of the deceased.

Many of the residents of this village wish that something could be done to dissipate the odors which come from some of the sewer openings, which at times and in places are certainly rank. The odors are unpleasant, to say the least, and by many are considered a source of menace to the health of the community. It is suggested that flushing the sewers might have a good effect, and whether the matter comes under the jurisdiction of the board of health or the selectmen, they hope that something will be done before cold weather.

The henhouse owned by Joseph Murray of Four Corners was visited one evening the past week while members of the family were attending the bazar at the Town Hall and ten hens were stolen. The parties who did the work are unknown. In order to gain an entrance to the henhouse the thieves had to break the staple and lock, taking the latter away with them. The henhouse of Jeremiah Lynch near Forest Lake junction was also entered the same night but nothing was taken. It is thought that the intruders were frightened away before entering. The door was found open by Mr. Lynch the next morning, it having been pried open.

THREE RIVERS.

Ernest M. Ide spent Sunday in Amherst.

Ralph Seneeal has returned from a trip to Boston.

Miss Lillian Abare is visiting friends in Springfield.

Dr. Wilfred Chivrett is able to be out after a severe illness.

Mr. and Mrs. R C. Newell have gone to Clifton Springs, N. Y.

Peter Seneeal has moved into the house formerly occupied by A Leveille on East Main street.

Willis A. Calkins has returned from a several days' visit with friends in New Hampshire

Alphonse Henrichon has moved from Anderson avenue to the house formerly occupied by Charles Colvin on Maple street

Mr. Whitney, who recently purchased a farm of L. E. Rivard on Baptist Hill, has has been sick, but is now slowly recovering.

At the Union Evangelical church last Sunday Rev Charles Olmstead exchanged pulpits with Rev. H. S. Snyder of Gilbertville.

Thomas Wier has taken a position as foreman on the Central Vermont railroad at Montville, Ct, and has moved his family there.

Harold Strickland of Rochester, N Y., is the guest of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J Burlingame on Baptist Hill. Mr. Strickland is employed as a demonstrator for a Chicago scissors and shears firm.

At the Union Evangelical church Sunday the subject for the morning service will be, "The Law of Liberty." In the evening there will be a praise service illustrating the story of the Prodigal Son.

The new steam heating outfit for the Union church has arrived and is being put in position Work on the new addition has been progressing rapidly and it is expected that the work will be completed within a few weeks.

The French fair, which lasted ten days and was held in the town hall, closed Monday night, and the following prizes were awarded: Silver service, J. Jeho; necklace, Lila Morin; silver coffee pot, A. Gervais; silver fruit dish, Della Roberts. The fair was successful in every way and about $1600 was cleared.

Robert Sherlock Blair, who is employed as boss of the section of Central Vermont railroad between Three Rivers and Amherst, received a telegram Tuesday afternoon warning him that there were crooks in town and to watch the Central Vermont station all night. On receiving the message Blair set about to warn the inhabitants of the place that they had better hide their valuables and lock their doors, and Tuesday evening witnessed much excitement on the usually quiet streets of Three Rivers. Two harmless book agents happened to arrive in town on that day, and they were promptly set down as suspicious characters and were kept under surveillance until they left. Toward evening Blair, who has achieved some notoriety recently for having apprehended young boys stealing prunes in the freight house, took it upon himself to guard the C. V. station, and procuring an old muzzleloader and borrowing a shot-gun he sat on the depot steps until the short hours of the morning, when it is alleged that he went to sleep while on guard After all the excitement, Wednesday morning found the station, the stores and the post office in their customary places

BONDSVILLE.

Runaway Accident.

What might have been a serious accident occurred Tuesday afternoon, when R L. Bond's driving horse ran away, throwing out the occupants of the carriage and smashing the shafts and one of the wheels of the carriage. The horse was being driven by Miss Laura Bond, accompanied by Miss Alice Banister. When on one of the South Belchertown roads near "Skeeterville," the horse became unmanageable and started to run. Miss Bond and Miss Banister were both thrown out but fortunately escaped without injury with the exception of a few scratches which Miss Bond received from the bushes among which she was thrown. The horse was stopped by Mr Kennedy, who brought the girls home in his team

C. D. Holden spent Tuesday in Boston on a business trip.

Miss Grace Hyatt will spend Sunday visiting friends in Worcester.

Mrs. Allen Hall has returned from a few days' visit with friends in Bridgeport, Ct.

Miss Murphy of Holyoke spent the first of the week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Shea.

Mr. and Mrs. Rowland McFarlane will spend Saturday and Sunday visiting relatives in Springfield.

Miss Marion Bartlett of Belchertown visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Morse the latter part of last week.

Presiding Elder Rev. Mr. Richardson of the Springfield district occupied the pulpit of the M. E. church last Sunday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Holden are spending a few days as guests of Mr. Holden's brother, John Holden, in Bennington, Vt.

Mrs E. F. Dent of Springfield, formerly of this place, spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Elliott at Maplewood Farm.

Mr. O A Parent attended the meeting of the Farmers' Club held in West Brookfield Wednesday, going with Rev. and Mrs L. L. Beeman.

Miss Bertha M. Gove of Thorndike has been spending a few days at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Elliott before leaving for Toronto, where she intends making her home.

A case of diphtheria has been reported in the family of John Chesnelewics, who lives near Quarry Hill, and the house has been quarantined. One of his children has the disease.

Rev. and Mrs. L. L. Beeman attended a meeting of the Farmers' Club held in Grand Army hall in West Brookfield Wednesday. Rev. Mr. Beeman addressed the meeting and took for his subject, "Incentives for improving our homes."

Mrs Edward Fuller of Fuller's Corner, who went to the Springfield hospital in Springfield recently for an operation for appendicitis, is getting along nicely and it is expected that she will be able to leave the hospital this week. She will not come home at once but will go to her brother's home in Springfield.

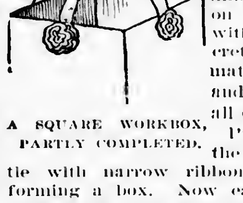
SQUARE WORKBOX.

An Odd Christmas Gift—How It Is Made.

A wonderfully clever way of manipulating cardboard is seen in a workbasket, though the process is extremely simple. If you can find a box about ten inches square and four deep, all well and good; if not, you must make the flat square for the bottom and the four sides to fit it. In the case of the box, open the corners and lay the whole thing flat. Cover on both sides with art denim, cretonne or any material on hand, and neatly bind all edges. Punch holes in the corners and tie with narrow ribbon, once more forming a box. Now each corner is marked off with pieces of cardboard cut to fit, creating four little receptacles. The basket is thus square as to shape on the outside and octagon in form inside. A pincushion is sewed on between two of the corner pieces, and opposite it is a needlebook, two small bags occupying the same position on the two remaining sides. Lastly, three cornered covers are made to fit on the boxes in the corners. First covered with the material, holes are punched through one side, with corresponding holes on the cardboard crossing the corners.

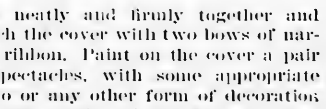


A SQUARE WORKBOX, PARTLY COMPLETED.

A SPECTACLE CASE.

Useful Christmas Gift and How It is Constructed.

To make an attractive spectacle case cut two pieces of stiff cardboard 7 by $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches, two 7 by $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches and two $1\frac{1}{2}$ by $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches. Lay over one side of each piece, that which will make the inner part of the box, a thick layer of perfumed wadding. Cover each carefully with heavy linen on the outside and india silk on the inside. Then overhand the bottom, the sides and the ends neatly and firmly together and attach the cover with two bows of narrow ribbon. Paint on the cover a pair of spectacles, with some appropriate motto or any other form of decoration you may prefer, if you are an expert with the brush. If not, embroider on the linen before covering the box some suitable design.



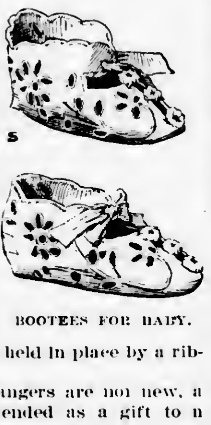
SPECTACLE CASE.

Old red, olive green, old blue and dull gold color all can be found in the agra linen, and any one will make a useful as well as an attractive box. For the young girls who are too busy to undertake elaborate gifts this simple but eminently serviceable trifle is peculiarly good. The work is only such as any one of them can do, and no more is entailed than it is wise that they should undertake.

FOR THE BABY.

Christmas Gifts That Will Please the Infant's Mother.

Gifts other than toys are sometimes difficult to find for the wee baby at Christmastide. The pretty bootees seen in the illustration are a novelty in this line. In shape they resemble the kid bootees, but these eyelet worked ones have no lining or foundation of any kind. They are buttonholed around the edge and held together at the toe by three buttonholed rings and at the ankle by two short straps, which are fastened and held in place by a ribbon bow.



BOOTEES FOR BABY.

Though coat hangers are not new, a dainty affair intended as a gift to a baby was a miniature holder, first padded with perfumed cotton, then with shirred white satin. The hook was covered with twisted ribbon, and at its base a bow of broad ribbon was tied, one end decorated with a spray of forgetmenots, and across the other "Baby" was worked in blue silk. Though a trifle, it is a gift that will bring much pleasure to the mother, as showing thoughtful kindness.

An attractive little present for a baby is made by wrapping a very small embroidery hoop with ribbon. Across the center form a wheel with quarter inch ribbon, and sew on these spokes tiny gilt sleighbells. These bells are also put at intervals around the hoop.

A Friendship Calendar.

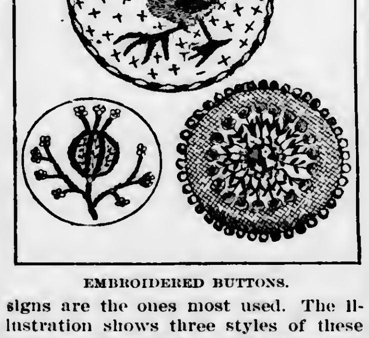
A friendship calendar at Christmas time was a source of much pleasure to an elderly lady living alone. Fifty-two of her friends, representing the fifty-two weeks of the year, furnished material for every day of the seven in his week.

Each one followed out his own idea for the week's calendar, contributing favorite quotations, short poems, anecdotes and reminiscences, some even adding cherished recipes. In many instances the contributions were original. Others were illustrated with small pictures cut from current magazines.

The result was a perpetual calendar, each day representing the loving thought of a friend.

Embroidered Buttons.

Smart shirt waists this winter are fastened with buttons made of the waist material worked in harmonizing shades of embroidery silks. Conventional designs are the ones most used. The illustration shows three styles of these buttons. In one a dainty spray of coral is the motif; another has a stiff floral arrangement radiating from a single flower in the center, while a third boasts a cross stitched effect as a background for a couple of saucy little chicks. A set of such buttons would make a pleasing Christmas gift.



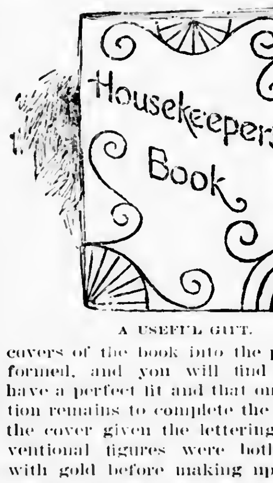
EMBROIDERED BUTTONS.

HOUSEKEEPERS' BOOKS.

Much Prized at Yuletide—How They Are Constructed.

Housekeepers' books are trifles which are ever in demand, but which often have little beyond their usefulness to win for them respect. The clever notion of making a handsome cover that can be slipped over each new set of blank leaves in turn at once removes them from the commonplace and makes of them Christmas gifts that any woman of taste might offer. The one given in the illustration is made of sage colored agra linen and is perhaps as good as any that can be devised. To copy it purchase the necessary blank book and both linen and linen canvas as required.

Cut two pieces of canvas each the exact size of one cover of the book. Then lay these down upon the linen in such a way as to leave sufficient space between for the hinge or the back of the book two inches above, two inches below and two or three inches beyond at each side, according to the size of the book. Make some smooth flour paste, and turn over and paste into the canvas the linen that projects both above and below. When that is quite dry cut a strip of lining silk half an inch larger all round than the linen, turn in the edges of each and baste the two neatly together. Slip stitch the edges firmly, then turn over into the silk the extra width beyond the stiffening and overhand the four ends together. Slip the covers of the book into the pockets so formed, and you will find that you have a perfect fit and that only decoration remains to complete the work. On the cover given the lettering and conventional figures were both couched with gold before making up, but any combination of color can be made or any other design either painted or embroidered with equally good results. Two ribbon loops, one at each edge of the cover, through which a pencil can be slipped, add a finishing touch and serve to keep the book closed as well as to keep the convenient pencil always at hand.

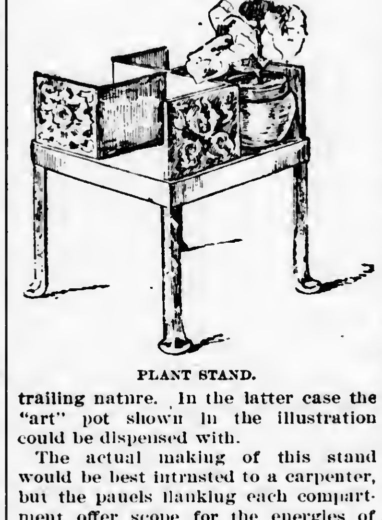


A USEFUL GIFT.

AN ORIGINAL OFFERING.

Christmas Gift For a Plant Lover and Housekeeper.

For a plant lover a plant stand is a very acceptable Christmas gift. In the accompanying sketch is an idea for a stand of a steady and substantial nature to hold four pots, or, prettier still one large pot pushed well back in each compartment, with two smaller ones in front containing some plant of a trailing nature. In the latter case the "art" pot shown in the illustration could be dispensed with.



PLANT STAND.

The actual making of this stand would be best intrusted to a carpenter, but the panels flanking each compartment offer scope for the energies of the home worker. Beaten copper, carving and poker work would be equally effective, and the rest of the stand should be stained mahogany. Before the compartments are fixed on it would be a good plan to get the platform part covered with a sheet of zinc. The result would be a durable and thoroughly useful little bit of furniture.

If the original frame, sent the day before Christmas, be filled with growing plants, the artistic value is enhanced.

Needlecase Ideas.

Needlecases are such stupid, old maidish affairs, as a rule, and yet such necessary things, that an idea invented the other day is well worth recording for the benefit of the Christmas present maker.

A piece of flowered ribbon was used, lined with fine white flannel, just like the pin cases with which every traveler is provided. The management of the needles is the unusual part. Every needle, and there were dozens of them, was threaded, stuck in and its thread neatly wound around it.

Most of the needles were threaded with white cotton and black silk, but almost every color was represented as well, and, the original one being for a girl who wore tan and red most of all, a goodly supply of those two colors was included.

Of course there was every sort of needle, from the tiniest of glove needles to shoe and darning needles, each threaded with its proper kind.

A Theory.

"Why don't sailors say 'right' and 'left' instead of starboard and larboard?"

"Oh, I don't know. I suppose they'd hate to make things too easy for landlubbers."

It is a fine thing to know when to let go. Many a man holds on too long. It is better to jump overboard than to go down with the sinking ship.

An Awful Jolt.

Cholly—Allow me, Miss—aw—Smith, to introduce you to my fiancee.

Miss Smith—Pleased to meet you, indeed. And does the same ring that he gave me fit you too?—Browning's Magazine.

HOSPITALS CROWDED

MAJORITY OF PATIENTS WOMEN

Mrs. Pinkham's Advice Saves Many From this Sad and Costly Experience.

Miss Luella Adams

It is a sad but true fact that every year brings an increase in the number of operations performed upon women in our hospitals. More than three-fourths of the patients lying on those snow white beds are women and girls who are awaiting or recovering from operations made necessary by neglect.

Every one of these patients had plenty of warning in that bearing down feeling, pain at the left or right of the womb, nervous exhaustion, pain in the small of the back, leucorrhœa, dizziness, flatulency, displacements of the womb or irregularities. All of these symptoms are indications of an unhealthy condition of the ovaries or womb, and if not heeded the trouble will make headway until the penalty has to be paid by a dangerous operation, and a lifetime of impaired usefulness at best, while in many cases the results are fatal.

The following letter should bring hope to suffering women Miss Luella Adams, of the Colonnade Hotel, Seattle, Wash., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"About two years ago I was a great sufferer from a severe female trouble, pains and headaches. The doctor prescribed for me and finally told me that I had a tumor on the womb and must undergo an operation if I wanted to get well. I felt that this was my death warrant, but I spent hundreds of dollars for medical help, but the tumor kept growing Fortunately I corresponded with an aunt in the New England States, and she advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it was said to cure tumors. I did so and immediately began to improve in health, and I was entirely cured, the tumor disappearing entirely, without an operation I wish every suffering woman would try this great preparation."

Just as surely as Miss Adams was cured of the troubles enumerated in her letter, just so surely will Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cure every woman in the land who suffers from womb troubles, inflammation of the ovaries, kidney troubles, nervous excitability and nervous prostration.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all young women who are ill to write her for free advice. Address, Lynn, Mass.

One Way to Win Sleep.

A writer in a medical journal suggests a new way of juggling with insomnia. His sleep inducer is a chain of magic words so associated in sound or meaning that each suggests the next subsequent—for instance: Ice, slippery; smooth, rough; ruffian, tramp, etc. When sleep is coy recite the list mentally. This is said to be a sure cure. It keeps the mind from rambling from subject to subject, as the mind tends to do in sleeplessness.

The Undesirable Simple Life.

Cheese and a cottage complicate life if your digestion is weak and your desire urban. So poverty is a less simple state than the possession of an income, because you are forced, if not into envy, the chief deficiency from simplicity, into struggle with unessential details, with the effort to get hold of something which is of no matter.—London Outlook.

H. A. Northrop Retires After 31 Years in Business.

SUCCEEDED BY PALMER ICE COMPANY

First Ice House Built 41 Years Ago. History of the Business In Palmer.

After 31 years as a dispenser of congealed sections of H_2O in Palmer H A. Northrop is now without an occupation so far as the ice business is concerned, that having passed into the hands of the Palmer Ice Company at the close of business two weeks ago. The company will continue the business along the lines of the past, using the same houses and sources of supply as Mr Northrop.

Herbert A. Northrop,
Now retiring after 31 years in the ice business.

The history of the ice business in Palmer is an interesting one. The first dealer was David Knox, who started in 1864 and built a small house on North Main street, on the site now occupied by the residence of E. G. Hastings. He continued until 1866, when he sold out to J. D. Blanchard and William A. Thompson, who built a larger house on the bank of the Blanchardville pond, now owned by Joseph Page, and Thompson continued to supply all customers until 1881, when he disposed of the business to Salem D. Weld, who continued it until the fall of 1874. During the season of 1874 there were only about 150 tons of ice stored by Wells, as it was cut on the coves above Bondsville and carried in.

In October, 1874, H. A. Northrop bought the business of Wells and continued it until the 18th of this month, or a little over 31 years. Mr. Northrop continued to use the house on North Main street used by Wells for three or four years until R. L. Goddard purchased the land on which it stood for a residence, when Mr. Northrop moved it to the yard in the rear of his residence on Central street, where it was continued in use for the storage of ice. The next year Mr Northrop built a larger house on the banks of the Graves ponds, now the reservoir of the Palmer Water Company, and discontinued the use of the house and pond at Tenneyville and the use of the Knox pond, from which he had previously secured a portion of his ice. The Graves pond was used for seven years and then Mr. Northrop built the pond on Park street, known as the "Cider Mill Pond," which has been used until the present time. In 1895 he built a modern house 50 by 60 feet on Thorndike street.

William A. Thompson,
Oldest living ice dealer in Palmer.

The first winter after Mr. Northrop entered the ice business he housed about 450 tons, and since that time has housed as much as 3000 tons in a season. During the winter of 1889-'90, there was no ice harvested in this locality, but Mr. Northrop cut about 800 tons of 23-inch ice on Lake Sunapee, N. H, and built a stack on the line of the C. V. railroad near the passenger station in which to store it He also bought at Rindge, N. H., and in Templeton, Mass Another dealer entered the field in 1889, Charles T. Brainerd, who continued until 1895, when he disposed of his business to Mr. Northrop. At the beginning of his ice business there was scarcely sufficient work for one man and one horse, but now during the warm weather three teams and half a dozen men are kept busy.

Residence of E. G. Hastings,

In this connection it is interesting to note that the only merchants now in busi-

EXPRESS ELECTRICS.

Were Put on the Palmer-Springfield Line Yesterday Afternoon.

The express electric cars which have been promised between Springfield and Ludlow on the Palmer-Springfield line, began running yesterday.

These cars leave Springfield at 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 in the afternoon They are started from Court Square, and make no stops to leave passengers between that point and Ludlow; they do, however, stop to take on passengers who wish to come to Ludlow or points this side. To accommodate the local travel an extra car is started seven minutes ahead of the express car, which arrives at Ludlow at the same time as the express, giving any who may wish an opportunity to change there from the local to the express without wait. This car then returns to Springfield behind the express into the city.

From Palmer the first express car leaves at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, then 2, 3, 4 and 5. After passing Ludlow these cars will not stop to take on passengers, but will stop to drop any who may wish to leave the car. The new arrangement lessens the running time from Palmer to Court Square by about seven minutes The scheme is giving good satisfaction so far, and will be fully appreciated by Eastern Hampden travelers during the holiday period.

WARREN MAN HURT.

Overturned Automobile on Steep Hill Falls On Him; One Rib Broken.

Bertram D Perkins, treasurer of the Perkins Machine Co. of Warren, met with a serious accident Tuesday afternoon while climbing up Pine street in Warren in his automobile. He was carrying home Mr. Kiser, whose little boy had fallen and cut his head. He had nearly reached the top of the steep hill when his engine refused to work, and the brakes also were insufficient to check the backward movement of the heavy 30-horse-power machine. He turned the machine sharp into the bank, but the sudden stop was too much, and the machine overturned and pinioned Mr. Perkins under it. Mr. Kiser jumped when the machine began to go backward, and thus escaped injuries. A number of persons ran to Mr: Perkins' rescue, and were able to tip the machine up sufficiently for him to crawl out. It is thought that he would have suffocated in a few minutes but for his timely rescue. He was carried to his home in an express wagon and medical aid summoned. It was found that he had only one rib on the left side broken, but he was badly bruised and suffered considerably from the rush of blood to his head.

Brimfield Electric Road Petition.

The railroad commissioners have received a petition from the Springfield and Eastern Street Railway Company for approval of the location granted it in the town of Brimfield, and one from the Hartford and Worcester company for approval of the location granted it in the same town, the latter being a change from one side of the road to the other. This change is in order to give the Springfield and Eastern a location in the town. One was granted, but it was over the same right of way previously granted the Hartford and Worcester company for about a quarter of a mile. Approval of this locaton under the existing conditions was refused, and a new hearing resulted in a new grant to the Hartford and Worcester company on the other side of the road, and now both companies petition for approval of their respective grants.

UNKNOWN MAN IS KILLED.

Found on Boston and Albany Tracks Near Palmer.

NOT SLIGHTEST CLEW TO IDENTITY.

One Leg Run Over and Scalp Wound on Head. Did Not Recover Consciousness.

The train from the west due in Palmer at 1 07 Monday afternoon, brought the body of a young man which was found beside the track about a mile and a half west of the village, a little beyond the Overlook farm Nothing is known of how he came there, but it is supposed that he fell from a freight train. The 12 45 from the west was about on time and he was not seen by the engineer of this train; a freight followed between that and the 1 07, which found the body, and it is supposed he fell from the freight.

At the station he was attended by the railroad company's physician, Dr. J. P. Schneider, who found that the right leg had been run over midway between the ankle and knee and was hanging only by a slight bit; there was also a severe scalp wound on the right side of the head, though the skull was apparently not fractured He was made as comfortable as possible and taken to the House of Mercy hospital in Springfield by Dr Hodgkins and one of the overseers of the poor on the first train, which should have gone at 2 31 but was late, and it was 4 before the hospital was reached. The man had lost considerable blood before being found and was in a terribly weakened condition, and although strenuous efforts were made to revive him he did not regain consciousness and died about 9 o'clock.

There was nothing about the man by which he could be identified He was apparently between 20 and 24 years of age, about 5 feet 5 inches in height, weight 135 pounds; medium dark complexion and brown hair recently cut; the face was smooth and there was little sign of beard growth; hazel eyes, Roman nose, badly discolored teeth; the hands were small, soft and white, and had evidently not been accustomed to manual labor; he was in good physical condition. The clothing consisted of a dark blue serge double-breasted sack coat, black and white check vest, red plaid black cheviot trousers. The pockets contained a meal card for the Salvation Army station at 886 Washington street, Boston, stamps on the back indicating that the holder had been there the 10th, 11th and 12th of this month; 15 cents in change, an empty leather purse, pocket mirror, comb, door key, matches, tobacco and cigaret paper. The body has not yet been identified.

A $30,000 BOND ISSUE

Is Petitioned For by the Palmer Water Company. Hearing the 11th.

The attention of Palmer citizens was attracted to an advertisement in Tuesday morning's Springfield Republican of a hearing to be held in Boston on the 11th on a petition of the Palmer Water Company for permission to issue $30,000 of 20-year bonds. Although such a matter would have a large interest for Palmer people, especially those in the village of Palmer, this was the first intimation which they had of the matter. The committee appointed by the town last spring to investigate the possible sources of a supply for the whole town has expected to be compelled to take over the plant of the Palmer Water Company and naturally has an interest in what it is proposed to do with the money. It is probable that both the prudential committee of the fire district and the town water committee will be represented at the hearing.

FOOTBALL.

Work and Wins 16, Palmer Juniors 0.

The Palmer Juniors were defeated in Ware by the Work and Win team last Saturday by a score of 16 to 0. The Ware team averaged 15 pounds to a man heavier than the Palmer team. The feature of the game was the flying tackle of Taylor of the Juniors, downing a man after he had gone sixty-five yards in a clear field. The line-up:

Death of Ludlow Man.

Isaac T. Hines, 73, died at his home in Ludlow Sunday after an illness with a complication of diseases. Mr. Hines went to Ludlow when 10 years old with his parents from West Chesser county, Pa. He was employed by the Ludlow Manufacturing Co. in various capacities. During the Civil War he enlisted and served in the 46th regiment. In politics he was a staunch Republican. He is survived by a widow, one son, Francis of Springfield, and one daughter, Mrs. James Patterson. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon at the residence, Rev. Claude A. Butterfield officiating.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The public schools closed Tuesday for the usual Thanksgiving recess, and will reopen Monday.

Frank Tupper of Worcester and Homer Tupper of Warren were guests of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Tupper over Sunday.

Patrick A. Fitzgerald was removed to the House of Mercy hospital in Springfield Monday, when he underwent an operation for appendicitis Tuesday. He is reported to be doing well.

CAUSES FOR THANKSGIVING.

Sermon by Rev. W. A. Moore at Union Service Wednesday Evening.

The union Thanksgiving service was held Wednesday evening in the Baptist church, Rev. W A. Moore of St. Paul's Universalist church preaching the sermon. There was music by a chorus choir from the several churches. On account of the hard rain just at church time the attendance was small. Mr. Moore's subject was "Real Causes for Thanksgiving Found in Unexpected Places," and his text was

> "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness."
> Matt. 6: 23.

As a boy, I used to think of the people in China as standing on their heads, or as hanging to the earth by their feet, as flies walk on a ceiling. When I became a man I learned that the Chinese are fastened to the earth just as we are in America; but that they actually do perform most things upside down from our point of view. They are at the physical antipodes from us in nearly all things visible.

I sometimes think that God, looking down from heaven upon His earth finds things with us much as we do with the Chinese. From His divine view point, we must do many things upside down in moral and spiritual matters This is what Christ is teaching us in that part of the Sermon on the Mount from which we have our text. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth, but in heaven," He says. "No man can serve two masters" "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon"

He knew that men did not believe this, however. He knew they were strenuously laying up treasures on earth, and that they thought they could serve two masters,—even if these masters were God and Gold. And so He tries to make their condition more evident to them. "You know how it is with physical vision," He says. "If the eye is healthy, through it the body is illuminated; if it is diseased, the body is dark It is just this way in matters of mind and heart There may be spiritual light or darkness here. You may see things as God sees them or just the reverse. If the reverse, i. e. if the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness."

We shall not claim to know just how great that darkness may be, but we may indicate two stages of it. (1) In the tenth book of the Odyssey, we see the followers of Ulysses in the power of the sorceress, Circe. We read, "When she had given them the cup and they had drunk it off, presently she smote them with a wand and in the styes of the swine she penned them. So they had the head and the voice, the bristles and the shape of swine, but their mind abode even as of old. Thus they were penned there weeping." This is one stage of darkness In this men are in sin and do not like it. They walk in evil ways, and they would not. They are bearing the sore consequences of sin—their sin or their parents'—and are in sorrow and weakness because of their fettered conditions. All of us are more or less in this condition, in the state of partial darkness.

(2) John Milton took up this old Homeric tale of Circe and improved upon it in his "Comus." Comus was the son of Circe and Bacchus, (god of wine and revellings); and his enchantment was far worse than his mother's. Milton thus describes it:

"Soon as the potion works, their human count'nance,
The express resemblance of the gods, is changed
Into some brutish form of wolf or bear,
Or ounce or tiger, hog or bearded goat,
All other parts remaining as they were.
And they, so perfect is their misery,
Not once perceive their foul disfigurement,
But boast themselves more comely than before,
And all their friends and native home forget,
To roll with pleasure in a sensual sty."

This is the darkness that touches mind and heart. There is no weeping here, no sorrow. Contentment is found in sinning; pleasure in sensuality; joy in debauchery. This is the worst condition of man: to be in sin and like it and wish to remain in it. This is the state when the light within is turned to blackest night. It is the state of the sad reversal of God's law which we sometimes find in our land.

I. A touch of realism. I am going to illustrate by a bit of realism. Some time ago three curious reversals suggested themselves to me. The curiousness was in the literary form. The fact which the form expressed was not so curious to contemplate.

(1) On one silver dollar, we read these words: "In God we trust." Has this become satire in these days? As we look at this coin, are we not conscious of an incongruity? Finding the words so incongruously placed, we reverse them and get at the real fact, viz: In trusts is our God. It has been an age of combinations and consolidations and enormous trust combines that will mark an interesting epoch in commercial history. For many, however, the epoch is not so interesting. In the changing conditions, many lives have been crushed out, and great injustice has been done. It may be that we are progressing in the line of great economies, and that the end of it all will be well. The genius of these great organizers may be turned to account in the near future by the government which is "Of the people, by the people, and for the people." But we are not here to prophesy.

The danger is in the fact that men are forgetting God and his worship in the mad rush for enormous fortunes. "If a man love God, he must love his brother also," St John tells us. So, if a man politely but firmly throttles his brother; if he steals from his brother; if he antagonizes and hates his brother, he cannot love God. Thus it will be seen why a man cannot serve both God and gold; and in what sense it is a lie when our dollars say on the face of them, "In God we trust."

Some say this is progress, in the onward march of an enlightened civilization. It may be, with selfishness and greed left out. It may be, when these things are for the benefit of man instead of a particular man. Garrett Smith, in the New York Tribune, paints a humorous and vivid picture of this sort of progress for us.

"When we get Niagara harnessed
  And her useless cliffs and crags
Have been dried to feed the yearnings
  Of our yawning money bags,
What a joy will thrill our bosoms,
  All romantic nonsense drowned,
As we hear her torrents thunder
  Through the wheelpit under ground!

Then we'll blast away Goat Island,
  Turn it into building blocks.
Put a turbine in the whirlpool,
  Build shot towers down the rocks.
How we'll pity our poor forbears
  Prating of esthetic taste,
While allowing, thoughtless fellows,
  All these kilowatts to waste!

Forward, Spirit of Progression,
  Nature's still a giddy shirk!
Tear away her fancy togglings,
  Get her into trim for work;
Turn the Adirondack forest
  Into neat and useful planks;
Straighten out the crooked Hudson,
  Line with piers her grassy banks.

Crush the Dunderberg for pavements,
  Make the Palisades cement.
Fill the Catskills up with signboards,
  Lots of good rock space to rent.
Rip the Redwoods into shingles;
  Sow the Yellowstone to wheat;
Turn the geysers into laundries,
  And the bear and deer to meat.

What are mere esthetic fancies,
  Hill or vale, or wood or vine,
To the graceful curves and meaning
  Of the pleasing dollar sign?"

PALMER NEWS.

BOWLERS WIN TURKEYS.

Lawton Winning Has Score at Candlepins; Frame Makes Alley Record.

There was a great contest for the two turkeys, offered by Manager Tufts, to the bowlers who would roll the highest total scores of bottle and candlepins.

The turkey for the highest score of candlepins was won by Charles Lawton, but not without opposition, for he was tied by Mr. Hart at 286 pins, which was a higher score than was made by Mr. Lawton at the roll off, at which Lawton won by the score of 258 to 246.

There was no less rivalry in the contest for the turkey offered for the highest total of three strings of bottlepins. In the early part of the contest it was thought by many that either Mr. Upham or Mr. Story, both of Three Rivers, would win the prize, for they were tied at 604 pins, but the same night that Mr. Story tied Mr. Upham, Thomas D. Frame, also of Three Rivers, beat both of them and won the turkey by the score of 630 Mr. Frame's score by strings was 202, 171 and 257, this last string being the highest total ever rolled upon the alleys.

So much interest was displayed in the contest that Manager Tufts has decided to offer two more turkeys under the same conditions for Christmas.

Trolley Car Collides With Team.

Car No. 2, in charge of Motorman Kirk and Conductor Mansfield, on its way to Monson, collided with C. M. Foley's milk wagon yesterday morning about 9.30 in front of the watering tub on Main street. The wagon was in charge of Frank Foley, 10 years of age, and was headed in the same direction which the car was going. It had stopped at the watering tub and on leaving it the boy turned the horse across the track directly in front of the car, which struck the wagon about the center and pushed it along for several feet, smashing it considerably. The boy was not hurt.

They will live in Palmer, where both were born and have always lived.

Engine 3949, drawing the 1 58 p. m. train west on the B. and A. road, blew out a cylinder-head at Blanchardville Monday afternoon and was an hour and ten minutes late leaving Palmer in consequence. The damage was so great that the locomotive was unable to move under its own steam, and was obliged to wait until Camp's train—the 2 31—came along and pushed it into Palmer, where a locomotive was secured from the Ware River branch for the trip to Springfield.

APPARENTLY Boston's next mayor will be ex-Congressman Fitzgerald, now that Judge Dewey is to run as an independent candidate. But then, this has been a remarkable year for the election of officials pledged to the best of everything in the line of good government and a square deal all around, and it may be that Mr. Frothingham will manage to pull through; it is to be hoped that he will.

So Westfield is to be a city. There always comes a time when a youngster considers that he has outgrown knickerbockers and must put on long trousers Later, sometimes, he'd be glad to return to first principles and its attendant care-free conditions. But here's hoping better things for the new Western Hampden city-to-be.

Warrants have been posted for a special town meeting December 8 in the town house at 1.40 p. m. The meeting is called for the purpose of enlarging the scope of the selectmen's authority, thus enabling them to test the quantity and quality of the artesian well on the Walker place, West View, as a water supply for the village.

LUDLOW.

Pleasant Surprise Visit.

A large party of the friends and neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Jones made them a suprise visit Friday evening, the occasion being the 25th anniversary of their wedding. Mr. and Mrs. Jones were invited to spend the evening at Mrs. A. T. Clark's, one of their neighbors, but were sent for early in the evening and on their return found that their friends to the number of 85 had taken possession of their home. Mr. Jones was born on the farm where he lives and Mrs. Jones was also born in Ludlow. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have always been active in church and social matters and were among the first to join the grange. Mr. Jones is serving his eighth year on the board of assessors. Long, entertaining letters were read from Rev. M P. Dickey of Milton, N. H., and Rev. E D. Francis of Springfield, former pastors. An elegant quartered oak dining table, an easy chair, a number of silver articles and a purse of money were left by the visitors as a reminder of their visit.

John Perham, son of Postmaster Perham, is very ill with lung fever.

The project for a free rural mail delivery among the farmers along the road to West Brimfield is being talked over, and a petition which has been circulated among the people who live on or near the proposed route now bears 57 names and it is thought that the 18 more can be found before the layout of the route is complete. This project was first started by the late John W Lawrence in the fall of 1903, but was dropped in December of the same year on account of the death of Mr Lawrence. The chief promotor this time is Henry J. Adams, a neighbor of Mr. Lawrence's and who was interested in the movement with Mr. Lawrence.

WARE.

A Narrow Escape.

There was a small blaze in the brick house occupied by Mrs. Annie Murphy and by Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Sullivan on West Main street Friday night. The Sullivans live in the upper tenement, and Mrs. Sullivan, who is advanced in years and rather feeble, had retired for the night, when in some way a kerosene lamp standing near the door of the room, fell to the floor, setting fire to the carpet and clothing hanging on the walls of that and an adjoining room Mrs. Sullivan was able to get up out of bed, but could not leave the room. A man living in the basement, who heard in some way of Mrs Sullivan's danger, notified Chief of Police Maurice Fitzgerald, who went to the house and after carrying Mrs. Sullivan out, put out the fire with a quilt. The damage done was slight.

Feehan—Ward.

Elizabeth G Feehan, daughter of Mr and Mrs. Philip Feehan of West Pleasant street, and James M. Ward of Rockville, Ct., were married in All Saints' church Tuesday morning by Rev. J. A Riordan. Miss May Williams of Hartford was bridesmaid and Thomas F. Ward of Springfield was best man. The bride wore white silk and carried white chrysanthemums, while the bridesmaid was attired in blue silk and carried pink chrysanthemums. A reception was held at the bride's home after the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs Ward left in the afternoon for a trip to Boston, on their return from which they will reside in Rockville. They were the recipients of a large number of valuable presents.

What the

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Has Done and is Doing

The National Biscuit Company has brought the science of baking close to the point of perfection, practically revolutionizing the baking of biscuit, crackers and wafers.

It makes them better than they have ever been made before; it keeps them fresh in moisture proof packages, as they have never been kept before, and all this goodness it guarantees by placing a trade mark in red and white on each end of the package, so that even the toddler peeping eagerly over the counter's edge, may buy as safely as the thoughtful housewife.

If every woman in the land could actually know the high quality, the never-ending care, the infinite skill, the absolute cleanliness that is represented by every package bearing this trade mark of the National Biscuit Company, it is certain that there never would be another biscuit, cracker or wafer sold in a common paper bag.

IN ER SEAL

That this happy consummation may come to pass, the National Biscuit Company will invite the ladies of this city to join them in pleasant entertainment and thus become acquainted in a really delightful way with the most delicious baking in the world.

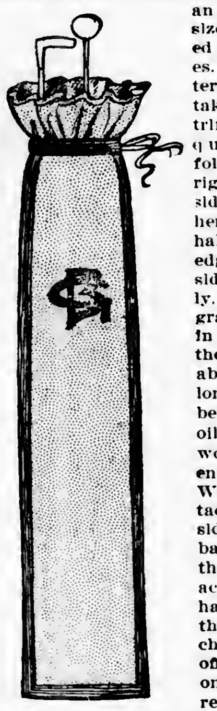
Homemade Christmas Presents

Umbrella Bag, Sponge Bag and Thermometer Case

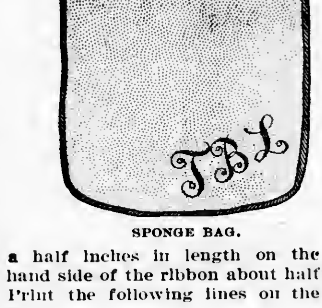
THERE are many people who are not able to buy expensive Christmas presents, and clever workers are always looking for new ideas. To make an umbrella bag take one and a quarter yards of holland or linen thirty-six inches wide and four and a half yards of braid to match an inch wide—size when finished 38 by 9 inches. Cut the material in half; take one piece, trim both edges quite straight, fold in half with right side outside, turn down hem two and a half inches, raw edge on the outside; tack it firmly. Trace monogram or initials in the center of the bag in letters about four inches long. These can be either filled in oil color with a worked outline or entirely worked. When finished, tack braid to the sides and foot of bag, taking care the braid is exactly divided in half; stitch it on the sewing machine and finish off firmly. Hem one end of the remaining braid, and hem it on from the binding on the right hand side—where the strings will come out—hiding the raw edges, around to the other binding, thus making a runner for the draw string. Run one and a half yards of braid in as a string, hem the edges and add a loop to hang bag on the arm. Umbrellas and parasols become dirty when traveling if uncovered or merely rolled up. Tied in a bag they keep clean and are easily carried and not so liable to be lost.



UMBRELLA BAG.

For a sponge bag holland or linen, oil silk, silk binding and cord are required. Take one piece of material 14 by 18 inches, also a piece of green oil silk 12½ by 18, one and a half yards silk binding, two yards of silk cord. Work initials or monogram on the linen. Lay both materials together, the oil silk as lining, and tack on extreme edges. Turn down the holland one or one and a half inches on the inside to meet the oil silk. Hem it round. Hem a runner of binding on the outside to within one inch of sides, top edge of runner being the same height as the hem within. Bind on three sides with binding, and insert double runner of cord.

In constructing a thermometer case as a Christmas gift take a piece of pasteboard eight and a half inches long and five and three-quarters inches wide. Cover the pasteboard with one layer of sheet wadding. Bind the two sides with plush two and a half inches deep on the front and half an inch deep on the back. Paste the edges down. Between the two pieces of plush place a strip of cream white satin ribbon five inches wide, overlapping the edges of plush. Paste the two ends of ribbon over on to the back. Fasten a thermometer three and a half inches in length on the left hand side of the ribbon about halfway. Print the following lines on the ribbon:



SPONGE BAG.

A silver pulse in a crystal vase,
As it gently ebbs and flows,
It tells the way the north wind blows,
And times the bloom of the

At the bottom of the lines paint a rose, with leaves and a few fine grasses. Cover the back of case with white moire paper. Paste it round the edges. Suspend by a six inch gilt rod with a chain.

HANDY SEWING SCREEN.

How a Christmas Gift For Mother May Be Made.

The handy sewing screen shown in the accompanying illustration is one that would bring delight to mother, whose sewing materials always have a way of becoming misplaced through lack of a safe place for them. This little screen will be easily made at home by any one handy with hammer and nails or by a carpenter. It is painted to imitate cherry, oak or any wood desired, and the cretonne is cut out and fitted and tacked to the frame with small brass headed tacks. One side is made with divisions for holding various materials for mending. Above this is a narrow ledge or shelf where the spools of silk or cotton, needlebook, thimble case, etc., are to be kept. Small brass hooks are placed in the top of the frame for holding scissors, emery bag, etc. A hanging shelf is arranged on the other side, and above this are smaller pockets.

Catch Alls as Presents For the Housekeeper

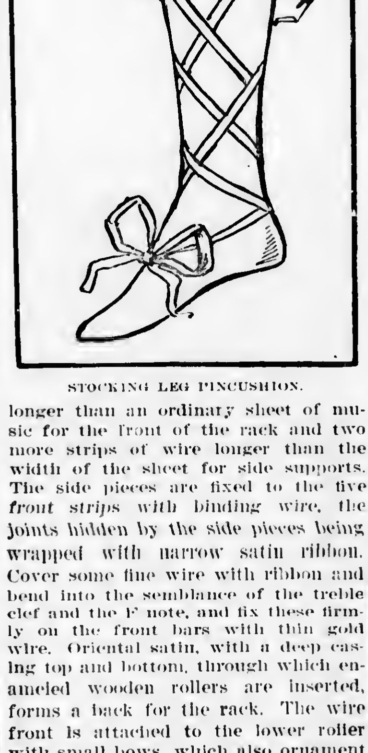
FOR the woman who never has a place for anything or anything in its place a catch all for holding different stray articles of apparel is an ideal present at Christmas time.

This useful device may be put up in such a dainty and attractive form that the ornamental value will appeal to the recipient as well as the usefulness of the gift.

A collar and cuff bag is the first on the list of time and temper saving receptacles. This useful little bag is made of half a yard of art ticking. In each corner of the square piece of ticking are run triangular shaped sections of cardboard. A small embroidery hoop covered with ribbon is fitted into a hole cut in the middle of the material. Bows are fastened to the four corners, which hang from the hoop. The trifle is finished when hung from a half yard ribbon loop.

For the musical member of the family a song rack in which she may keep the music immediately in use is most convenient. This song rack is quite a new wrinkle and a very simple thing to construct.

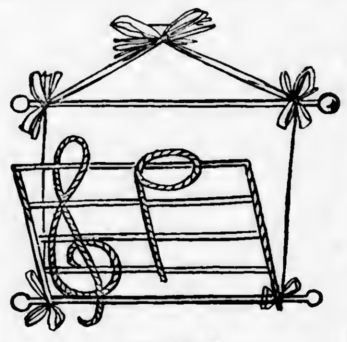
Get an expert to nip you off five pieces of rather thick gilt wire a little longer than an ordinary sheet of music for the front of the rack and two more strips of wire longer than the width of the sheet for side supports. The side pieces are fixed to the five front strips with binding wire, the joints hidden by the side pieces being wrapped with narrow satin ribbon. Cover some fine wire with ribbon and bend into the semblance of the treble clef and the F note, and fix these firmly on the front bars with thin gold wire. Oriental satin, with a deep casing top and bottom, through which enameled wooden rollers are inserted, forms a back for the rack. The wire front is attached to the lower roller with small bows, which also ornament the top roller at each end. The song rack hangs on the wall from a wide ribbon loop and is a dainty and useful affair.



STOCKING LEG PINCUSHION.

A cushion for stick and hat pins, which have a most provoking habit of losing themselves, is fashioned from a stocking leg. To make this variation of the pincushion shape a small leg as far as the knee out of some stout material and stuff it well with bran. After cutting the worn foot from a black silk stocking place it over the padded leg. Cross narrow yellow satin ribbon in trellis pattern up the stocking leg and finish off with a pretty bow and loop. The joint at the top where the stocking stops is hidden by a frill of orange and black spangled chiffon. The pincushion hangs from a loop at the back.

The turnover collars we all wear lose their chic and freshness if tumbled around in any kind of fashion. A neat and inexpensive case particularly useful to carry the neck pieces in when traveling is made of heavy crash. White is the wisest choice, as this color launders best. Cut a piece of crash a foot wide and eleven inches deep. At the top make a flap the shape of a turnover collar with a dip in front. At the ends hollow out little rounded pieces, which serve to hold the collars in place. Turn up the lower part of the case to the required depth and bind all around with wide linen tape. When finished starch stiff and iron until perfectly dry.



SONG RACK.

A New Tablecloth.

The latest in homemade Christmas gifts is the "autograph" tablecloth, and this is nothing more or less than the autographs of one's dearest friends written by them in pencil on a fine linen afternoon teacloth and embroidered in outline with different colored silks, the monotony of the autographs being varied by an occasional spray of flowers.

This device is a quaint record of one's friends and at present exceedingly fashionable. Some people go in for the autographs of celebrities of the drama or literature, but this fad occasions a good deal of trouble, as the autographs of celebrities are more or less difficult to obtain.

Whisk Holders.

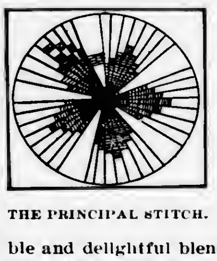
Ordinary butchers' cuffs can be converted into attractive hair receivers or whisk holders, which are useful Christmas presents. To make the former cut a piece of cardboard to fit the bottom. Then make a ruffle of silk in a shade to harmonize with the color of the room. Sew around the top and bottom with a strap of the silk tucked on either side for a hanging. A large bow arranged in the center of a receiver adds to its attractiveness. The whisk holders are made in a similar manner, omitting the cardboard.

Novel and Beautiful Presents

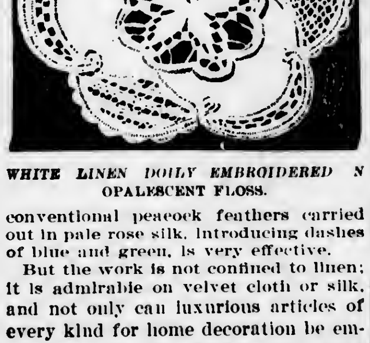
Pinto Tagliato Embroidery For Christmas Gifts

PINTO tagliato embroidery is a new and beautiful idea in the needlework world which lends itself perfectly to the fashioning of lovely Christmas presents.

Any number of useful and dainty gifts may be made with this embroidery, including table covers, doilies, cushion covers and dress trimmings. A few remarks as to the work itself may be useful. First, the fancy stitches are taken on the material itself, the ground being cut away from the back of the stitches, leaving a filling of openwork lace designs on a solid foundation. The stitches are made with silk, and when the article is completed it does not resemble lace, drawn thread work or embroidery, but is an indescribable and delightful blending of all three, possessing a distinct individuality of its own. Every part of the design can be carried out in a different stitch. There are about 200 suitable ones, and after a little practice it is quite easy to invent stitches of one's own. This not only relieves the work of all monotony, but offers at the same time unlimited scope to the worker. Regarding the materials, a coarse, hand woven linen of a creamy tint worked in white floss silk is exceedingly dainty, while on pure white linen opalescent shaded silk is perfectly lovely. This opalescent silk combines all the delicate tints of mother-of-pearl in one thread, and the result is very fascinating. Colored linens with floss of the same shade are lovely. For instance, a yellow linen table cover worked in yellow floss, or a light green scarf worked in the same shade of green, or a pale old rose table center with border of conventional peacock feathers carried out in pale rose silk, introducing dashes of blue and green, is very effective.



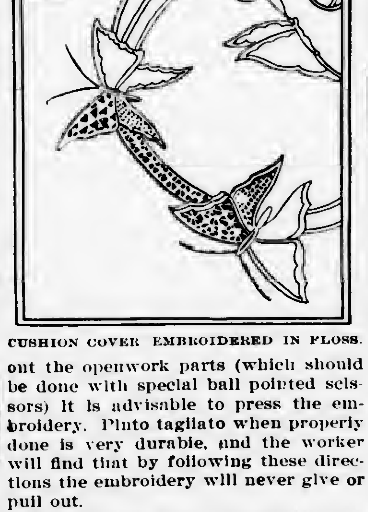
THE PRINCIPAL STITCH.



WHITE LINEN DOILY EMBROIDERED N OPALESCENT FLOSS.

But the work is not confined to linen; it is admirable on velvet cloth or silk, and not only can luxurious articles of every kind for home decoration be embroidered by the worker, but pinto tagliato embroidery is simply exquisite when applied to dress trimmings. Blouses, collars, cuffs, tailor made gowns, evening gowns, can be beautified to any extent, according to the time and work spent on them, and the wearer will have the satisfaction of knowing that such trimmings can never become cheap and common and as a present will be doubly prized.

To make the embroidery it is advisable to have two needles, a sharp pointed and a blunt one. The latter should be used whenever possible, threading the silk from one to the other as required. Again, the stitches which connect the material should be taken one-eighth of an inch beyond the tracing line. The buttonhole edge, round portions of design cut away, must have the purled edge on the inner side. This buttonhole should be very firm and close, and knots must not be used in any part of the work. Before cutting out the openwork parts (which should be done with special ball pointed scissors) it is advisable to press the embroidery. Pinto tagliato when properly done is very durable, and the worker will find that by following these directions the embroidery will never give or pull out.



CUSHION COVER EMBROIDERED IN FLOSS.

A useful and pretty Christmas present is a dainty afternoon teacloth made out of four hemstitched handkerchiefs joined together with insertion and edged with lace to match. This can be made for a very moderate sum.

Gift For Grandpa.

To make a Christmas present for grandpa cut a piece of writing paper in the form of a heart and from this pattern make two hearts of soft, smooth chamois; bind each with narrow lavender ribbon and on one heart draw a pair of eyeglasses with a fine pen and ink, after first sketching them in pencil. Overhand the two hearts together, forming a bag with the opening at the top of the hearts. Finish by ornamenting the point at the bottom with a bow of narrow lavender ribbon. This makes a pretty and useful little eyeglass cleaner, as the chamois is excellent for rubbing the glasses free from all dust.

Brush Holders.

Brush holders worked in old fashioned cross stitch on honeycomb canvas are new and striking Christmas gifts. The double ones are especially nice as holders for a man's military brushes. The canvas used is either gray or yellow in tone, the stitchery being in bright colored yarns.

A Hatpin Holder.

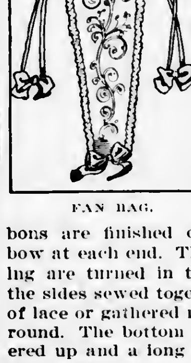
A splendid idea for a hatpin holder for Christmas is to double a half yard of two inch wide ribbon so that it is a quarter of a yard in length. Stitch the two edges together and fill the sack thus made with bran.

TO MAKE A FAN BAG.

Pretty Christmas Gift That Will Please a Girl.

For those who often go to theaters and parties a fan bag is indispensable and makes a most acceptable present. It can be made as dainty as possible in satin, either embroidered or painted. Some girls may like to have the bag match their gowns, which is a charming, but, alas, an expensive fancy, one not always easy to carry out in a Christmas gift. Black satin is a good material for theater fan bags and forms the background for much elaboration.

Two sides of the fan bag are cut in satin alike as to size, the silk lining also corresponding. The width of the bag is six inches at the top and three at the end. Of course the length varies a little, according to the size of the fan. A good average length, however, is fourteen inches, two inches forming the heading. A piece of ribbon is stitched a little below the edge, into which are run the ribbons by which the bag is held. The ribbons are finished off with a rosette bow at each end. The edges of the lining are turned in to face each other, the sides sewed together and an edging of lace or gathered ribbon sewed on all round. The bottom of the bag is gathered up and a long looped bow of ribbon sewed on.



FAN BAG.

A pretty idea is to embroider the monogram of the recipient on one side of the bag, leaving the other to be decorated with a long trailing design.

One fan bag in white satin which was a wedding gift suggested use when the bridal gown became a ball dress. The design was a spray of myrtle with half opened buds and flowers. A twisted ribbon confined three plumes which were outlined in Japanese gold thread and the softer parts worked in filoselle. The ribbons on the bag repeated the myrtle green in the bows, and the long ribbons were white satin. It was an extremely dainty affair. Another dainty bag is of black satin covered with gorgeous hued butterflies. Half a yard of satin or silk will make a bag, while three yards of ribbon are required, two lengths of six inches each being necessary for running the draw strings in. The amount of material is not large, and in these days of lovely remnants a small sum will suffice to make a really exquisite bag.

When Lincoln Had Few Friends.

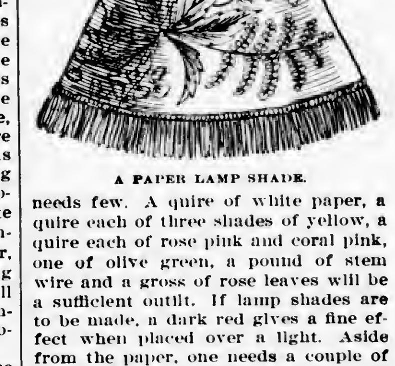
In 1864 Lincoln was of all men the least commended by the Republicans in congress. On one occasion an editor visiting Washington asked Senator Thaddeus Stevens to introduce him to some members of congress who were favorable to Lincoln's re-election. Stevens led him to the desk of Mr. Arnold of Illinois. "There," said he, "is the only Lincoln member of congress that I know!" Stevens himself regarded Lincoln as incompetent and weak. Henry Wilson (afterward vice president) spoke of him as politically a failure. Greeley had a low opinion of his ability. His personal friends, such as Washburn, Raymond and Thurlow Weed, believed his re-election an impossibility. Even Lincoln himself at one time doubted it.—H. T. Peck in Bookman.

DAINTY PAPER GIFTS.

They Are Inexpensive and Acceptable—Pretty Lamp Shade.

At this season of the year the making of Christmas presents takes up much of every woman's time and thought. To the perplexed individual here is a suggestion. Nothing is less expensive than paper, and out of it may be fashioned many dainty gifts. Lamp shades are always acceptable and are easily made in spite of the apparent difficulty. Dainty paper flowers for use on handkerchief cases, glove boxes, candy boxes and the like help to make inexpensive presents very charming. The ease with which they may be made is as astonishing as the perfection to which they may be brought after a little practice.

Every conceivable color is represented in flower papers, but the beginner needs few. A quire of white paper, a quire each of three shades of yellow, a quire each of rose pink and coral pink, one of olive green, a pound of stem wire and a gross of rose leaves will be a sufficient outfit. If lamp shades are to be made, a dark red gives a fine effect when placed over a light. Aside from the paper, one needs a couple of spools of coarse linen thread, a pot of white paste, a little cotton batting, a dull knife and a small cushion nearly filled with bran. This last is to curl chrysanthemums on.



A PAPER LAMP SHADE.

Later on a few rose centers, some calyxes and culots for the carnations and rubber tubing for covering rose stems may be indulged in. One can even find thorns ready to glue along the stems. Pond lilies have special stamens and pistils, and poppies have a natural seed cup and made pistils.

One thing may be mentioned as being a great addition to any scheme of decoration, and that is to purchase a good sized bunch of maidenhair fern and dip it into a kettle of hot water where an ounce of beeswax has been melted, lifting it out slowly. This coats it and preserves it indefinitely. A spray of this with any kind of flower adds greatly to its delicate beauty.

To make a lamp or candle shade dry green colored leaves and ferns between blotting paper, pressing heavily. Take a plain candle shade, trace its shape on butter paper, allowing turnings, and cut out roughly. Arrange the leaves prettily within the pencil lines, stick with transparent gum, place a plain piece of paper on the top and press till dry. Cut out and join carefully. Edge with green or white fringe.

Chorly's Thanksgiving Day

... By ...

ROBERT C. V. MEYERS

Copyright, 1901, by Robert C. V. Meyers

WHEN Chorly opened his eyes that early dawn his first thought was of Gravesend. Considering the fact that since the suspension of his firm he had lived off his savings and the lending qualities of his friends till both were exhausted, and his new employment not yet entered upon, it would have been more plausible had he thought of ways and means. Ronald, the dresser at the theater, who had the adjoining room, said that the stage, sir, had no such little brother of the rich as Mr. John Chorly these days, and Ronald ought to know.

Emmeline, the typist down on the first floor, considered the speech in the light of an aspersion on the title of the Little Sisters of the Poor, to whose hospital she had been taken that time she was run over. But, then, Emmeline was so literal. There was not on the stage, sir, declared Ronald, an honester little piece of sprigged dimity nor one with less sense of humor than Miss Emmeline Davis, and Ronald ought to know. Yet Emmeline was imaginative, for she told Chorly, who sat with her a good deal the first week after she came from the hospital till Gravesend's coming in made him keep away, that she had grown rather wakeful, and often of early mornings she would think of the country, where she had lived till her parents died and she had come to the city, where it is easier to earn your living. Said Emmeline: "It is peaceful before the humans begin their daily noises. Some one has a rooster in a cellar near by. He starts in crowing about naught o'clock in the morning, and you can imagine the farm and the coops. Then a little later, as the light breaks, the sparrows take it up, and you think of the green hedges, with robins in them. Then far off you hear a wagon, and you think of the farmers driving along the roads among the sweet scents on the way to haymaking. After that the house wakes up, and it is all over."

This morning Chorly was cognizant of the rooster, and he was glad tomorrow would be Thanksgiving day, with that identical bird possibly silenced forever. He heard the first milk wagon, a little heavier than usual from the extra quantity of one of the ingredients for tomorrow's pumpkin pies. He rose in wrath. "Emmeline's a fool," he said. Gravesend was also a fool—Captain Gravesend—who had the room across the hall, who had picked Emmeline up from under the horses' feet and carried her to the hospital and was waging war against the accident insurance company for resisting payment of the policy on the plea of contributory negligence.

Captain Gravesend was English, quite as young as Chorly, and had come to the house only a few days prior to the accident, almost shabby looking, but with "style," as Emmeline called it. She it was who bestowed upon him the title of "captain." She said he had a military air.

And Emmeline cared for him. Chorly leaped from bed and emptied the water jug over his head as though he would put out a conflagration. Then he paused irresolutely.

He had the whole day before him, for not till next week should he go to the costumer's where Ronald had got him a temporary position.

"A pretty Thanksgiving for me!" he said. "She in love with that fellow!"

Should he tell Emmeline about the veiled lady in black who had waylaid the captain yesterday as he left the house and thrown her arms around him in the open street? Why, the captain even, when he had extricated himself from her embrace, had gone along beside her with a sheepish manner and had not shown up again all day. Chorly heard him come in late at night, and he could imagine Emmeline having waited to see him early in the evening and seeing him not, for the captain had recently taken on a habit of stopping at her door every evening. Chorly had seen him as he went down sitting beside her in her doorway, her crutches propped up against the wall, and he had noted how bright her eyes were at such times. "There was not such a pair of eyes, sir, on the stage as Miss Emmeline Davis," Ronald had asseverated more than once, and Ronald ought to know.

And maybe Emmeline's eyes were dull this morning through waiting for the captain, who had failed to put in an appearance.

You might have thought that Chorly's morning coffee was some decoction of instantaneous effect administered to savage warriors on the eve of battle, so furious against the captain did he grow as he drank it. Gravesend was a scoundrel who had ruthlessly bid for Emmeline's sympathies, for had she not his history down line—how he had been at college, where a racing debt had turned his father against him, and he had drifted over here and lived off his rings, a remaining sparkler still illuminating one of his fingers?

Emmeline believed every word of the story. Chorly believed none of it. He believed that Gravesend—let him no longer call him "captain" simply because Emmeline did—was in hiding in America maybe because of the theft of these very rings. He could not have given a reason for believing thus, for he did not dislike the fellow. In fact, he was attracted by his free, masterful ways and, more than all, by his physical strength, for Gravesend thought no more of carrying Emmeline to the hospital that time than if she had been a mere baby.

Hush! There he was outside!

Chorly opened his door a crack and saw the object of his thought crossing the hall. Gravesend heard the creak of the door and turned that way, and Chorly, perceiving a troubled look in his eyes, hated him with a strong hatred. He believed that Emmeline was on the fellow's mind.

"Mornin', old man," sang out Gravesend. "I fancy you've been as light a sleeper as I. I hope not from the same cause."

Chorly knew it was from the same cause, for Emmeline was on the mind of each of them.

Gravesend stood outside the door and was not asked in.

"I ought to tell you," he went on, "that I leave you tonight. In fact, I am going home." The troubled expression of his eyes was intensified. "That is, I came to that conclusion exactly five minutes ago."

Chorly's thoughts being occupied by Emmeline, his reply was tentative.

"Lady in the case?" he asked.

Gravesend laughed grimly.

"Cherchez la femme," he said. "Yes, that's it. A lady in the case."

Chorly waited.

"Chorly," Gravesend proceeded more soberly, "you've been no end of a good friend to me. I haven't forgotten the time I had that beastly attack of pneumonia and how faithfully you nursed me."

Chorly shook his head impatiently. What did he care for such trifles? Though Ronald had said at the time that the stage, sir, had no such situation as the one he had chanced upon in calling on Chorly and seeing him pounding Gravesend on the back to relieve his sufferings, and Ronald ought to know.

"Lady near here?" he asked.

As before, Gravesend looked at him, and then he answered, half smiling: "Here! Well, yes. Here till this evening."

Chorly's heart seemed to stop beating.

"The truth is," Gravesend burst out, "I've been down on my luck, but some things have cleared up for me. I've had a think all night, and I've made up my mind. I leave tonight. I'll see you again." And he marched off.

Chorly stood in the doorway. He listened to Gravesend going down the stairs. He heard him tap on Emmeline's door, heard the door open and close and then silence. He went in his room and sat down. Emmeline was going to marry Gravesend and go away with him. And all the time there was that other one, the veiled lady.

He tried to rid himself of a stupor that suddenly took possession of him.

Thus Gravesend found him an hour later, and it is doubtful if Chorly had so much as moved a finger in that time. Gravesend pulled from his hand the last of his rings.

"I wish," he said in a tone of command, "you would take this thing and realize on it. You did something of the kind when I was ill, you know."

Chorly rose robustly, but Gravesend came quite close to him, noticing nothing.

"Chorly," he said, "I made a mess of it over home, and I've come here and made a mess of it again. But I need money, and I cannot ask for it just now. What I mean is, take this ring and get a loan on it. I must leave tonight now that Emmeline"—

He stopped abruptly, then went on:

"Emmeline owes her landlord. Her rent must be paid, and I am going home."

"Alone?"

"Alone! Some one goes with me, some one very dear to me. And I must go at once for sake of"—

Again he stopped abruptly, and Chorly saw it all. Gravesend loved Emmeline, and he was hurrying her away with him in order to avoid complications with the veiled lady in black. And then he experienced a strange revulsion of feeling, for Gravesend must think the world of Emmeline to marry her when she was such a cripple. His antagonism vapored. He could but respect the fellow for his fealty.

Chorly was no younger than Gravesend, but at that moment Gravesend seemed immeasurably his senior.

Could he do nothing? The rent! Gravesend had the right to pay it. The right? No, no. Gravesend must not do it. Emmeline would never know. Gravesend should not deprive him of a last thing he might do for Emmeline.

"Another thing," Gravesend was saying, "you may keep the ticket for that ring. Whenever you please redeem it and keep it for yourself. Of course I could get the money in another way, but I should have to explain, and, heaven knows, a fresh explanation is too much for me just now. You understand?"

Chorly did not understand, but he did know that the ring was his to do with it what he pleased.

And he would pay that rent. He would go to Ronald and ask him to advance the money and reimburse him a little at a time, as he would pay back some other money he owed now that he was assured a position at the costumer's.

He seized his hat and left the room. He went boldly down the stairs. He found Emmeline on her crutches standing in the doorway of her apartment, but when she glanced up and saw him she wheeled around and went in and closed the door.

"She shut the door in my face!"

And yet who was he to make a fuss about that? Had she ever encouraged him? Had she ever discovered how much she was to him? Aye, and who was he to stand in the way of her happiness?

But he would pay that rent. It would be something for him to think about, something that would seem to bring her a little nearer to him when she was far away. Emmeline far away!

He knew that Ronald would be at the theater, whose jaded atmosphere was as the perfume of Araby to his nostrils, and thither he bent his steps.

Ronald stood in the portal of the temple of Thespis and "gave him a hand" applauding.

"There isn't on the stage at this moment, sir," said Ronald, "a face as tragic as Mr. John Chorly's. I wish our 'heavy' could see it. He ought to be on an ice wagon instead of on the stage. He's a short length of shrunken yellow flannel, and it strikes me that I am in a position to know. Well, sir, what can I do for you?"

"Ronald," said Chorly, "I've spent all I saved while I was working, and I've borrowed money to live on. I believe you're the only friend I haven't borrowed from. Lend me an X. I'll pay you fifteen for it, a dollar a week, when I get work. Let me have it, for God's sake!"

Ronald stepped back admiringly. "There isn't," he said, "a 'heavy' on the stage that could say 'for God's sake!' better than that. Here's the filthy. I know tomorrow's Thanksgiving, and you want to celebrate $10 worth, Johnny."

With a muttered word of thanks Chorly grasped the bill and was gone. He knew that Emmeline's rent was $5 a month, but he wanted to be on the safe side in case there were a few days over and the landlord should hold her for the new month as well.

As he walked along at once he felt Gravesend's ring in his hand. He took the bauble and with all his strength shot it up in the air. It made a flash as it curved through the sunlight. Then he went on to the landlord.

"Mr. Chorly," beamed that expectant gentleman, "your rent is not quite due, but what I like about a tenant is punctuality. That's what I like, punctuality. I'll make out a receipt."

"It's not my rent," Chorly said. "I've come to settle for Miss Davis."

The landlord's face became duller.

"Then," he replied, "I'll call off the constable."

"Call off the what?"

"Not a dollar have I had from her for five months. The constable was to levy tomorrow, only it's Thanksgiving day."

Chorly gasped. Emmeline to be sold out for rent, all the furniture from her old home in the country to be taken away from her! Though by tomorrow she would be far away, maybe taking her furniture with her, yet the rent must be paid, and he only had $10.

"Of course I'll take that on account," pursued the landlord. "The constable needn't seize everything, for I know the value of those antique sticks of hers."

Emmeline to leave $15 unpaid! That was not doing as he wished. He must pay all the rent. He understood Emmeline's position. She had been unable to scrape the rent money together since the accident, and the landlord had really been lenient.

And why had he never thought of her possible straits? Ah, Gravesend's attentions to her had made him oblivious to everything else!

But the rent should be paid in full. And yet he had thrown away the ring. Curse the ring! As though he should allow the money raised on that to settle the indebtedness.

"I will see you later," he told the landlord. And now how to get the money.

Of course he could not brace Ronald a second time. Ronald had lent him the X more as a bluff than anything else, no poor man caring to have his friends know the paucity of his exchequer, the rich alone being able to afford to plead poverty, and he had exhausted his other intimates. And yet Ronald was known to make big money, his tips enormous, actors, according to popular tradition, having a habit of throwing a five or a ten to their dressers on the slightest provocation. He went home. As he entered the house he saw that Emmeline's door was open, but when he got abreast of it it went shut with a bang.

Anger, insurmountable anger, seized him, for once before that day the door had been shut in his face, and he had not minded much. Now he went up and pounded on the panel. The door opened slowly. Emmeline on her crutches confronted him.

"Is—is the captain here?" Chorly asked brusquely.

A burning flush overspread her thin face, and a bright light sprang to her eyes.

"Certainly not," she answered.

"I wanted to see him," said Chorly in some confusion, "that's all," and wondered why he was glad of her answer and her curt way of giving it.

He went up to his room. He looked around him. No, there was nothing to sell, for, unlike Emmeline, he rented his room ready furnished. He let his fist fall on the table. He felt that if Gravesend should come in he would knock him down. But Gravesend did not come, and Chorly walked restlessly about for an hour. Then he could stand it no longer and flung himself out of the house.

He passed and repassed the theater where Ronald was employed, fascinated by the idea that the man in there possessed the money which he so much needed. As he went by for the fifth or sixth time a coupe dashed up to the curb, and in it was a lady, the star who nightly walked across three gentlemen strung together in midair from opposite mountain sides, the one grasping the heels of the other, that the heroine might escape by a "human bridge" from the persecutions of a villain. The driver of the coupe whipped up his horse before she was fairly out, and she tripped and would have fallen out for Chorly, who sprang forward and caught her. Being a nervous woman and unused to ordinary peril, she had to be supported to the corridor of the theater, where Chorly, catching a sight of Ronald, turned away.

But Ronald hastened after him.

"There isn't on the stage, sir," he said, "another bit of baby blue with heart's blood polka dots that could come a faint like that, and I ought to know. She says you're to have this. It's not a prop, but the real thing. Take it, Johnny. It'll do for your necktie."

It was a little pin with a pearl in the center. Chorly caught it in his palm and hurried to a jeweler. There he was given $10 for it, and he spurred on to the landlord.

"On account," said that gentleman, almost as beaming as when he had thought Chorly attacked with punctuality regarding the settlement of his own rent not yet due. "I knew she could pay up if she wanted to. The other five in the morning."

But Chorly was determined that the money should be paid in full today, while Emmeline was still on the ground.

He went to the house again. Emmeline's door was tightly closed. He did not mind that now.

Up in his room he made a bundle of all the spare clothing he had—his overcoat, his Sunday trousers—and proceeded to the corner where the three golden balls of the arms of Lombardy swung in the air. He was offered $4 on his wardrobe.

"Make it five," he pleaded.

The man behind the counter laughed.

Chorly took off the waistcoat he wore.

"Give me a dollar on this," he said. "And here, my sleeve buttons. They're sterling silver." And so he had the $5.

Then he paid his third visit to the landlord, who jovially gave him a receipt in full for Emmeline's rent.

It was nearly dusk now. He had been hours over the matter. He had eaten nothing. He had slept but poorly the night before. He went on to the house light headed, the house attracting him uncontrollably now that Emmeline would be in it for so short a time.

He averted his eyes when he neared Emmeline's door. He did not wish to see whether it were open or shut.

In his room he laughed exultingly.

"I've done it," he said. "I've done it." And yet, after all, where was the comfort of it?

He thought of Emmeline happy and far away from him, Gravesend's honored wife.

He sat there, seeing nobody, hearing nothing. Once or twice he became dimly conscious of voices near him.

Then he heard a voice raised in lamentation. Once, twice, he heard it. Then he started. It came from across the hall—the voice of a weeping woman.

"Emmeline!" he muttered.

He got to the hall. Gravesend's door was ajar. There was a light in the room.

"At last," Chorly heard the voice say—"at last I have prevailed. Come. Leave these squalid surroundings. I will not be denied. Come!" It was not Emmeline's voice. In Gravesend's room was the veiled lady in black.

"Yes," was Gravesend's reply to her, "I will go. There is little to keep me here now. First, though, I must see a good fellow here—only for a minute. I will not run away."

Chorly barely had time to reach his own room when, as Ronald would have said in his professional vernacular, Gravesend "entered to him."

"In the dark, Chorly?" he said, with a sigh. "We're all that way in this world. I know I am often enough. Did you pay the rent?"

"Yes," laconically answered Chorly.

"Then," went on Gravesend, "there is a further favor I will ask you, a last one. I intended to see Emmeline this evening, but I fear it would be painful—that is, I can't do it. What I mean is that she is to know nothing about the payment of the rent till I'm gone. She would resent what I've done, especially as this afternoon something unexpectedly came her way. I did not want the landlord to worry her. It was the least I could do. And I have promised she should see me pass by the house at half past 7 this evening. No, I'm confused. I don't mean that, for it is unnecessary now. I leave the city on the half past 7 train. I leave the house this minute. I have some things to attend to.

The veiled lady in black! Emmeline was deserted for the veiled lady in black!

"She was merely to see me go past the house at half past 7," Gravesend was saying, almost musingly. Then, with a burst: "Chorly, goodby! I must go. And thank you for all you've done for me. That's all I can do at present—just thank you in words. And here are a few things I wish you'd have, for I've been in hard luck myself. They are in this bundle which I place on your bed—a couple of coats I shall no longer need. You and I are about the same build. Goodby!"

And he was gone.

To this day Chorly believes he got crazier and crazier every minute. Emmeline deserted for that veiled lady in black! Let him get at Gravesend!

He ran to the hall. Gravesend's room was dark and deserted; he was gone. He returned to his own room. There was the bundle on the bed. Gravesend to give him clothing! He flew at the coats and tore at them with his hands. He stopped, a coat in his hand. Emmeline deserted! And what was that? Gravesend had said that Emmeline expected to see him go past the house at half past 7. Maybe he had given her a fictitious reason for going away, and she was to see him thus and probably keep on thinking he was true to her. It would save her from knowing the truth yet awhile. When she learned the truth, she might be stronger and better able to bear it. It was close on to 7 o'clock. "She shall see him!"

He flew down the stairs, one of Gravesend's coats on his arm. He gained the theater.

"You're the picture of despair," Ronald said. "I never saw better despair even in our best pro., bar none, and, by the way, I'm pretty hard up for Thanksgiving, so I hope you don't want any more"—

"You know Gravesend," cried Chorly. "I'm about his build. Make me up like him."

"What do you mean?" demanded Ronald. "I won't be a party to anything off color."

"It's all straight," said Chorly. "It's nearly half past 7. I'm only trying you, for I don't believe you can make me look like him."

Ronald's professional pride was touched. He opened a box of grease paints and set to work. It took only a few minutes, during which there were cries for "Ronald! Ronald!" outside. But Ronald persisted to the end. Then he took a hand mirror and held it before Chorly's eyes.

"What do you think now, Johnny, my boy?" he laughed. "I can't, can't I?"

Chorly almost cried out. His face was Gravesend's to perfection. Without a word, he left the theater. On the way he put on Gravesend's coat. Then he was in the street. Emmeline should see Gravesend.

But gradually as he went along the horror of the situation wore upon him—Emmeline led to believe that Gravesend cared for her, and all the time there had been that veiled woman in black.

The man—the man was the one upon whom he should wreak his vengeance. If he could only get to the station before Gravesend got away; if he could only meet the man who had made a tool of him in giving him that ring! Thank heaven, the rent had not been paid from the proceeds of the disposal of that ring! Emmeline was spared that humiliation, though a fresh humiliation had been thrust upon her in having her indebtedness to the landlord settled by a man who was nothing to her, for he knew Emmeline and her independent spirit and that she would rather by far have her household goods seized than that any one should presume to assume her debts.

The man was the thing. Even in his haste, wiping off as best he could the pigment with which Ronald had daubed his face, he realized that the truth about the settlement of Emmeline's rent must come out. And how should she regard him thereafter? He glanced at his sleeve, which he had used as an eraser of Ronald's work, and uttered an exclamation. He was wearing the coat Gravesend had left in his room. In an instant it was lying in the roadway, and he was tearing on to the station to try to intercept the owner. He had to pass by the house. Was that poor little girl waiting for Gravesend? It would take him but a second to find out. She was not at the window. He darted into the hall, when Emmeline's door opened, and there she stood on her crutches, her face radiant.

"My friend," she said, stammering a little, "the landlord has been here. I sent for him. I knew you had been out of employment a good while, and I—I feared your rent was in arrears, and, tomorrow being Thanksgiving day, I felt like—like— But he tells me you have settled for my rent. I will pay you back, for this afternoon, after much quibbling, which Mr. Gravesend told them was all nonsense, the company paid my accident policy, and I am quite well fixed. And next week I can take up my typewriting again. Oh, you are bleeding! You are hurt!" For the red paint of the make-up had become smeared in streaks down his face.

Emmeline! Was it his voice crying out because of her sorrow, which had evidently not yet become known to her. "Gravesend—he told me"—

"Yes," she interrupted, "he stopped at the door this evening and said he had told you he was going back home. And, oh, yes, there was a boy to see you. He wanted to tell you that your old firm will resume business next week, and they want you. And so they have gone back to England!"

"They?"

"Mr. Gravesend and his mother."

"His mother?"

"A dear lady in black. She came all the way to America after her son."

Chorly grasped at the door jamb. The veiled lady was Gravesend's mother!

"He has been ever so kind," Emmeline went on in sudden confusion, "since the week after I came home from the hospital! He was lonely, and it seems I—I appealed to him, he said, until he told me he lo— Oh, why have you been so cruel as to leave me so long alone? That was why I almost felt like saying 'Yes' to Mr. Gravesend when he asked me to be his wife, though I should have been foolish to accept him, for he was only lonely, like me, and his loneliness made him think I was a good deal to him. But he looked so gloomy this morning that I made him promise to let me see him go past the house at half past 7 this evening, just to let me know he felt friendly and I had not pained him. Instead he came with his mother to say goodby. He was cheerful, and his mother kissed me. Oh, tomorrow is the day when our hearts should be unfeignedly thankful. It is the goodness of our friends which often makes us see the goodness of God, and you and Mr. Gravesend have made me see that goodness. Can't you see—can't you see what I mean, John?"

Chorly saw what she meant. He saw more than he had thought would ever be vouchsafed him. He saw the reason why Gravesend had been rejected, the reason why the payment of the rent appealed to her as it did. He saw that she knew how much she was to him, and he saw what he had become to her.

"Emmeline," he cried, "I'll tell you everything. Gravesend's a good fellow. Thanksgiving day tomorrow? It is now—tonight! Emmeline! Emmeline!"

As Ronald would have said, "The stage, sir, has not a situation that comes up to it," and Ronald ought to know.

THE above picture of the man and fish is the trademark of Scott's Emulsion, and is the synonym for strength and purity. It is sold in almost all the civilized countries of the globe.

If the cod fish became extinct it would be a world-wide calamity, because the oil that comes from its liver surpasses all other fats in nourishing and life-giving properties. Thirty years ago the proprietors of Scott's Emulsion found a way of preparing cod liver oil so that everyone can take it and get the full value of the oil without the objectionable taste. Scott's Emulsion is the best thing in the world for weak, backward children, thin, delicate people, and all conditions of wasting and lost strength.

The Antalgica

Or Vegetable Pain Reliever

was introduced to the public in 1848, since which time thousands of bottles have been sold each year to an appreciative public, which is a good evidence of its merits. It is adapted to so many ailments it should be in every household, for it cures all kinds of pains both internal and external. For Bronchial affections it is unrivaled by any article in the market. It is a sure cure for Cholera Morbus and Dysentery, if taken in season, also for Coughs. It is an effective remedy for rheumatic affections, stiff joints, swelled limbs, sprains, cramps, tooth ache and many other ills to which the flesh is heir. Try it and it will do you good. It is sold at 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle by The Quimby Pharmacy, LeGro's Drug Store and the proprietor,

Golden Wedding Celebration.

Mr and Mrs. A B Merchant celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary at their residence on High street, in Monson, yesterday. During the day they entertained their relatives from Monson, Worcester, and Providence, R. I., all of their children being present. A reception to their neighbors and friends was held in the evening from 7 to 10 o'clock, which was largely attended. Mr. and Mrs Merchant received, assisted a part of the evening by their oldest daughter, Mrs. C F. Sampson During the evening Samuel Closson presented them with a purse of $114 in gold, making a few fitting remarks Mr. A. W. Merchant of Providence, the youngest of their children, responded to Mr Closson's remarks for his parents. Refreshments were served and the evening was spent in a social way. Among the out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. C F Sampson and Mr. and Mrs. Brown of Worcester, Mr. and Mrs E. G Penniman and Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Merchant of Providence, R I, and Mr and Mrs. Chapman of Springfield

Alvin B. Merchant was born in Rupert, Vt, Jan 5, 1829, and was the son of Ephraim and Abigail Houghton Merchant. He came to Massachusetts when a small boy, and later learned the stonecutter's trade. In 1854 Mr. Merchant went to Monson, where he has since resided with the exception of a few months. He was married Nov. 30, 1855, to Jane D Marsh of Adams. In 1858 he went to Kansas, with the intention of locating there, but the climate not agreeing with his health, he returned to Monson in September of the same year.

For forty-eight years Mr. Merchant worked for the W N Flynt Granite Company, for thirty-five years being the foreman. He was compelled about three years ago to give up work on account of poor health. While in their employ he proved a hard-working, conscientious employe, always working for the interests of his employers

Mrs. Merchant was born in Florida, Mass, March 18, 1832, and was the daughter of Philo and Unis Marsh.

Eight children have been born to Mr and Mrs. Merchant, four of whom are now living. They are Mrs. C. F. Sampson of Worcester, Mrs. J E. Rindge of Monson, Mrs. E G. Penniman of Providence and Archie Winthorpe Merchant of Providence, estimator for the firm of Maguire & Penniman of that place. There are eight grandchildren. While Mr. and Mrs. Merchant do not enjoy very good health, they are able to go driving on pleasant days.

House Burned.

The fire department was called out Sunday night about 7 o'clock by an alarm rung in from box 17 at the corner of Main and Washington streets. The fire was in a small house on the east side of Ralph Clifford's meadow, in the lot west of Pearl street. It was formerly owned by Michael O'Brien of Groton, Ct., but is now the property of George Lewis, and was occupied by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Moses Lewis. At the time of the fire Mr. and Mrs Lewis were out of the house, having been gone but a few minutes. The roof and upper part of the house were all ablaze when the alarm was rung in so that the saving of the building was an utter impossibility. The department responded promptly and had a stream on the blaze in a very short time. There was a short delay from lack of hose on No. 1 cart, as the hydrant was some distance from the building The fire was checked in a few minutes after the water was turned on, but what little was saved is practically worthless. The most of the furniture, which was uninsured, was taken out The loss on the house will be from $800 to $1000 and was insured through the Peck & Fay agency for $500. The fire alarm sounded unusually clear that night as there was no wind and the sound was heard very distinctly in Palmer. The flames streaming straight up into the sky made a very pretty sight and the meadows and nearby hills were covered with people watching it at a distance.

Barry—Dunn.

Miss Mary J. Barry, daughter of John Barry of Bridge street, and James Dunn of Palmer were married at St. Patrick's church Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Thomas O'Keefe. There was a large attendance, as both young people are well known in Monson and Palmer. The maid of honor was Miss Margaret Barry, sister of the bride, and the best man was Joseph Wilder of Palmer. The ushers were James Barry and A. H. Remington of Palmer. The bride's dress was white silk and she carried roses. The bridesmaid wore pink organdie and a black picture hat. After the ceremony a reception was held at the bride's home. After a short wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Dunn will reside in Palmer,

The prizes for the best poverty costumes were given to Charles McDonald and Miss Abbie Savage Music for dancing was furnished by Orcutt's orchestra of three pieces.

A. A. Gage camp, Sons of Veterans, held its regular meeting in Grand Army hall Tuesday night and were inspected by Frank Wilcox of Palmer. The following officers were elected: Commander, Albert G. Beckwith; senior vice commander, A. C. Page; junior vice commander, Walter Naughton; camp council, Fred J. Flynt, Frank J. McGuire, Claude Duncan; delegate to the state convention, R. A. Beckwith; alternate, A. C Page.

Two weddings were solemnized at St. Patrick's church Wednesday morning, the contracting parties all being Monson people and well known. At 8 o'clock Miss Katherine Welsh and William Bedard were married by Rev. Thomas O'Keefe. The bridesmaid was Miss Annie Welsh, a sister of the bride, and the best man was William Welsh of Monson. At 9 o'clock Miss Margaret Crosson was united in marriage to John Maloney. The bridesmaid was Miss Annie Crosson, a sister of the bride, and the best man was James Lawlor. Receptions were held at both the bride's homes, and on their return from wedding trips they will make their home in Monson

The firemen's annual concert and ball was held in Memorial Hall last evening and although the attendance was small, those who did go had a pleasant time. A concert of seven numbers was given, which would have been enjoyed much more had the temperature of the hall been comfortable, but as it was much complaint was heard about the cold. The grand march was led by Mr. and Mrs. D B Needham, followed by 31 couples. Mr. Needham was floor director, assisted by R J. Murphy, B. F. Ritter and P. A. Crowley. The committee of arrangements was F. J. Entwistle, Charles Drain, John Connell, Charles Peterson, Albert Siewart, N. A. Bugbee, Carl Stewart; reception committee, F. A. Bill, B F. Ritter, F. Partello.

Mt. Ella lodge of Workmen celebrated its 11th anniversary in Workman hall Monday evening and it was a very enjoyable occasion. There were over 100 members and their families and friends present. Mr. Simmons of Boston, a member of the grand lodge, gave a very interesting address. District Deputy P. J. King of Ware also made a few remarks. The entertainment consisted of readings by Miss Lucy Horton and Miss Alicia Gough, violin solo by Thomas Faulkner and banjo and vocal solos by Richard Ritter. Refreshments were served and a social time enjoyed by all. The committee who had the anniversary celebration in charge were James Burdick, William S. Hughes, Joseph Foster and Daniel Watson. The lodge is in a very prosperous condition and new members are occasionally being added.

CAUSES FOR THANKSGIVING.

This is coming to be almost too true fo mirth making, and it is the result of what we call Trust-worship.

(2). The second expression whose words our countrymen sometimes reverse in their lives is the famous saying of Lincoln: "Right makes Might!" It seems that many have well nigh forgotten that the correct rendering of this proverb is not: Might makes right. For this is the practice in many departments of our national and social life

One "meaning of the pleasing dollar sign" is seen here. Wealth excuses a multitude of sins;—at least in the mind of the possessor, and sometimes in the minds of a judge and jury. "Money is power," some say, "so let us have money! Once powerful, we can buy the legislators and make the laws as we want them, and so we shall have our acts termed 'right,' with the sanction of the law."

Again, if our organization is powerful enough we can control men's beliefs. By the might of our power we may say: "This is true, and that is false; dare thou not to deny on pain of losing position, social prestige, and perhaps an entrance into the Home above" Might may make right here. In countless other ways the truth of this reversal might be illustrated,—in politics; in literature; in educational schemes

(3) But we must hasten on to our third reversal, which is the twisting out of shape of Alexander Pope's true saying: "Worth makes the man." (I think we believe this in this community, so I am not going to say much about it. Indeed, you all hold the other two sayings in their original forms But this is a time of national thanksgiving, so we refer to some national perils,—and for a purpose which will soon appear).

For many, however, the truth does not seem to be apparent that "Worth makes the man." These say: "How much is the man worth?" And they mean in dollars and cents. Parents are ambitious for their children to become rich. The lives of these little ones have a money value; and in some cases only that The unfolding of the child's life in grammar school and in high school and in college and in church and in the home is not thought of. It is "treasure on earth," not "treasure in heaven."

Dainty Foods Demand It

IN EVERY Receipt that calls for cream of tartar, soda, or baking powder, use the Royal Baking Powder. Better results will be obtained because of the absolute purity and great leavening strength of the Royal. It will make the food lighter, sweeter, of finer flavor, more digestible and wholesome. It is always reliable and uniform in its work.

Alum and phosphate baking powders—some of them sold at the same price and some of them cheaper—will make neither dainty nor wholesome food.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

A single illustration shows two grades of greed, both of which are brought to light by the latest swindle in New York. Parents received letters claiming to be from those authorized to secure for their children double promotion in school grades for five dollars. Many of these fathers and mothers sent this fee only to find that they had been the victims of petty graft Now this shows the low means which some will use to get money,—lying and stealing. It also reveals the culpable greed of parents who think only of getting their children out of school and putting them at some sort of wage-bringing work.

If these short-sighted parents only knew it, the higher education and better equipment for life's battle received from a few more years at school, would put the child far in advance of the poor trade or life they themselves have followed. With mind and heart trained, a man's real worth is increased In the exploration of new and valuable fields of culture, the soul is given a better chance to grow. Many a man to-day appreciates, with tearful gratitude, the sacrifice father and mother made that he might have a good education. In the light of these examples how sad it is to look upon the throng of parents who reckon their children's worth in dollars and cents!

It is the fact, which these three reversals reveal, the fact of God's normal order turned upside down, that makes us pray to our Heavenly Father in the words of J G Holland:

"God give us men! A time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions, and a will;
Men who have honor, men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And scorn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinking.
For while the rabble, with their thumb-worn creeds
Their loud professions and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife—lo! Freedom weeps,
Wrong rules the land, and waiting justice sleeps."

II Christian Idealism. All the foregoing has been realism, and much of it on the dark side, at that. But I have illustrated this real side of our life and brought it to your attention for a purpose. That purpose is to show that the real causes for our thanksgiving may be revealed in in these unexpected places.

It is you and I who are giving thanks. Let us be thankful, then, if in our lives we do not reverse God's order of things. It is a fact to be truly grateful for that we perceive the true and the false rendering of the three sayings to which I have referred. Let us thank God that so many do "trust in Him;" that with thousands in our land "right makes might," and one with God is held to be a majority; and that, with us, "worth truly makes the man"—the enduring worth to God of the human soul, and the value, too, recognized among men, of noble character.

The Christian must perforce be an idealist and a prophet. The religion of Jesus Christ looks forward and anticipates an ideal consummation. We must live and work by faith; and we should be thankful for the rare opportunity of service in transforming those natures where the light that is within is darkness.

We are thankful for those sturdy pioneers who settled these shores, and for the faith of those among whom originated this annual Thanksgiving day. We think of the dangers that beset them as they traversed the old Bay Path between Springfield and Boston, for example; dangers from wild beasts and foes from without. My mind instantly began a comparison of those days with these, as I saw, placed at the side of the old Bay Path—now broadened into a road—this familiar sign: "Not a public street. Dangerous." And I thought what a change has been wrought in these two hundred and fifty years! Then there were no danger signs along the blazed trail save the snapping of a twig, the flash of a musket, or the gleam of the wild beast's eye Then the individual cared for his own bodily health. Now, in place of one are a thousand. Rule and order are established. The community safeguards the life of the individual, in the interest of the public weal. More and more will this rule be extended and broadened, that our bodies may be protected. But, remember, much depends upon the individual.

"We live," says President Roosevelt, in his Thanksgiving proclamation, "in easier and more plentiful times than our forefathers, and yet dangers to national life are quite as great now as at any previous time in our history." The strength of the nation (as every school boy recites, but as few men are ever old enough to really know and practice), is in the strength of the individual citizen. And, therefore, the dangers to a nation's life lie in spiritual weaknesses of human souls, such as we have indicated. It is no more than just, as the commonwealth and the nation have now assumed responsibility for our physical well being, that we, on our part, reciprocate by seeing that the nation is preserved and that national life is grandly developed by the culture of our own intellectual, moral, and spiritual strength. The President concludes his proclamation thus: "We are not threatened by foes from without. The foes from whom we should pray to be delivered are our passions, appetites, and follies; and against these is always need that we should warn"

So we are thankful for the men and women of our land who think deeply and humanely,—after the mind of Christ, and who are setting up signs of warning on the moral and spiritual pathways of life When you young people again see those signs on the old Bay Path (we older ones, too) just say, "That is for me. That is to remind me that there are many ways in which it were not good that people walk, either for themselves or for the nation" When we come to a path of danger, by our own example let us set up the sign—"Not a public way, dangerous" Let us shun the ways that are bad both for the public and republic.

Who make up this republic? Who? Mother and father and friends,—those nearest and dearest to us,—also many who may be strangers but who need the encouragement of Christian example. No one of us stands alone. There is nothing selfish about God's salvation. We help to save or soil each others' souls. For the sake of our dear ones, then, for the sake of any whom our lives may bless, let us beware the dangerous paths where we may fall, and keep steadfastly in the way of Christ, where light and peace and joy bless us as we move along Then comes the true thanksgiving, for the real causes of our thankfulness (as revealed in the unexpected places) are in spiritual perception and spiritual power.

In His infinite wisdom and love God has so ordered our world of life that we are now pained, now amazed, now amused, (it may be) when the normal course of things becomes abnormal. And even as we witness the transgression of eternal laws, even as our innate sense of right and wrong is shocked by some outrage in the moral universe; even as we are disturbed and perplexed by the curious reversals in life of the sayings of the wise and good,—there is for us a gain in spiritual perception and a corresponding growth of spiritual power.

So we thank God for it all—for all the training and all the discipline of this earth, for all the love that is ours, for our Christian faith and hope that point to a better day, clearing skies, and greater light where the darkness has been.

And we say to one another, in the thought that life itself should be a psalm of gratitude to God:

"Be strong!
We are not here to play, to dream, to drift.
We have hard work to do, and loads to lift.
Shun not the struggle; face it. 'Tis God's gift.

Be strong!
Say not the days are evil,—Who's to blame?
And fold the hands and acquiesce—O shame!
Stand up, speak out, and bravely, in God's name.

Be strong!
It matters not how deep intrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day, how long.
Faint not, fight on! To-morrow comes the song."

ness who were in business when Mr. Northrop began 31 years ago, are J F. Holbrook, E S Brooks and C T. Brainerd.

The acting head of the Palmer Ice Company is A W. Holbrook, although it is understood that others are interested with him in the business. The company will use the same houses and sources of supply as have been used by Mr. Northrop, and may possibly increase its storage capacity at its Thorndike street house. It has leased the "Foster" farm near this house and will keep its men and teams there, D. E. O'Connor being the manager in charge.

Her Company's Voice.

"Who is that in the parlor, Nellie?" asked the little sister.

"Nobody but mamma and Fred," replied Nellie.

"Oh, yes, there must be some one else," rejoined the little girl, "for mamma has her company voice on!"

It was a little squib under the heading of "Fun," which a member of the family read aloud from the paper. The circle about the table who heard it smiled, and one said, "That's a good joke." But a more thoughtful member turned it over in her mind. She was the mother, and she admitted to herself that it was more than a joke—that in many instances it was sober truth. It came home to her heart with great significance, for she acknowledged to herself that "the company voice" was entirely too often put on when in the presence of those outside the home circle. We wish to appear at our best before those whose good opinions we desire to gain. But with those who love us how often we speak in irritable, harsh, quick tones.—Evangelist.

Why He Wouldn't Work Longer.

A shipbuilder tells of an Irishman who sought employment as a diver in the service of one of the shipbuilding companies.

The first job to which the Irishman was assigned was to be performed in comparatively shallow water. He was provided with a pick and told to use it on a ledge below.

Mike was put into a diver's suit, and, with his pick, was sent down to tackle the ledge. For about 15 minutes nothing was heard from him. Then came a strong, determined, deliberate pull on the signal-rope, indicating that Mike had tried a very decided wish to come to the top. The assistants hastily pulled him to the raft, and removed his helmet.

"Take off the rist of it," said Mike.

"Why, what's the matter?" asked they.

"Take off the rist of it," doggedly reiterated Mike; "I'll wur-rk no longer on a job where I can't spit on me hands."—Harper's Weekly.

IN PALMER.

Every Claim Is Backed By Local Testimony.

If the reader wants stronger proof than the following statement and experience of a resident of Palmer, what can it be?

D. W. Powers, machinist, living on Main street, says:—"If the first box of Doan's Kidney Pills procured at LeGro's drug store had not brought undoubted results I never would have bought a second, neither would I have continued the treatment until cured of backache and dull aching pains in and around the kidneys. When the attacks were at their height it hurt to stoop or straighten, and I was never able to tell when making any unthought of movement that sharp twinges would not radiate across the small of the back. You are at liberty to send anyone to me for corroboration of the above."

Miss Mary Lyons of Summer street is confined to her home as a result of a sprained ankle, which she received while at play in the grammar school yard this week.

Thanksgiving Day was observed in a very quiet manner yesterday, there being no amusements indulged in. Many from this place attended the theatres in Springfield in the afternoon.

Miss Mary O'Keefe of New York, formerly of Thorndike, was bridesmaid at the Moran—Dawson nuptials at Palmer on Tuesday. John T. Moran of Springfield, formerly of Thorndike, was best man.

T. J. Clifford intends to open Union Hall for roller skating in a few days. It is several years since the pasttime was indulged in here, and there is no reason why it will not become as popular as formerly

The Thorndike Co. are installing 38 new Northrop looms in their weaving department at No 2 mill. The new machinery is from the shops of the Draper Co. at Hopedale. The looms are of the labor-saving design and it is said one person can attend to as many as three persons could of the old design.

Herbert F. Robinson, who for the past three years has been employed by the Thorndike Co. as second-hand in the carding-room at No 1 mill, is to go to Toronto, Ont., where he has accepted a position in the mills there under William H. Norton. Joseph Fenton of Three Rivers will succeed Mr. Robinson.

Maurice Flynn, one of the oldest citizens and residents of the town, is seriously ill at his home on High street. He was until a few weeks ago employed as flagman at the crossing at Four Corners by the Springfield and Eastern street railway, having held that position ever since the road was opened. He was obliged to resign on account of ill health.

Commissioner Brainerd has been at work this week with a gang of workmen putting in a sewer, connecting the same with the Commercial street extension for the purpose of draining the hill near Exchange block, which is always left in bad shape after a severe rain storm. The sewer has three openings from the top of the hill extending downward in the direction of the Ware river.

Word was received in Thorndike a few days ago of the death of Thomas Ronan, son of Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Ronan of Summer street, which occurred in West Virginia about three weeks ago. The young man's parents were greatly surprised at the sad news, as it was not known that he was ill. The deceased was well known in town, where he had taken part in several entertainments given by local talent. He visited last at the home of his parents about ten years ago. The remains, which were interred in the South, will be brought to Ware for burial. Funeral services will be held to-morrow afternoon in All Saints' church, with interment in St. William's cemetery.

Miss Marjory Bruce of Rockhaven, R I, and Gavin Bruce of New York are spending Thanksgiving with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bruce.

Thanksgiving was spent in its usual quiet way in Three Rivers. The stores and post office were closed and the mill shut down. In the afternoon many went to Springfield and attended the theater, and there was a football game on the Athol grounds which was well attended

Joseph Jiboleau and Miss Albina Picott were married Monday morning at St Anne's church by Rev Fr Geoffry. The bridesmaid was Miss Fabina Peltie and the best man was Adolph Picott. After the ceremony a reception was held at the bride's home, after which the couple left for their honeymoon.

BONDSVILLE.

Allen Hall spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Taylor.

John Farris of Mittineague is the guest of his sister, Mrs. A. M Billings.

Mr. and Mrs. C L. Holden have returned from a visit with relatives in Bennington, Vt.

George Moulton was called to Maine last Saturday by the serious illness of his father.

Joseph Lusty started for Miller Falls Monday, where he has a position as a plumber.

Dr. Otis W. Sedgwick of Wales spent yesterday at the home of his father, Butler Sedgwick.

Guy Haynes, telegraph operator at the Boston and Maine station, spent Thanksgiving in Lowell.

Miss Bridget Leary, who has been seriously ill at her home and threatened with pneumonia, is improving.

Miss Ora Parent is home from Framingham for the Thanksgiving recess, and Miss Gertrude Marsan from Lexington.

Miss Bertha Galley of Lynn was a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C E Elliott at Maplewood Farm, Thanksgiving.

The Ladies' Aid Society will hold a meeting next Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Thomas Waterhouse Sr.

Rev. and Mrs. L. L. Beeman spent Thanksgiving at the home of their son, Bowman Beeman, in West Brookfield.

Mr. and Mrs. E H Woolard were called to Biddeford, Me., Monday by the death of Mrs. Woolard's brother, who was killed Sunday.

Miss Alice Bond and Miss Grace Hyatt spent Thanksgiving at Miss Hyatt's home in Milford, Ct. They will not return until Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Russell of Lowell and Richard Russell of Philadelphia are guests at the home of their parents, Mr and Mrs. Charles Russell.

The Bondsville youths defeated a team of Belchertown boys in a game of basketball Wednesday afternoon. The game was played in this village.

On account of a wreck on the Boston & Maine railroad near Whalen last Friday, the mail train due at 7.03 p. m. did not pass through the village until midnight.

Miss Mabel Ryther of Boston and Prof. Leon Ryther of South Byfield are spending their Thanksgiving vacation at the home of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. E Ryther.

The teachers in the public schools are spending the Thanksgiving recess at their different homes, Miss Lucillia Dunton at her home in Melrose, Miss Maude Connor in Holyoke and Miss Florence Webster in Waltham.

The ringing of the mill bell about 5 30 o'clock in the afternoon Monday was the cause of much disturbance among the people in that section of the village. It proved to be the fire alarm, and was rung for a blaze in the dust-room of the mill It was soon extinguished however. The cause was probably spontaneous combustion.

Among those who spent Thanksgiving out of town were: Mr. and Mrs. Charles Banister and two children at Mr. Banister's home in West Brookfield; Mr. and Mrs O A. Parent and Miss Ora Parent at the home of Charles Walker in Springfield, and Mr. and Mrs. William Morse and daughter Gladys at the home of Mr and Mrs. Webber in Enfield.

A very interesting temperance meeting was held in the M. E. church last Sunday evening. The pastor had previously given out topics which he asked different ones to speak upon and those who were given topics responded in a very interesting manner. The speakers and their subjects were as follows: Rev. L. L. Beeman, "The power of the Legislature to restrict the saloons;" Mrs. L. L Beeman, "The arrogance of the saloon power;" Mrs. O A Parent, "Woman's work and the W. C. T. U;" E. E. Ryther, "The saloon as a social evil;" Emerson J. Loy, "The temperance cause in Canada." Miss Elizabeth Russell gave a reading and there were temperance songs by a few of the children. The meeting was much enjoyed by those who attended

Uses For Old Papers.

Make your old, discarded newspapers serve you as labor savers instead of fuel, and when paring vegetables or cleaning and dressing a chicken do it all on one of these handy papers.

When you are through bundle the paper and its contents into the stove or garbage pail, and you will have no mess to clean up and no pans to wash. Place a paper on the table before cleaning the lamps. It will catch all superfluous oil, bits of soot and dirt and will save you scrubbing the table

A newspaper spread on the floor is large enough to catch all the dirt and dust from the carpet sweeper and is easily rolled up and thrown away, while you will not have to brush up part of your kitchen floor as you did when you tried the plan of emptying the sweeper in the coal hod —Pilgrim

THE POWER OF KINDNESS

[Original.]

Count Constantin, a young Russian, while hunting passed a peasant hut. A man hurried out of the door, stopped, turned back, started again, stopped again and wrung his hands.

"What's the matter, my good man?" queried the count.

"My little boy has fallen against a window pane and cut his neck. The blood is spouting, and he will die. There is no doctor nearer than ten miles. Oh, for a priest!"

The count threw himself from his horse and went into the house. A boy five years old lay in his mother's arms, just passing into unconsciousness from loss of blood. Constantin, who had recently been graduated from the university where he had taken a course of physiology, saw at once that the jugular vein had been severed. Inserting his thumb and finger into the wound, he drew out the ends of the artery and while the mother held them tied a string around them. Then, putting the boy on a bed, he gave him a little diluted liquor from his flask and, telling his parents not to let him move, mounted his horse and rode away to bring a doctor. In a couple of hours he and a physician came together, and the wound was properly cared for. The count had saved the boy's life, and the gratitude of the parents was unbounded.

Petrof Ivanovich, the peasant, drifted with his family to the city and became a workman. By this time the revolutionary party had made much headway, and Petrof took great interest in its doings. Its deliberations and its acts were carried on by the higher classes, but Petrof was ambitions to do something himself. He formed a society among his fellow workmen and became its head. As years passed he grew more and more interested in what he considered the remedy—the removal of those men in power who stood in the way of a better condition for the people of Russia.

At last it was decided by the members of the society Petrof had organized that nothing could be done to improve matters without a more liberal minister of the interior in office, and the only way to get one was to kill the incumbent. The society failed to decide who should do the job, and no one would volunteer. Petrof made up his mind to do it himself.

The minister lived on his estate in the country during the summer season, and there Petrof went. He spent a week in the neighborhood as a knife grinder, learning of the minister's habits. He found that he went to the city early, driving from his residence guarded, in a close carriage, and never returned before dark. Petrof did not think it practicable to throw a bomb under such conditions and resolved to effect an entrance to the house.

One night the minister was sitting in his study at home when he heard a step on the porch without, and a man in the garb of a workman jumped in at the window. A long blade glittered in the lamplight, and he was about to bring it down on the minister's breast when he stopped as if suddenly paralyzed. The two men looked fixedly into each other's eyes, the workman standing rigid, the minister half risen from his chair. He had given himself up for lost when suddenly the workman's knife dropped on the floor.

"Excellency," he said, "you saved my boy."

Then the minister remembered. "You are"—

"Petrof, the peasant; now Petrof the workman, the revolutionist. I came to remove you. But I cannot"—

The minister rose and, going to the door, locked it. Then, returning to his chair, he said:

"Why did you come to kill me?"

"I came to kill the minister. I did not know that you were he."

"And why did you wish to kill the minister?"

"That a more liberal man may be put in his place."

"Has it never occurred to you," the minister said after a pause, "that I simply carry out the orders of the czar?"

"Yes, excellency, but if we remove a minister for the czar's tyranny he will give the next one he appoints more liberal orders."

The minister took up a paper on which he had been working and handed it to Petrof. The workman had recently learned to read and perused the document. It was a draft of reforms which would greatly ameliorate the condition of the workman.

"I have already gained his majesty's consent to those reforms," said the minister. "I am preparing them to be issued in the form of a ukase. Now, I have a proposition to make you. I will report to the czar that an attempt was made to assassinate me which failed and the would be assassin escaped. Then we shall see whether his majesty will allow these reforms or suppress them."

Petrof stood for awhile in deep thought before replying.

"Excellency," he said at last, "I beg you not to report the attempt. I fear the czar will decide not to grant the reforms."

"Very well. Go back and tell those from whom you come that they have been saved from losing the beneficent act his majesty intended by an act of kindness long ago on the part of his minister to you."

Petrof endeavored to say something worthy of the occasion, but he could only think of the kindly help by which his boy had been saved and the benefits the minister had secured for the people. He went out into the night without having spoken.

The next day the ukase was issued.

The Savings of Years

[Original.]

Among the Scotch-Irish of the Cumberland mountains dwelt Owen McCoy, who was considered miserly. The imputation was scarcely deserved. McCoy had been left by the death of his wife with a son five years old, and, dreading that at his own death the boy would be left in the impoverished condition common among the poor mountain whites, saved for him everything that was not necessary for their maintenance. The boy Donald grew up to be a manly fellow. Then his father became ambitions for him and desired that at his marriage he should choose a wife who would add to the little heap in the tin box. But the son, with the perversity of youth, who will not accept the experience of older people, upset his father's calculations by falling in love with Tristicia Fielding, who had neither dowry nor prospect of dowry. One day Owen McCoy walked past the little patch of ground which was all the Fieldings possessed and saw Tristicia hanging up clothes in the yard. He called to her and she came to the fence.

"You uns air a good gal, Tristicia," he said, "and I don't reckon you uns calc'late to stan' in anybody's way. I be'n savin' fo' my boy Donald ever sence he war a leetle shaver, but it's only enough fo' he uns. As I said befo', you uns is a good gal, Tristicia, an' I'm goin' to ask you uns to let up on Donald."

Tristicia stood with her arms bared to the elbow, leaning on the snake fence, peering at vacancy. Then without an answer she turned away and continued her work. McCoy learned of her decision through his son, who told him that she had broken with him for no good and sufficient reason.

No one knew of the sacrifice Tristicia had made or the effort it cost her. One evening she was sitting on a ledge of rock overhanging the mountain torrent near her house when she heard footsteps coming on the road behind her and then voices. The first voice she recognized as that of Hiram Clusky, a good for nothing. All she heard as they passed was, "Tin box full of it," "McCoy," and "I'll take the front while you uns git inter the cabin rear."

These scraps of conversation were enough to convince Tristicia that McCoy was to be attacked and relieved of his savings. The men were evidently going by the road. As soon as they were out of hearing Tristicia sprang up and ran as fast as she could to her yard and through the orchard and potato patch to McCoy's back door. It was dark within, and she tapped on the window. The elder McCoy asked what was wanted.

"Git up, Mr. McCoy, quick! Clusky 'n' 'nother un's comin' t' rob you uns. Git you uns' gun. Git Donald up with his'n!"

"Donald ain't hyer. Reckon Clusky knowed it. I'll slip on my clo'se 'n' let you uns in."

Within a minute he opened the door and, taking down his rifle from the wall, gave it to Tristicia. Then, taking his own from a corner, he asked her if she would do her part.

"Reckon if I had Donald's I might shoot somepin."

McCoy gave her the gun she wanted, and it seemed to put nerve into her. "I'm goin' to shoot fo' the money you uns be'n savin' fo' Donald," she said. Then she told him that he was to be taken in front and rear, so he stationed her in rear, while he took the front.

In the wild region they occupied, especially at the time, the mountaineers were prepared for attack and there were cracks in the plaster between the logs to be used as loopholes. McCoy took one loophole and Tristicia another. They waited about ten minutes, when McCoy saw the two men walk by scrutinizing the cabin. Then they walked back and Clusky turned in to the door while the other man went round to the back. Clusky called to McCoy to get up, as he was wanted by a sick man to go for a doctor. McCoy answered with a rifle bullet which sent his enemy limping away. At the same time Tristicia saw the man in the rear running toward the back door. She drew a bead on him as well as she could in the dim light and fired. The man gave a yell and fell back. Clusky, hearing the shot and the yell, limped to the back of the house, and Tristicia saw him supporting his comrade away. Then when the stillness was restored she fainted.

Two days after the defense of the McCoy cabin Tristicia was in the orchard gathering apples. Suddenly she felt two arms around her in a tight clasp. Her first thought was that one of the men who had tried to rob McCoy had grappled her. She was about to collapse when she heard a familiar voice say "Tishie, darlin'," and the eyes that had often looked love into hers were looking into them again, their love light intensified. Donald McCoy was holding her and, taking her chin in his hand, pulled it round where he could kiss her lips.

"That war a big job you uns done, sweetheart," he said. "You uns purty nigh killed a robber, an' yo' tuk the 'ramrod' outen dad at the same time. He tole me what he said to you uns about me, an' I reckon 'twar that made yo' fire me. Dad he says now he won't have no one but you uns fo' a da'ter an' he's lookin' fo'wa'd to the day when you uns 'll come to ou' cabin an' we'll have a gal in it to keep it from bein' lonesome. I tole him you uns 'd be thar to keep him from gittin' killed an' me from losin' what he's been so long savin' fo' me."

Her eyes were bent, her cheeks were like the apples hanging highest where they could best catch the sun.

Still Had a Little Pride.

"What is this man charged with?" asked the police justice.

"Stealing a dog, your honor," said the officer.

"Well, sir, what have you got to say for yourself?"

"Your honor," answered the prisoner, drawing a grimy coat sleeve across his nose, "if you'll make it embezzlement I'll plead guilty. I may be a thief, but I've got feelings."—Chicago Tribune.

An Ashantee Belle.

On the Ashanti Gold Coast the costume of a reigning belle is less a matter of well fitting clothes than of well spiked hair. The hair is first divided into a half dozen braids; then these braids are stiffened with wax and tar until they are as hard as kindling wood and stick out straight from the head in a semicircle like the spokes of a wheel. Thus coiffured the belle is ready to conquer all hearts.

"How did the manager get all those women out of that burning theater so quickly?"

"He went on the stage and announced that a man down at the entrance was giving away samples of baking powder."

BEFORE AND AFTER USING Rexall "93" Hair Tonic

THOS. J. BROOKS

THOS. J. BROOKS

LOUISVILLE, KY., May 24, 1905.

Gentlemen:

Allow me to say a word endorsing the remarkable merits of your Rexall "93" Hair Tonic.

My attention was called to this remedy by one of your clerks, who guaranteed beyond question it would stop my hair falling out, and also put my scalp in healthy condition for new hair.

I hand you photograph before starting to use it, which shows me to be nearly bald. After using two bottles I saw decided improvement, so continued its use. I have used seven 50-cent bottles, and have a heavier suit of hair than I ever had in my life.

I also enclose photograph taken a few weeks ago, showing the wonderful results in a short time.

I take great pleasure in making this statement to you, gentlemen, endorsing your great Rexall "93" Hair Tonic, and will answer promptly all inquiries regarding it.

I am at present special agent of the Western and Southern Insurance Company, 21-22 Courier-Journal Office Building, this city.

Very respectfully,

Thos J Brooks

This is a remarkable case—an exception to the rule. We do not promise that "93" will grow hair on every bald head—but we do guarantee, because we know, that it will stop falling hair, cure dandruff, and give satisfaction to anyone needing a hair dressing. If it doesn't, bring back the bottle, and we'll refund the 50 cents you pay for it.

He Had References.

In her book "A Southern Girl In '61" Mrs. D. Giraud Wright tells a capital story about General John C. Breckinridge of Kentucky. He was invited by a certain lady of rank in London to luncheon. The lady had just advertised for a footman. Mistaking the hour, General Breckinridge reached the house before the appointed time and by some accident was ushered into Lady Blank's presence without being announced. The day was in June. Owing to the heat the blinds were drawn, letting in subdued light. Lady Blank, glancing at the advancing figure, to the astonishment of the visitor, greeted him thus: "Have you a reference from your last place?" The general took in the situation instantly and, with a twinkle in his eye, unobserved by the hostess, answered respectfully, "Yes, my lady." "What were your duties?" was the next query. "Well, my lady, in the last three places I held I was vice president of the United States, major general in the Confederate army and secretary of war of the Confederate States of America."

The Lord's Prayer.

The question having arisen as to whether the English version of the Lord's Prayer is a true reproduction of the original as found in Matthew, a native Greek scholar proceeds to answer it. He deals with the petitions in order, translates each word with all the shades of meaning of the original and then presents the whole in this form:

"Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name—thy dominion come—thy (fixed) purpose be done, as in heaven, so, too, on earth. Give us this day our mere (or simple) bread and forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors theirs, and let us not fall into a tempter's snare, but deliver us from the evil one."

Shaw Interests Fighting S. and E. Road in Brimfield.

WANT TO BUILD LINE TO SPRINGFIELD

So They Say. To Build in Brimfield, Then Petition for Monson Franchise.

There is all sorts of trouble between the rival Shaw and Consolidated street railway interests over the locations of tracks in the town of Brimfield. While the Shaw interest has had its location for several years, it has made no move toward building. A short time ago the Consolidated started a move to connect its Springfield and Eastern line in Monson with its Worcester and Southbridge road at Sturbridge. A location was granted by the Brimfield selectmen, which was later found to conflict with that already granted the Shaw road — the Hartford and Worcester. The railroad commissioners refused to approve a location interfering with the one already granted and dismissed the petition of the Consolidated road without prejudice, but the selectmen of Brimfield have now changed the location so that there is no interference, the tracks running on each side of the road. To strengthen their position, it is said that the Hartford and Worcester men have secured their rails and will start laying them immediately, working through the winter and finishing as early as possible, as the franchise of this company expires next year.

On Monday the railroad commissioners in Boston gave a hearing on the petition of the Springfield and Eastern for approval of its location in Monson, granted by the selectmen a short time ago, this hearing really being a continuation of the contest over the locations in Brimfield. T. W. Kenefick and Henry W. Ely were counsel for the petitioner, and William M. Butler, president of the Boston and Worcester, and legal representative generally of the Shaw interests, was counsel for the Hartford and Worcester in opposition.

Mr. Kenefick presented the substance of the case to the commissioners. After Butler had addressed the board Mr. Ely said that the Hartford and Worcester had no location in the town and he did not see how Butler had any right to appear, to which Butler replied that the Hartford and Worcester had important interests in the case and that the location in this town was a part of their proposed through line. The Hartford and Worcester line will soon build on its location in Brimfield and it proposes to petition for one in Monson over practically the same route asked for by the Springfield and Eastern, but it cannot do so until it has actually done some work in Brimfield. He stated that a hearing would be held on Friday on the proposed location of the tracks in Brimfield, and the two cases were so connected that time would be wasted to hear them then and again on Friday.

To this Mr. Ely replied that the Springfield and Eastern wanted both the location in Monson and Brimfield, and expects to build on the locations granted as soon as possible; that the Hartford and Worcester was present in bad grace, being merely a promoter. It has been on the ground four years and has only recently discovered that it would be a good proposition to enter Springfield. Chairman Jackson then stated that it might be the duty of the board to consider which company would be most likely to render the best service to the public, to which Mr. Ely replied that the Hartford and Worcester was not within gunshot of the desired location in Monson, and that it was a ridiculous proposition now advanced that it wanted to enter Springfield.

Mr. Butler then volunteered the information that the Hartford and Worcester had surveyed a line through Monson, expending a large sum of money in good faith for engineering purposes, but it cannot petition for a line in Monson until it has a line in Brimfield. He countered Mr. Ely by saying that the Springfield and Eastern had been in Monson eight years, and had not till now discovered that it wanted a location in Brimfield, or even to the line between the towns. It was the Springfield and Eastern which was holding up the Hartford and Worcester and not the reverse.

After a consultation of the board, Chairman Jackson stated that the two cases were so connected that both should be heard together, and the case would be postponed until to-day, and it was called at 10.30 this morning.

OF INTEREST TO LADIES.

Reception to be Given at Memorial Hall To-morrow Afternoon by the National Biscuit Company.

An event that will be of interest to the ladies of Palmer and vicinity will be the reception to be given by the National Biscuit Company at Memorial Hall to-morrow afternoon from two until five o'clock. Arrangements for the entertainment are being completed by ten special representatives of the National Biscuit Company, who are now in town. They are accompanied by a corps of decorators and a chef, under whose supervision refreshments will be served. The work of the decorators, which is already under way, will result, when finished, in an almost complete transformation of the interior of Memorial Hall

This reception is one of a series which the National Biscuit Company is holding throughout the state, and it is really a campaign of acquaintance, undertaken for the purpose of showing the finest baking in the world in the most practical manner possible. It is to enable every lady in the town to realize that the trade-mark of the National Biscuit Company on each end of a package of biscuit, crackers and wafers is an absolute guarantee of goodness, purity and crisp deliciousness. This trademark is always an assurance that perfect baking has been given the protection of a package which by excluding all air, impurity and moisture, entirely prevents the possibility of contamination by dust, germs or handling.

The refreshments to be served at the reception to-morrow afternoon will include many of the most delicious products of the National Biscuit Company. In addition to Uneeda Biscuit, there will be Butter Thin Biscuit, Graham Crackers, Oysterettes, Social Tea Biscuit, Zu Zu Ginger Snaps.

The equipment carried by the reception committee consists of over half a carload of baggage. This is largely decorative material, but also includes the china and silver used in serving refreshments at the reception.

Every lady who can possibly be present to-morrow afternoon should by all means do so. An enjoyable musical program will be rendered by Orcutt's orchestra, and other features will contribute to an afternoon of pleasant entertainment. The reception will be held from two until five o'clock, and a cordial welcome is assured to every guest.

MRS. WILLIAM MERRIAM.

One of Palmer's Best Known Women is Laid at Rest.

Mrs. William Merriam, one of the best known and most respected women of Palmer, died at her residence on Pleasant street Sunday morning. Her death was the final result of a stroke of paralysis sustained on June 20, leaving no hope for recovery; as she continued in a slowly failing condition till the end came.

Frances Jane Whitcomb was born in Swanzey, N. H., October 1, 1828, daughter of Capt. Otis and Esther Eliza (Osgood) Whitcomb, being one of a family of eighteen children, twelve of whom lived to adult age, while four of her brothers served in the Civil War. Her father was the original of "Josh Whitcomb," the most interesting character in Denman Thompson's "Old Homestead," which has been so popular on the stage for many years. Miss Whitcomb and William Merriam were married September 20, 1846. After marriage the couple lived in Rindge, N H., about two years, then in Fitzwilliam, N. H, some ten years, going thence to Springfield in 1869 and returning to Palmer in 1884, where they have since resided.

Mrs. Merriam united with the Universalist church of Swanzey, N. H., in 1856, and transferred her membership to St. Paul's Universalist church of Palmer on its organization, in which she had ever taken an active interest. While in Springfield she served some twelve years as a member of the board of directors in the Universalist church mission society of the city, doing much benevolent work. She was a life member of the Universalist Woman's Centenary Society, a member of the Society of the Pilgrim Fathers, of the Golden Cross, and of the Eastern Star of Palmer. She was also a member of the Palmer Historical Society, and took a deep interest in its work, loaning for its use many interesting articles from her large collection of antique relics.

Mrs. Merriam was possessed of a kind and benevolent disposition, interested in all laudable means for the uplifting of humanity. She had spent a busy and useful life and has now gone to a well-deserved rest Her smiling face will be greatly missed in our social gatherings, where she had been a welcome attendant for so many years.

Besides her husband she is survived by a daughter, Mrs. J. F. Holbrook of Palmer, two grandsons, one sister and six brothers.

O. P. ALLEN.

The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon with a large attendance of relatives and friends. Rev. W. A. Moore conducted the services, and there was singing by Mrs. Birch of Ware and Miss C. J. Fish. The bearers were Victor Frost, H. W. Holbrook, Felix Barielle and C. I. Whitcomb. Burial was in the Thorndike-street cemetery.

AGRICULTURAL ANNUAL.

Partial List of Officers Elected; Rest to Be Chosen Later.

There was only a small attendance at the annual meeting of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society, held in Palmer Monday afternoon. Secretary Chandler gave a lengthy report, in which he reviewed the recent fair in detail. He touched on the improved standing which the society has with the fair-going public over that of a few years ago, its reputation as an amusement purveyor now being of a high order. Suggestions were made along various lines for next year's fair, and an urgent appeal was made for a more active interest on the part of the members—a working interest—not at the time of the fair or a week before, but an interest which would bring members into the work early in the year. Mr. Chandler recommended that work on the fair of next October be begun at once, and pushed through the early months of the new year.

The report of the treasurer showed receipts of $4721 during the year, and $72 in the treasury. A profit on this year's fair was shown by the returns.

These officers were elected: President, O E. Bradway of Monson; vice presidents, C. D. Richardson of West Brookfield and H. D. Vaille of Monson; secretary, L E Chandler of Palmer; auditor, D. F. Dillon of Palmer; delegate to the State Board of Agriculture for three years, A. C Stoddard of North Brookfield. D L. Bodfish announced that he would not serve again as treasurer but was reëlected, and positively declined to serve. A committee consisting of L. E. Chandler, F. D. Rogers and D. L. Bodfish was appointed to bring in a list of directors and a name for treasurer at an adjourned meeting to be held on the same day as a farmers' institute which will be held some date this month.

COLLISION AT DWIGHTS.

Passenger Train Hit By Pay Car; No Serious Damage.

There was a narrow escape from a serious accident on the Central Vermont road just north of Belchertown Tuesday evening. The north-bound passenger train, due to reach Dwight's station at 8.18, was struck as it was slowing up for the station by the pay train—an engine and one car — which was following it. George Mason of Northfield, a brakeman, was badly bruised and cut, and had his collar bone broken. There were only four passengers on the train, and none of these were injured. The rear ends of the two cars on the passenger train were badly smashed, but neither this nor the pay train left the track.

The passenger train, which was a minute ahead of its schedule, was running slowly just before it reached Dwight's in order to kill time. The pay train came up behind it at a high rate of speed, and after rounding the curve, struck the passenger train with great force. Just how the pay train happened to come down upon the other train at such a rate of speed is not known. The rear platform of the passenger train was crushed, and the front platform and the back platform on the front coach were smashed. The rear coach was badly broken, but not enough to seriously injure the passengers. Mason, the brakeman, was between the two cars when the accident occurred and was rendered unconscious. Dr. Haskell of Amherst was called in, and Mason was taken on with the train to his home in Northfield. The train was able to go on about 10.30, leaving the rear car on a siding.

CHECK FORGER CAUGHT.

Ware Hotel Keeper Thinks Signature is Doubtful..

AND DETAINS MAN WHILE FINDS OUT

Had Other Forged Checks in His Possession. Is Wanted in Rhode Island.

William Rohan, one of the proprietors of the Hampshire House in Ware, and the police of Ware did a good job Saturday night when they captured James Moran, who was attempting to pass a forged check. Moran is also wanted in Woonsocket, R. I., for the same charge.

Moran came to the Hampshire House last week, accompanied by a woman, the couple registering as man and wife. When paying Mr. Rohan Saturday night for his board Moran asked if he would accept a check of C. Hitchcock & Co in part payment. He gave Mr. Rohan $2 and for the remaining $7 offered a check drawn on the Ware National Bank for $15 50 payable to James Moran, signed C. Hitchcock. Mr. Rohan requested Moran to indorse the check, which he did and presented it again. Mr Rohan then said he would go down stairs and get the money, but Moran followed, so Mr. Rohan tried another dodge and said he thought the money was upstairs after all He went to the office and down a rear stairway, going to C. Hitchcock's & Co's. store nearby. Here all knowledge of the check was denied.

After returning to the hotel, Mr. Rohan requested his brother, David Rohan, to call an officer while he kept Moran at hand. Officer Buckley was called to the hotel and arrested Moran, who while being taken to the station managed to drop behind him some papers, which action was observed and the officer secured them. They were found to include several blank checks, and one made out for $8 40 payable to William Barnes, also signed C. Hitchcock. A voucher for expenses from Northampton to Ware for $3 50 was also found; Moran informed the chief of police that he was a traveling salesman for glassware and did business with the Hitchcock firm.

Sunday evening T. B. Sutton, an inspector. of the police force in Woonsocket, R. I., and S. Schlansky, a clothing dealer of the same city, arrived in Ware, having seen the newspaper accounts of Moran's arrest for forgery, and identified him as the man who had passed four or five checks in Woonsocket on the afternoon before Thanksgiving. Moran traveled under a different name in Rhode Island, and did some work as a sign letterer. He purchased a suit of clothes of Mr. Schlansky for $10, giving in payment a check for $15 50, which was accepted and the balance given him in cash. Moran succeeded in raising in all about $50 in this way before leaving Woonsocket Wednesday night.

Moran was brought before the district court in Ware Monday morning, when he pleaded guilty to forging and passing a check, and also to having another forged check in his possession with intent to pass it. He was bound over to the superior court, which sits in Northampton December 18th. He could not furnish bonds, placed at $500 in each case, and was taken to Northampton and committed for the two weeks intervening.

After Moran's arrest the police interviewed the woman who accompanied him. She at first claimed to be Moran's wife and said that they had been married six or seven years. Later she admitted that she had only known Moran a week, having met him on a boat between New York and Providence. She stated that they had been in Woonsocket two days and Worcester one, before going to Ware on Thursday. She gave her own name as Sadie Albrecht, and said that she was married but had been divorced several years ago, also that she had a stepmother in Jamaica Plain. She was taken into custody and appeared before the district court Monday morning and pleaded guilty to the charge of fornication, but on her promise to return home Judge H. C. Davis ordered the case filed.

FOOTBALL.

Palmer Juniors 11, Work and Win 6.

The Palmer Juniors defeated the Work and Win team of Ware on the driving park last Saturday by a score of 11 to 6 The grounds were wet and muddy and made the playing very disagreeable. In the first half Ware kicked off to Palmer, and the latter by repeated plunges sent Taylor over the line for a touchdown. Brierly then kicked the goal; no more was done in the first half. In the second half Palmer kicked off to Ware; the ball was caught by Roberts, who carried it to Palmer's sixty-yard line. Ware, seeing that they could gain nothing by center-plays against the strong Junior line, were successful in sending McGuire around left end for a touchdown. Savria then kicked the goal tieing the score. The Juniors again kicked off to Ware who lost the ball on a fumble. With nine minutes to play the Juniors put up a strong game in the hope of winning and worked tandem plays with good success; on the third down, with ten yards to go, Brierly was sent over the line for a touchdown; he failed to kick the goal. In the last few minutes of the game Ware played desperately in the hope of winning. The general team work of the Juniors was good; as individuals, Brierly, Paulin and Savria showed up well. The line-up:

Palmer Juniors.	Work and Win.

Touchdowns, Taylor, Brierly, McGuire; goals from touchdowns, Brierly, Savria; goals missed, Brierly; referee, Ferry of Providence State College; umpire, Compton of Ware; timekeeper, St. John of Palmer.

House and Barn Burned.

Bondsville was visited by another fire last Saturday evening, when the house and barn owned by Mrs. Mary May and situated in that part of the village known as "Skeeterville," about a mile and a half from the post office, on the Belchertown road, were burned to the ground. The fire was discovered about 8 30 o'clock in the barn, but had gained such headway that all attempts to save either that or the house were useless. The barn was attached to the house and was soon in flames. Fortunately there were no other buildings very near or they would not have escaped as there was a high wind blowing. The house was occupied by Mrs. May, the owner, and Mrs Sarah Goff. A part of the furniture in the lower part of the house was saved, but everything else was lost, including their clothing. The loss is estimated at $2000, and was insured for $900.

BURGLARS CAPTURED.

Two Caught After Raiding Clothing Store In Warren.

Of recent years Warren has proved an unlucky place for burglars to operate, and an attempt made there Sunday morning proved no exception to the rule. Duncan's clothing store on Main street was entered about 12.30 in the morning and seven overcoats stolen, which property was recovered and the two burglars in the lockup before night, after a busy day for the police.

Entrance to the store was gained by breaking the glass panel in the side door. C. H. Richards, proprietor of the Hotel Ramsdell heard the noise, but did not think of burglars. Later, Edward Moran, clerk in Duncan's store, on returning from Ware, where he had been spending the evening, went to the store to get his laundry, and discovered the break. He immediately notified Mr. Duncan, who in turn notified Sheriff Putnam.

Numerous clews were followed up during the day, but with no results until late in the afternoon, when Mr. Duncan went to the house of John Cote on West Main street and found one of his coats in Frank Gero's room, who boards with Mr. Cote. Gero escaped while Mr. Duncan went after the officer, so Deputy Sheriff Putnam and Mr. Duncan proceeded to the boarding-house of Sayles & Jenks's mill, where they found Edward Pierce and a stolen overcoat in his room About two hours later another clew sent the officers to No 4 mill, where in the stock-house, hiding among cotton bales, Gero was found with one of the coats on. He was lodged in the lockup with Pierce. Pierce told the officers that four more coats were concealed behind a stone wall on the road toward Edward Manning's house and they were found. The coats were valued at over $150 and were not injured.

Pierce and Gero have been employed at Sayles & Jenks's mill about two weeks as weavers, and went to Ware from Pittsfield. They were brought before the district court in East Brookfield Monday morning, when

CENSUS FIGURES.

The State by Counties; Hampden County In Detail.

The revised and final census figures of the state were given out last week, and they show a slight increase over the original total. The revised figures bring the total population up to 3,003,635, instead of the 2,998,958 of the unverified count. In some places there has been a strenuous effort to secure another liquor license by the increase of population, and in certain places this has been accomplished by scraping together every available person. The population and legal voters by counties is as follows:

	Population.	Legal Voters
Barnstable,	26,801	7,203

Death of Mrs. John K. Knox.

Mrs. John K. Knox, 81, died in Springfield Wednesday morning. She had been in declining health for several years, but her death was hastened by an attack of pneumonia several weeks ago, when it became evident that her end was near.

Althina Merrick Fay was born in Monson Sept. 22, 1824. She was the daughter of Rufus F. and Rachel (Taft) Fay, whose home was the farm since owned by Eli N. Fay and his family. She was one of a family of nine children and spent her girlhood days in the home where she first saw the light, gaining her education in the schools of her native town. She married May 21, 1848, John King Knox of Palmer, and in a few years they settled down on the old McMaster place in Palmer, where Mr Knox removed the ancient McMaster dwelling and built a new house, where they lived till some fourteen years ago, when they removed to Three Rivers; but for several years past have made their home in Springfield with their daughter, Mrs Ward.

Mrs Knox united with the Second Congregational church of Palmer in 1877, and retained her membership till death. Mr. and Mrs. Knox celebrated their golden wedding anniversary seven years ago, surrounded by their children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, who rose up to call them blessed

Mrs. Knox was possessed of that genial demeanor, which always made her guests feel at home in her presence, and the latchstring of her home always depended from the outside, a token that the caller was ever welcome, and the cheer of the inner room made him feel the warmth of the welcome in a greater degree than a more formal greeting. As might well be supposed such a woman faithfully contributed her wifely share in maintaining the uniform harmony of a married life of fifty-seven years till the dark-winged messenger sealed her lips in lasting silence, bequeathing a memory beloved to a devoted husband and loving children. The limitations of old age and declining strength have of late years kept Mrs. Knox much at home fostered by the tender care of a daughter's regard, so that her life has been freed from the cares which sometimes remain a burden, when peace and quiet are so essential.

Mrs. Knox is survived by a husband, now 81 years old, and two daughters, Mrs. Erwin G. Ward and Mrs. Frank A. Ruggles, the only son, John M., having died in 1892. The funeral was held to-day from the home of C. S. Ruggles at Three Rivers, who married a granddaughter. The burial was in the Thorndike-street cemetery.

PALMER NEWS.

Meeting of the Historical Society.

There was a full attendance at the meeting of the Historical Society last Tuesday night to enjoy an evening with the Northmen. Mrs. Mary E. Murdock of Thorndike read a thoughtful paper on the Norse Mythology, showing how the sentiment and aspirations of a people are emphasized in its conception of the powers of nature, where it finds its deities and its shrine for worship. The gods of the Northmen were war heroes idealized from their own sturdy, fearless natures, who fought for renown as did the worshippers. The religious ideas of the Northmen fostered in the sagas had much to do in shaping the cause and sending them forth from their narrow northern bounds in conquest. Mr. R. J. Fuller read the second paper, which was a concise and interesting history of the Northmen in Europe. He first gave a sketch of their settlement in Scandinavia, in communities at first which finally developed into several king, ruled nations. He then gave a graphic account of their restless spirit of adventure, of their incursions into adjacent lands, of the conquest and settlement in Normandy, of the first conquest of England by the Danes, of the growth of the Norman power in France, and of their final invasion and conquest of England by William the Norman.

The point was made that while the Normans were not as original as many others in their ideas, yet they excelled in their power of adaptability and organization which has made the English nation second to none, and given it an uplift which it would have lacked but for their presence, and so as the Norman is a dominant factor in the ancestry of a majority of the American people, the study has become of deep interest to us. Both papers received close attention, and all felt well repaid for the hour devoted to their recital.

District Court.

There was an unusual grist in the district court Monday morning, Associate Justice Dillon presiding. Frederick Bigelow of Ludlow agreed to take a pledge for a year, and so was placed on probation until the first Monday in January; Thomas K. Kennedy of North Wilbraham, drunk, case continued until the first Monday in January for sentence. Anthony Coss of Three Rivers, drunk, paid $6. John Higgins, vagrancy, 90 days in the house of correction. Harvey Wentworth, drunk, $11, sent up. The cases of three probationers were also called. The continued case of John Bowden of Wales for assault with a dangerous weapon on Edward S. Dunham was still further continued until to-morrow. Bowden is about 14 years old and recently assaulted Dunham in the mill with a piece of iron pipe, breaking his shoulder blade.

Yesterday morning Martin Shea, for drunkenness, paid a fine of $11.

School Vacations Changed.

The school committee has had under consideration for some time the advisability of making a change in the school term to give more frequent vacations for the lower grades, as is now done in many places, and will inaugurate the change at the end of the present term, when the grade schools will not close until December 22, a week later than the time given in the school report; there will be a vacation of one week then, school beginning again January 2 and continuing until February 23, when there will be another vacation of one week; beginning again March 5 they will keep until April 27, with a week's vacation until May 7, when they will continue to the closing time given in the school report. It is expected in this way, with more frequent rest periods, to relieve the nervous exhaustion experienced by some of the pupils under the former system.

The Get Together Club met at the home of Miss Mabel Oakes on South Main street Tuesday evening. The prizes were taken by Albert Remington and Miss Alice Oakes. The club will meet next week with Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Reynolds on Squier street.

Three classes of the Sunday school of the Baptist church met at the home of L. W. Parkhurst on South Main street Wednesday evening. There were about fifteen in the party and the teachers, Mrs. A. W. Converse, Mrs. L. W. Parkhurst and Mrs S. A. Parkhurst, acted as chaprones.

A horse owned by F. Spaulding ran away Wednesday evening, starting on Walnut street and going as far as Bondsville, where it was stopped. Mr. Spaulding went to Bondsville on the next electric car and found that neither the horse nor the wagon had been hurt by the runaway.

A number of young people in town are rehearsing a drama, to be given in the near future under the auspices of L. L. Merrick Woman's Relief Corps. A number of those taking part were members of the company which gave a very successful entertainment for the corps last winter.

B. Frank Coffin, the wizard of the winds and snows, announces that there will be 28 snow storms this winter. None of them have come yet, the couple of little squalls which we have had not being counted. No storm of any moment will appear until the beginning of the new year, but then—look out!

The Palmer Woman's Club and the Woman's Tuesday Club have received invitations to attend a meeting of the woman's auxiliary of the Massachusetts civil-service reform association, to be held in the art museum in Springfield to-morrow afternoon at 3 There will be an address by Richard H Dana and Mrs. Richard C. Cabot

A meeting of the Palmer Woman's Club will be held at the home of Mrs T. W. Kenefick on Knox street next Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The speaker will be Miss Sarah Cone Bryant of Simmons College, Boston, and she will take for her subject "The way to tell a story." It is hoped that there will be a large attendance of members.

The usual Sunday services will be held at St. Paul's church Sunday. Morning worship at 10 45, with sermon by the pastor, subject, "Capital punishment in human and divine law;" Sunday school at 12, with rehearsal of Christmas music; Junior Y. P. C. U at 4; senior Y. P. C. U. at 6; evening service at 7, subject of sermon, "Jesus and Judas, a comparison."

Bowling for the two turkeys offered by Manager Tufts as prizes for the highest totals of three consecutive strings of candle and bottle pins has begun Joseph Slattery of Palmer holds the lead in candle pins with a score of 285; William Barrett, also of Palmer, has the lead in bottle pins with a score of 538 Slattery's score by strings is 107, 86, 91; Barrett's score by strings is 196, 170, 172

The following officers have been elected by L. L Merrick Woman's Relief Corps: President, Mrs. Lavinia E. Carpenter; senior vice president, Mrs. Augusta Thompson; junior vice president, Mrs. Laura A. Calkins; treasurer, Mrs. Marian Robinson; chaplain, Mrs Belle M. Fish; conductor, Mrs. Bertha B. Carpenter; guard, Mrs. Alta Ramsden; delegate to the state convention, Mrs. Lillian Parkhurst; alternate, Mrs. Abbie J. Lawton.

At a meeting of Quaboag council, Royal Arcanum, Tuesday evening, these officers were elected: Representative to the grand council, G. A. Bennett; alternate, C. E Fish; regent, E. E Hobson; vice regent, L. H. Hunt; orator, C. H. Hobson; chaplain, Rev. W. A. Moore; secretary, James Summers; treasurer, A. B. C. Deming Jr; collector, R. E. Cummings; guide, F. E. Coleman; warden, W. Simpson; sentry, Olio Fairbanks; past regent G A Bennett.

Michael Pisarczyk, a Polish baker of Bondsville, with his cart, met an auto in Thorndike Wednesday. The auto driver tooted his horn while yet a long way off and Pisarczyk, on hearing it threw down his reins and jumped from the wagon. This frightened the horse and he ran, directly toward the auto, which had stopped. The wagon was overturned and the contents deposited in the road, one lug of the harness and a small iron on the wagon broken—otherwise no damage was done.

At the meeting of the Palmer Grange Friday evening the following officers were elected: Master, C. C. Keep; overseer, O. E. Bradway; lecturer, Mrs. Sarah A. Whiting; steward, P. M. Honors For Former Wilbraham Woman.

Mrs Caroline E. Merrick of New Orleans, widow of Judge Edwin T. Merrick, a native of Wilbraham, was given a brilliant reception on the 24th of last month in honor of her 80th birthday. It was given by the Era Club, every other club in the city coöperating, and was in recognition of her consistent and fearless work in behalf of women for many years. Mrs Merrick identified herself from the outset with the Christian Temperance Union, being president of the state organization for 10 years, and on resigning was made honorary state president for life. She was also the pioneer woman suffragist of Louisiana, the first meeting being held in her home, and she was the first public speaker in its behalf in the state. She represented her state at the Woman's International Council in Washington, D. C., in 1888 Mrs Merrick is also an author of considerable talent During her husband's life the family spent several seasons in Wilbraham

SUNDAY LIQUOR SELLING.

The Catholic Total Abstinence Society of Hampden county, at a recent meeting, adopted resolutions against the Sunday selling of liquor in these terms: "The open violations of the liquor laws practiced on Sundays and legal holidays by liquor dealers under the guise of innkeepers we regard as a strong menace to the sobriety and welfare of our citizens; and we call upon the authorities to take immediate measures to suppress it."

Commenting on this action the Springfield Republican of last Sunday had the following:

> The action of the Hampden county total abstinence union, a week ago, calling attention to the loose methods of administering the law in regard to the Sunday selling of liquor in hotels, will meet the approval of all respectable people who are in a position to be informed upon this matter. * * * the ordinary saloon so far as the abuse of the existing liquor law is concerned, is comparatively guiltless. The hotel, both sham and real, is the great offender. Sunday selling and selling out of hours can scarcely take place in the ordinary saloon conducted under a common victualer's license, because there is no place where it can be conducted, without discovery, and no excuse. There is no time better than the present for a start toward an improvement in the administration of the liquor laws in this part of the Connecticut valley. Every one knows that there are at present grave abuses in this line—sprung in some places from laxness and indifference, and in others through more or less active connivance.

That there have been and are "grave abuses" of the law in Palmer is apparent to anyone who takes the least pains to look into the matter. They became so serious a few weeks ago that the attention of the selectmen was called to the condition by a local manufacturer; the sellers were cautioned to observe the law more closely and for a couple of weeks there were "dry" Sundays, but only for a couple. Since then there has been a gradual increase in a return to the old order of things, which bids fair to soon be as bad as ever. Last summer there was a sudden and for a time absolute cessation of Sunday selling, the work of one man who in some way known only to himself had every licensed place where it dared not do otherwise than close tight on the days required by law. Why the pressure was released is as mysterious as the manner in which it was applied, but the incident shows that Sunday selling is not necessary and can be prevented.

A DECISION which will be of interest was that of the full bench of the supreme court on Monday that a pedestrian is not required, when lawfully upon the highway, to keep a lookout for and to dodge automobiles. The case was that of a Fall River woman who was struck by one of these machines, the owner of which claimed that she was negligent in not seeing it approach. This the court decides she was not required to do. The decision is along the generally accepted line that the highways are primarily for the use of pedestrians, and that vehicles privileged to travel upon them must respect the rights of those who travel on foot.

WARE.

Overseers Want More Money.

The selectmen have received a written request from the overseers of the poor, asking for the calling of a special town meeting and for the appropriation of $5000 for their use. The sum of $8000 was appropriated in March, and this is all gone but $45. Some money is due from other towns, but it will not be available soon. The selectmen and overseers held a meeting Tuesday afternoon, and after a two-hours' session it was adjourned until next Monday evening, this being made necessary by the fact that the secretary of the poor department, John T. Casey, was unable to state except in a general way the expenditures of the board so far this year, and because his books were at his home instead of in the town hall building. The meeting was not devoted to criticism by the selectmen of the poor department and its way of managing affairs, but rather to an attempt to have the board produce its records for investigation and consideration in such a manner as to make the request for another appropriation of $5000 at a special town meeting, if one is called, appear reasonable, or necessary.

James E Kennedy, a veterinary surgeon, has opened an office in James Mahoney's livery stable.

Rev. J. Addison Seibert of Cambridge will occupy the pulpit of the East Congregational church Sunday.

P. J. Downey will move his dry goods store January 1 to the Crowley store in the Blood block, now occupied by the clothing firm, G. J. Prew & Co. of Holyoke.

The clothing store of G. J. Prew & Co was closed Wednesday, and the work begun of packing the stock. Mr. Prew, who was in town Wednesday, stated that the goods would be moved to his store in Holyoke.

Mrs. Rosanna Avey, 33, wife of George Lapierre, died at her home on Water street Sunday after a long illness. She leaves, besides her husband, her parents, two brothers and a sister. The funeral was held from Mt. Carmel church Tuesday morning at 8.

Town Treasurer A. F. Richardson has been notified that the corporation tax for Ware this year is $7116 against $6827 last year. The street railway corporation tax has shrunk from $584 last year to $234, owing to the troubles of the Hampshire and Worcester road.

Dr. C. B. Rice of Boston occupied the pulpit of the East Congregational church Sunday morning. He read a letter received during the past week from Rev. George B Hatch of Three Oaks, Mich, in which he declined to accept the call to the pastorate of the church. He gave as his reason a sense of duty to remain where he was and where he felt that he had a special work to perform. The announcement was received with disappointment.

The body of Mrs. Martha A. Lyman, who died Wednesday morning at the home of her daughter, Mrs. F. S. Gates in Springfield, was taken to Ware this afternoon at 1 30 for burial. Mrs. Lyman's first husband was Alanson C. Allen, and it was after his death that she lived in Ware. Her second husband, Henry Lyman, died about seven years ago, but she is survived by three daughters, Mrs Josephine M. Wilcox, Mrs. Ella A. Wilcox and Mrs. Gates, all of Springfield, and two sons, Charles and Dwight Allen of Worcester.

WALES.

Death of George B. Clark.

George B. Clark, 58, died at his home in Wales Saturday morning after a long illness. Mr. Clark spent his boyhood days in Wales, attending the public schools of that place. He entered a woolen mill and learned the business of spinning, advancing to the position of boss spinner. Later he engaged in the manufacture of hats in Westboro, where he resided for many years On account of poor health he was obliged to retire from business and about two years ago bought a home in Wales and had lived there since, carrying on the business of farming on a small scale. He is survived by his wife, one brother, B S. Clark of Whitinsville, and one sister, Mrs. Mrs. S Colburn of Brookfield. The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon.

Of importance to flour buyers.

How is this for an example of Trust methods?

A few weeks ago we cut the price on flour 75 cents per barrel. At that time we had ordered a carload of Washburn & Crosby flour; we stand ready to take and pay for it at any time. But we have been refused this flour because we "disarranged the price of flour between Springfield and Worcester."

But we have succeeded in getting

400 barrels of "Pillsbury's Best,"

which we shall sell for a less price than you are obliged to pay for Washburn & Crosby. It is well known that Pillsbury's Best generally costs at least 50 cents a barrel more than Washburn & Crosby. Now you can buy it of us at a price that is right. For a generation Pillsbury's Best has been known to all users of flour as Best in every sense of the word.

Pillsbury's Best, $5.75 per barrel. 1-8 sacks 75c.
Gloria St. Louis, $4.75 per barrel. 1-8 sacks 60c.

The Man of San Fernandez

By CLINTON ROSS

Copyright, 1905, by American Press Association

I QUITE appreciated Van Brule's embarrassment, for I knew Trilany and all the circumstances of that sorry episode which had thrown him out of the pale by which the conventional keeps itself aloof from the unconventional. What Trilany did, good and bad, was once in everybody's mouth, and in his case, as far as the bad part went, five years had not altogether quieted the scandal—scandal springing up to throttle a man when his deeds have put the cause of it far away from him.

But you who know the sort of chap Jim Trilany is and was—with his impetuousness and his faults and his charm of manner—you need not wonder that when Van Brule ran across him that day he did exactly what he did, impolitic as it was, for nobody in New York invited Jim Trilany then. He was as much forgotten as a man who is dead—socially, I mean—the scandal about him, as I say, never quite getting into oblivion, fools repeating it, and thoughtless people, who were perhaps not altogether fools, carrying it on whenever his name chanced to be mentioned.

Trilany, you know from what he did in Samoa, where he saved his ship, was not the man to "run into his hole" because of what was said about him.

The matter of Van Brule's embarrassment was that Mary Van Brule was giving a dinner. A woman who gives a dinner as successfully as Mrs. Van Brule is no second rate sort of genius. She knows where to place people, and her table rarely fails in the wits being pitted against the person of poor wit—quite cleverly, you know—so that the poor wit is never affronted, and in putting a pretty girl and a clever girl exactly with the right escorts, and the people who go together always together, and the people who go apart always apart—a table as nicely arranged, mind you, as a good chess player arranges his men after the first ten moves.

This particular dinner was one given to Lady and Sir Arthur Grotlin, her majesty's consul to San Fernandez.

Everybody knows, I dare say, about Mrs. Chatwind's marriage to Sir Arthur Grotlin. Mrs. Chatwind met Sir Arthur in Cannes, I believe, and he was a man who had always been in the foreign office, never acquiring any great distinction, always up for some little appointment that paid none too well and supporting the fine manner of the man of the world on a small enough income. When Mrs. Chatwind met Sir Arthur she was fifty and he something about sixty-five, but with an American failing for that sort of thing she had not lost her ambition and was glad to be Lady Grotlin. Although she had a daughter, as everybody knows, who some years before—how many years must I remember? I am getting old myself—was the most attractive young woman at all the important occasions.

After she had married she followed Grotlin to many places around the world, Eleanor Chatwind always in her train, a young woman who could say clever things and leave you wondering what she meant, who had a crowd of admirers, although she was now quite thirty, and who kept them all conjecturing who was preferred and who wasn't. She had been engaged once, and people hadn't forgotten that, because it was connected with what I am telling you about.

Well, two days before that dinner a man failed Mrs. Van Brule, and she called out her husband and told him to find somebody, and what did he do but meet at the club that very evening Trilany, and, forgetting all about Trilany's past and the scandal about him, what did he do but ask him to come around two days after, if in town, to a bit of a dinner his wife was giving. "You must, Jim—you must," he insisted.

Trilany, I think I have said, was a man who never ran away from a scandal; but, on the other hand, he was the last man in the world to go to a house where that old matter might embarrass his hostess and his host. So I can't quite account for his accepting this invitation, save for the very persuasive force that Pierre Van Brule possesses and because particularly he always had a strong influence on Trilany. At any rate, he accepted.

When Van Brule told his wife she exclaimed in horror:

"Why, you know, the dinner is for the Chatwinds. Don't you remember?"

Then Pierre did remember, and that was the cause of his embarrassment.

Without describing it myself, I think I may as well tell what happened when Trilany went into that house. Mrs. Merryweather, who remembers everything, remembered it.

"That man here?" she cried—in a whisper, of course—to Daisy Barton, who remarked that he was very handsome, and then said all at once, "Oh, do tell me what it is about!"

"Why, don't you know?" said that dear old gossip, who enjoys more meddling with other people's affairs than with her own. "He is Trilany—Lieutenant Trilany used to be—and he did some wonderfully fine things, I believe, once. Saved a ship out in Samoa in that awful hurricane—you remember. Then about a year after he was acting captain somewhere on the Pacific station, and he had been going to pieces for some time, I think, for they talked about it in Yokohama, and the rumor reached over here, saying that he was drinking himself to death. In a fog off Hongkong the Tarrytown, his ship, was run down. The crew for the most part were saved, but twenty were lost, three officers too. Lieutenant Trilany was court martialed, and it was proved that he was not capable of doing anything at that time. He was dismissed from the service in utter disgrace. I am told he has not drunk a drop since. But he's not one of the men you know now. You see, the Trilanys are a good New York family, too, and he was very much in it once. Well, well—well, well! Men do such queer things, and I'm not saying that women don't do queerer."

"Oh, dear," said Daisy, "how interesting! I could just fall in love with a man like that."

"Not really in love?" said Mrs. Merryweather, turning.

"Oh, I don't believe people do that nowadays, do they?" said Daisy, with an innocent air.

The hostess, you may believe, in the meantime was fidgeting. Never was a hostess in a greater dilemma, and when presently the Grotlins and Miss Chatwind entered she had that vague, helpless feeling that she wished the floor to open and swallow her, although she was usually capable of standing on any floor, even did it open.

Sir Arthur came across with his foreign office manner—an exaggerated manner of having done things which hid his minor achievements—and Lady Grotlin, quiet, red faced, important, and behind a tall, slim, fair girl, who looked up suddenly with a little gasp, dropped her fan to hide her embarrassment, which Dickie Burton picked up in his effusive way, she forgetting to thank him. Her eyes were now on a man in the corner across the room; now away from him.

Mrs. Merryweather, still beside Daisy, leaned over and in her deep whisper that tells all the news of the world one wants to know said:

"You know, they say, it was that girl who ruined that man."

Daisy leaned forward to hear more. "Do tell me!" she said.

But the hostess was arranging the couples, and she did not hear them.

How that dinner went on is one of Mrs. Van Brule's deep chagrins. Never was a dinner more stupid, nor did the wine seem to raise the spirits. As for the unexpected guest, he said nothing in particular and then suddenly—after the fish, I believe—began to talk with a calm, admirable self possession. He looked across at Miss Chatwind and remarked, "I haven't seen you in a long time." Miss Chatwind, usually so self possessed, said nothing in particular. She seemed frozen. She was not often that way.

After dinner—the hostess thanking her stars that it was over—Trilany was alone for a moment. When the men had come in from their cigars he loitered behind, and when he came out he met Miss Chatwind in the hall.

"I was waiting for you," she said.

"Oh, were you?" he replied coldly.

"I wanted to tell you again"—

"Oh, don't let's talk about it!" he said. "Come, do let me take you back in!"

They entered the room together, and the hostess for the first time felt relief, since, after all, perhaps she had not made so bad a faux pas. As for what happened afterward I haven't very clear evidence. From what I now know about it I am quite sure that conversation between those two young people was not very amiable.

* * * * * * *

I have started this story with this account of what happened at Mrs. Van Brule's dinner because it makes plain more easily than I otherwise could the strange events that followed and which are only explainable on the ground that Trilany was a man like no other man—a man who would win back, although the world was against him.

It was after most of the appointments had been made that I myself ran across him in Washington. He had applied for the chance of retrieving himself—any sort of appointment in the service. But the administration and the department, which had so many appointments at their disposal, had no leniency for a man who had gone through so utter a disgrace. He seemed to have no chance at all, and finally he believed that he had none save such as he could create out of his own forceful will.

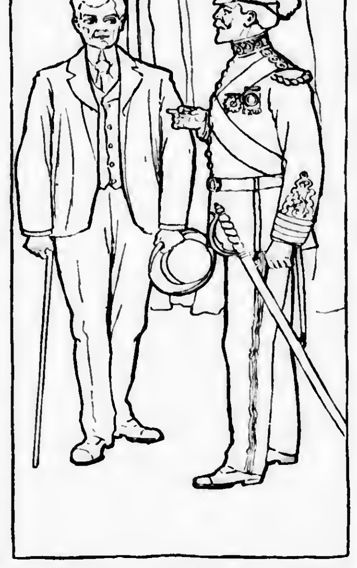
Some time afterward General Miguel de Gonzales, commandant at San Fernandez, received a visit from a man he had known, though this man was completely worn down and a vestige of his former self. General Miguel de Gonzales, you may remember if you were about Washington some years before, on his upward career in Spanish politics and diplomacy had been military attache of the Spanish legation, and at that time he had known Lieutenant Trilany, who was a man in evidence about the clubs when he was off duty and a man of considerable wealth and social position who did a great deal of very charming entertaining—a man at that time to know.

General Gonzales knew the subsequent events of his career, and so he was not altogether surprised when he turned up at San Fernandez with this story: He had crossed from Key West with a Cuban expedition. They had effected a landing, but had been scattered by the coast guard. His real object, he told General Gonzales, was not to join the insurgents, but to go directly and offer his services to a man whom he knew out of a spirit of revenge, which perhaps a Spanish officer could understand. He had no wish to do anything but fight against a land that would give him no chance of retrieving himself—in fact, like the hero in Everett Hale's story, he was a man without a country.

General Gonzales reflected considerably on this proposition. Trilany's knowledge of Spanish manners—he at one time had been a naval attache at Madrid—was complete, and so he had been able to reach San Fernandez without any great suspicion being aroused as to his nationality after he had once escaped from the coast guard. He was a man who might serve well, Gonzales reflected, in his force, for despite the assertion of so many Spaniards Gonzales had a wholesome respect for the mechanical knowledge possessed by American officers. He had just lost by death from yellow fever the man who knew more about the guns of the fortifications of San Fernandez than any one else. The loss had seemed irreparable, and here was a chance, if this man were sincere in his assertion that he had deserted his nationality, of gaining a man who might be equally as valuable as the one he had lost, if not more so. But could he trust this Trilany? Now, the Spanish temper, from my own knowledge of it, about men's motives differs very considerably from the Anglo-Saxon. A Spaniard may be a man with high notions of honor and still believe that the primitive emotions control men to a great extent in love and hate and war, and that revenge is something that will seize a man and hold him until he acts out of it.

This man Trilany was utterly disgraced by his countrymen. He was a man, on the other hand, whom Senor Gonzales had every reason to believe had given up those bad habits which had ruined him. He saw him once, twice, a third time. Trilany was a good deal of a diplomat. His force won over the commander of San Fernandez, and he ended by receiving an appointment in the Spanish garrison. From having the appointment, to a man of this character, it was not far from having an ascendency over the officers about him. He knew more than they about guns, and his skill and marksmanship were something that he seemed likely to be able to impart to his advantage.

Now, strange circumstances had brought together and cooped up in that little Cuban seaport the English consul's stepdaughter, Miss Chatwind, a girl of American birth, and this Trilany, who was betraying his country. Senor Gonzales in the limited round of society there had found the English consul's house a most entertaining spot, and the entertainment, you may believe, lay much in Miss Chatwind's eyes. He was probably reticent about his affairs, but one day in a spirit of exultation and perhaps to counteract the report that was then current in San Fernandez that Admiral Cervera's fleet has been dispersed by Commodore Schley he told the story of how he believed that many Americans were coming over to Spain. He had one good man, anyway, who wasn't appreciated at home.



He ended by receiving an appointment.

"You may know him, Miss Chatwind; a Lieutenant Trilany."

She looked at him with a dull horror.

"Do you mean that man has given up his country?"

"Of course—most certainly. He is here."

She was not very talkative after that. The next morning, close after sunrise, a woman came out of the consul's house and went up the narrow street to the old cathedral and entered and knelt down and then went half hesitatingly and confessed to the priest, although she was not a Romanist, for even self contained women may be carried away by impulse, such being the safeguard given them, and it is sometimes quite as bad to be too much self contained as to be too impulsive.

Days passed—days of event, days of rumor, days when the scurrying fleet could be seen from the back hills, days when General Gonzales was exalted and then depressed and when Sir Arthur Grotlin felt himself more busy than ever before in any of his other appointments.

One afternoon a servant from the British consulate brought a letter to Lieutenant Trilany.

A Spanish colony in wartimes is a queer sort of place in our good Anglo-Saxon sense of "queer." There are those little officers all about, and now and then a big man, but not very often, and then the little soldiers of an earnest gesticulating race are not gesticulating quite so much as the little chaps we see in France. Among these you would see in the wartime at San Fernandez a tall, dark, earnest faced man, very well kept now, though he had come there shabby in mind and health and dress.

When the food supply began to get a bit reduced, as it did, and the townsfolk went around begging of the officials in some way to secure more beef, more oatmeal, more anything, it was this man whose quiet, calm demeanor was of extreme assistance to General Gonzales in quieting a populace that so easily might be turned into a mob. Although for the most they did hate the Yankees when their stomachs were empty, the craving desire for food was more than racial prejudice.

This officer, the renegade American, if you will, had, as has been told, a very keen knowledge of projectiles and no mean information about engineering, for since his dismissal from the United States navy, being a man of means, he devoted himself to the careful study of engineering topics, both in France, where that science is so well advanced, and in Germany. He brought to San Fernandez a mind well equipped and the judgment which made his knowledge extremely useful. So it followed very naturally, he having reached the point of being completely trusted, that he knew every mine, for he had located most of them, as well as every gun of the shore works.

To return to the woman in the case, for one must always return to her sooner or later in every case, Trilany had long been aware of Lady Groffin's and her daughter's presence in San Fernandez. Although he at one time had put them quite out of mind, or supposed he had, he found himself rather troubled about the British consul having his family in so dangerous a spot, and then he remembered that nobody could withstand Lady Groffin's will. Her nature craved excitement and variety, and she doubtless saw that she was laying up many good future dinner stories from the experience to be gathered at San Fernandez.

About this time Trilany had the note, which ran:

"I am writing this not because I care about you at all—and, although I know that once I treated you very badly, if it may not appear vain of me to say so—but I am writing it because in those days you certainly were a gentleman—at least you seemed so to me—and I can't understand the degradation, so far beyond the former, to which you have sunken. The only charitable supposition I can have is that you are mad. I don't know why I am writing this, but the whole case seems so fearful that a man who has once been an officer in his country's service should go completely over to her enemy and sell himself out of petty pique, for after all it's petty, and it's only conceit that leads us to exaggerate our personal affairs to so much importance as you have put yours.

"You will understand from this how thoroughly I despise you, and perhaps I have taken the pains to tell you because I do despise you, although, of course, you may not care about my opinion."

Days passed—days of excitement that was not suppressed, days when people paid extraordinary sums to get away and could not get away even with more extraordinary ones, days when every break in the line of the horizon outside of the harbor was watched with apprehension—not only with apprehension, but with fearsomeness—and when again there were lines of the blockading fleet or plucky gunboats getting in range of the fire of the ports, when brisk cannonading added to the impressiveness of it all. The British consul, Trilany heard, had sent his wife and stepdaughter back into the country somewhere to a safe place well garrisoned, although he was forced to remain at his post.

A misty morning came, a haze and downpour of the rainy season, when everything is moist, when out of the moisture comes that lassitude that seizes your muscles and nerves and leaves you quavering, the lassitude which perhaps is a warning that the fever has taken you. On such a morning suddenly a line of ships, despite the mines, appeared in the narrow entrance of San Fernandez, and then a downpour of shot and a rise of smoke and a hail of noise fell over that community. The forts replied stubbornly, persistently. General Gonzales was everywhere, for he was a brave man. No man had more physical bravery. Suddenly an officer came flying to him.

"Half the guns are spiked. We can't answer back."

What a rage there was then! What ineffectual anger!

Yet with the unspiked guns they kept up a brave resistance and so strong a one that the invaders at last put out to sea, leaving many of the defenses, to be sure, crumbling and some twenty soldiers killed and half a dozen persons wounded and another half a dozen dead among the blameless townsfolk, for the logic of battle is that noncombatants shall be hurt and perish as well as combatants.

A great and thorough investigation occurred that night. The tall American stood before General Gonzales and said almost sneeringly:

"Yes, you're right, general; I spiked the guns. I was here to do it. I couldn't serve—they didn't give me a chance. But I would serve. There's the story. Stand me up against the wall and shoot me. That ends the rest of it. I am not going to shrink from the usage of war, and a very proper usage it is."

Now, they say, Trilany was marched out, and the executioners stood in line,

England's heir to the throne, Prince Edward of Wales, now 11 years old, is a humorist. King Edward asked him the other day what he was studying, and the little prince said, "All about Perkin Warbeck." Asked who Warbeck was, he replied: "He pretended he was the son of a king, but he wasn't. He was the son of respectable parents"—Christian Register.

After living over 99 years without any serious illness, Mrs Matilda Scott of Bellville, Mifflin county, Pa., five months ago pricked her forehead with a pin. Cancer resulted and she died last week. She was the mother of twelve children, and gave seven sons to the Union army in the civil war. She was the second oldest woman in central Pennsylvania, and would have reached 100 next February.

Evelyn is very cowardly, and her father decided to have a serious talk with his little daughter. "Papa," she said at the close of his lecture, "when you see a cow, ain't you 'fraid?" "No, certainly not, Evelyn." "When you see a humble-bee, ain't you 'fraid?" "No!" with scorn. "Ain't you 'fraid when it thunders?" "No!" with laughter. "Oh, you silly, silly child!" "Papa," said Evelyn, solemnly, "ain't you 'fraid of nothin' in the world but mamma?"

Senator Depew occasionally delves into the capacious and well-filled subway of his memory and brings to light something new in the way of anecdote. While returning from abroad on his latest trip he overheard a heated dispute as to the respective merits of America and England. The disputants were a prominent statesman whose reputation for laconic repartee is international. "My country," shouted the Yankee, "knows no east, no west, no north, no south!" "Aw, indeed? What a blawstedly ignorant country!" drawled the Englishman.

A naval officer, according to the Buffalo Commercial, told of the trials of a colleague in marrying off his many daughters. In the same family was a son, an observant lad of ten years. Toward the close of the winter the officer informed his son, that he was going to lose his sister Ethel, who was engaged to wed a young lieutenant. "I'm sorry to hear that, dad," said the youngster, "because I'm awfully fond of Ethel. Still, we'll have Alice and Eva and Maud and Susie, won't we?" Then, after a moment's reflection, he added: "By the way, dad, this arrangement will advance Alice a number, won't it?"

The Man of San Fernandez.

muskets raised, when an orderly rushed up and ordered them lowered.

The prisoner was marched away, to be shut up in the Morro castle, for it had been discovered that he must not die, because no man in San Fernandez knew the location of the mines—the exact location of all of them, that is—save this self confessed traitor. That knowledge must be had. The gunboats, or the two that were left—there had been five—could not stir about. The situation was most remarkable, and certainly from the point of view of General Gonzales and his officers it was terrible. For himself the general saw nothing but court martial and the extreme sentence, for his weakness had given the man the position.

The prisoner was brought before him again. Yes, he knew, but he would not tell. They did not know what to do with him. The only plan recurring to them was to hold him up by his thumbs, a method pursued on Spanish ships. They let him down when he had lost consciousness, his hands torn out of shape, but he had not said a word—in fact, it was three days after this before he could speak coherently.

The British consul told his family the episode. One day Miss Chatwind presented herself at General Gonzales' quarters. She asked very briefly if, because she had known the prisoner in the old days, she might not see him. The general had been extremely devoted to the young lady, although it may not have been altogether jealousy which prompted him to give her a refusal. Her insistence against his duty did not avail. But she persuaded her stepfather to let her remain in San Fernandez for the present, even if he were much against it.

Four days after this Trilany in his cell, somewhat recovered from the ordeal through which he had passed, heard the bolts drawn and the jailer appeared, although it was not his usual hour. The man explained in a very few words that he had arranged for his escape. He listened with the utmost astonishment. The man went on and said:

"I have been well paid for it, and I propose to get away with you where they can't catch me. A boat will be waiting at midnight outside of Pinos point," Pinos point being about four miles from the southerly entrance to the harbor of San Fernandez and well removed from the works.

* * * * * * * *

That night this was accomplished, and the jailer and his prisoner under the cover of a most dark night put out to sea. The next morning the little boat was picked up by one of the newspaper tugs following the fleet. There were two rowers, a man in the uniform of a Spanish infantry sergeant and a man hollow eyed and worn down, who seemed to talk rather incoherently and then stopped talking, but finally asking to be sent at once to the admiral or the senior captain.

It chanced that a portion of the American fleet on its way back to the waters of Havana next day passed the tug. The strange man had impressed the reporters in the boat, and, although they could not place his nationality, they thought he had something to say. As they could not get it out of him, they made an effort to secure him the audience desired. He declared he would not see any lesser officer than the one in command. The newspaper men in the meantime sent word by way of Key West of the story, making it very significant.

Three days later the captain saw the man. He thought his face was familiar, but he was not sure. The man had some paper given him. In the cabin he sat down and drew a military map. Turning, he said:

"There, sir (it was after a half hour or more), is the location of every gun, every mine, every defense of every sort in or about the harbor of San Fernandez."

"How am I to believe you? Who are you, anyway?"

"I was once, sir, James Trilany, lieutenant of the service."

Then the captain knew the resemblance he had noticed.

"Sir," he replied, "you'll be a lieutenant of the service again—and you are now!"

* * * * * * * *

Before we had war it was a story that was told. When it came it was a real story, and this, believe me, is a part of the real story, with, thrown in, the strangeness of a woman's temper—that unaccountable she whom you never can quite solve and perhaps whom we should never care about so much could we solve. At least one of the pleasures of life is the game of chance, and no game dealing with chance has quite so many chanceful circumstances as that one game which men call woman. They, on their side, doubtless could prove as good an argument.

Now, to go back a bit, you must fancy again this young woman whom I have been talking about and who suddenly heard of a man whom once she had treated ill and whom after all—perhaps because she had treated him so ill—she had thought enough about to write a scathing note when she found him in a position impossible for her to think of in connection with a man whose character had seemed entirely different.

Then suddenly she heard that she was wrong and that he had been in this affair at San Fernandez as a spy, which is a career defensible in war and perhaps quite as necessary as that of the combatants who are engaged openly and who may hope for everything they may do to receive praise from their people, for the spy takes all the risk and the complete risk of an ignominious death, with little reward in view and the knowledge that his service perhaps never can be spoken of.

To Eleanor Chatwind the news which her stepfather sent came like a great shock. She had wronged this man as completely perhaps as she had wronged him before. She did not believe that he cared in the least degree whether she had or she had not. She had not this defense for her vanity. In fact, vanity, which is usually a dearer possession to women than to men, she put utterly aside, completely ignored it as if it had never existed, when she took that hasty, that impulsive, journey to San Fernandez, and yet who among her friends or acquaintances would have held her a woman of the slightest impulse? But, as the proverb runs, never say your last word about any woman, although you may about any man.

She had gone to General Gonzales under that same impulse and had been refused, as you know, and then she had thought about the situation and what she could do. There is a saying—I have forgotten who coined it, but it is a rather old one—that the art of diplomacy should have been practiced by women, and it has been proved—how many times in France?—by those charming ladies who adroitly, cleverly, through the post of king's favorite, turned the destiny of a nation. Nor has it gone without good confirmation in Scotland and England, where more than once an intriguing woman has made treaties and policies.

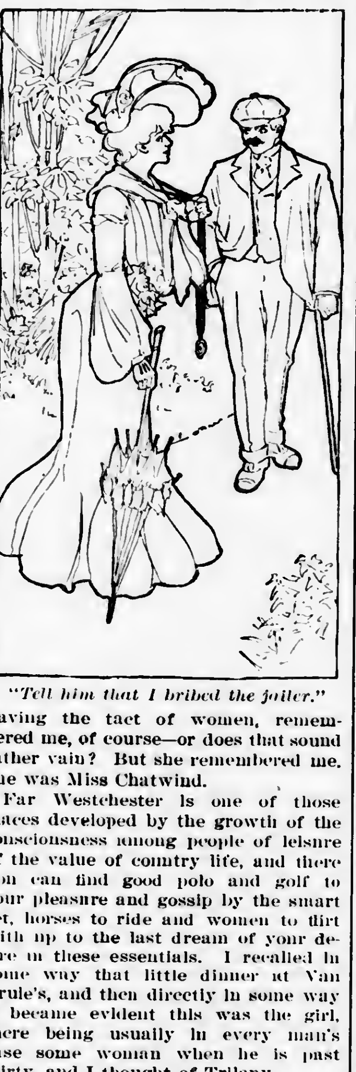
How Miss Chatwind went at her affair is still a matter of some uncertainty, but she found exactly the friends and the intimates of the jailer. She went into a shabby little street—shabby even in San Fernandez—and met him. She found that he might be bribed and dared it, and he was bribed, as you know. He, I believe, did the rest, and there is the whole story told, which you have read in its other detail. And now there are more details, particular details, which will not quite be brought out here, but which I can tell from my own observation of the case, and you can think about them.

You must go back to New York, that most interesting and changing town, for though I believe there is London, it is London, and though I know my Paris as well as most men who have not been art students and do not know it too well, and though I know my Rome a bit and have loafed about there an Easter week and of miasmatic summers, know it from the Villa Borghese to the new American hotel; though I know my Monte Carlo and have gambled there and lost, and won, perhaps, experience; though I know all these places in a not too boastful way, I am free to confess after them all that New York is quite understandable.

Let us say in this digression that years ago it was provincial, but lately it has awakened, and the sheer force of the cosmopolitanism, of the many peoples gathered there from all the ends of the earth, the big and the little ends, has forced on it the potentiality of a great capital.

Lately I have begun to suspect that it has a bit of French in its temper, for I woke up in the morning and found a city which was my very own, whose only exciting recent battle hitherto had been over politics, say Tammany or its defeat, or over the comment excited by some millionaire or millionairess' ball—I woke up to find this same town all afire with a military fever which never had seemed possible. Well, a great city, a big aggregation of people, takes on in its entirety the characteristics of the individual, becomes, in fact, the composite individual. Oh, but let's stop philosophizing, because I have this story to end.

The main point of the story was that I went up to dinner at far Westchester at the Renews'. If you are anybody, you ought to have been invited there some time or another, so I need not explain; if you are nobody, I do not want to explain. I was put near a tall, fair, interesting young women whom I seemed to remember, and she, saving the tact of women, remembered me, of course—or does that sound rather vain? But she remembered me. She was Miss Chatwind.



"Tell him that I bribed the jailer."

Far Westchester is one of those places developed by the growth of the consciousness among people of leisure of the value of country life, and there you can find good polo and golf to your pleasure and gossip by the smart set, horses to ride and women to flirt with up to the last dream of your desire in these essentials. I recalled in some way that little dinner at Van Brule's, and then directly in some way it became evident this was the girl, there being usually in every man's case some woman when he is past thirty, and I thought of Trilany.

Now, it happened that as I walked on the lawn I ran across her alone—and why should so entertaining a young woman be alone?—and I thought I was equal to her lack.

But she nonplused me. She took away my vanity, turning suddenly and saying:

"You are Lieutenant Trilany's friend?"

"Yes," said I. "He has been restored to his rank, I believe, and has been assigned to one of the new auxiliary cruisers."

"Do you know the story—why?" she asked.

I looked at her with some discretion, for the story was not known. It was said that Trilany, long in the service, had been employed as a spy by the government, and his restoration to an appointment had been due entirely to the government's consideration of what he could accomplish. No hint had so much as been given of the circumstance that the man had undertaken it by himself, without any encouragement save his own will to do. The government on its part had not mentioned it; Trilany on his own had not breathed it. He was restored; that was all.

I looked at her curiously there in the moonshine.

"Did he tell you?" she asked. "You know him very well."

I waited, considering my answer.

"Well, you know," I said at last, "we were good chums in the old days, and he told me."

I faced her.

"Ah, you know the story?"

"I know the story. I was down there then."

She hesitated and burst out:

"I wish you would tell him some time or other, you know him so well, though I don't care what he thinks about me. I wrote him the most abominable note once, not believing in him. I wish you would tell him that I bribed the jailer; that I contrived his escape."

And she paused, and a sob escaped her, and I wish you would know that when a woman sobs I am completely unmanned. If I dared to confess it, if a woman shed tears I would do anything for her—more than she wanted, doubtless—and many a man who has been armor proof has found himself defeated by a tear on the lash.

But with her the tears did not last, for she suddenly turned and her voice was dry and set, for she was angry enough, I can assure you, at herself, at me, for having heard her confession, and her voice was the voice of a little girl who is piqued.

"I hate you. No, I beg your pardon. I didn't mean to be so unconventional. What I meant to say was that I despise myself for saying what I didn't mean. It was all false."

And she ran into the house, and I failed because of her obstinacy to get near her the rest of that evening, and the next day the Renews' house party ceased. I bade my farewell to Mrs. Renew without seeing again that one of her guests who was most interesting to me, for I was wondering what she was driving at, and I decided to tell Trilany the story, happen what would.

You can see the ending of this, of course, the rules of sentimental stories being all the same. Women wish that which they cannot have, and men sometimes. Our convictions do not govern our impulses any more than our impulses our convictions.

He was sitting in the club, awaiting his orders, for he was fully reinstated in everybody's respect by this time, when I took him aside and told him of my experience at the Renews' as if it were simply no more than a bon mot, but I declare it was a deal more to him.

As for the sequel, let me tell you. There are times when you cannot help overhearing people's conversation. I sat in the corner somewhere, and I heard Mrs. Merryweather talking—could not help it—for as much as you may dislike to overhear conversation you must overhear Mrs. Merryweather's secretive communications, which are given in a loud, falsetto voice.

This is what she said:

"Have you heard?"

"Oh, yes! Isn't it extraordinary?"

Then said Mrs. Merryweather: "Oh, I don't know. It seems to me, from my experience, that girls who throw over men in the end usually get them."

An Otter Feeding.

A correspondent of the London Field tells how he was once able to watch an otter on the feed in the Wye for about half an hour. Attracted by what seemed at first like a large fish jumping out of the water at short intervals, like a porpoise, he presently saw that it was an otter on the feed. The water was running at about three miles an hour and was about two feet deep where the salmon were lying. The otter kept in the shallows and dived at intervals of some ten seconds, moving gradually upstream. Now and again there was a great splashing as a fish was caught and eaten. Once he landed and ran about on a small island, but soon resumed his fishing, with no attempt at concealment. The railway and a public road were near at hand, but nothing seemed to disturb him, nor did he once stop to look round for danger signals.

Th[illegible]

In the early days of [illegible] railway building, days not so long gone by as to be out of memory, there were many exciting races between rival roads for the possession of important mountain passes. Such a race, says the World's Work, was that between the Santa Fe and the Rio Grande roads for the right of way through Raton pass to New Mexico and the southwest.

Engineers and construction gangs worked in mad haste to get to it ahead of their rivals. The victory fell to the chief of the Santa Fe. When the Rio Grande cohorts arrived they found him alone in one of the big gorges, shovel in hand, slicing earth from an 8,000 foot hill.

"What are you doing here?" they asked.

"Constructing a railroad," he replied. He turned another shovelful of dirt, dropped the tool and hitched up his heavy cartridge belt.

"Any one who interferes with the Santa Fe does it at his own risk," he said quietly.

First the Rio Grande men laughed, and then they raged, and then they turned and went away. Their road was cut off from the south forever.

A Diplomatic Answer.

Admiral Drake when a lad at the beginning of his first engagement was observed to shake and tremble very much and, being rallied upon it, observed with a presence of mind, or, at all events, of humor, in which even Nelson was lacking, "My flesh trembles at the anticipation of the many and great dangers into which my resolute and undaunted head will lead me."

First Treaty of Portsmouth.

The first treaty of Portsmouth, N. H., was signed July 11, 1713, the contracting parties being belligerent Indians and the whites. The news of the treaty of Utrecht, which ended Queen Anne's war, reached the city Oct. 29, 1712. The Indians desired a treaty, and it was formally signed on the above date.

For Thin Babies

Fat is of great account to a baby; that is why babies are fat. If your baby is scrawny, Scott's Emulsion is what he wants. The healthy baby stores as fat what it does not need immediately for bone and muscle. Fat babies are happy; they do not cry; they are rich; their fat is laid up for time of need. They are happy because they are comfortable. The fat surrounds their little nerves and cushions them. When they are scrawny those nerves are hurt at every ungentle touch. They delight in Scott's Emulsion. It is as sweet as wholesome to them.

The Name of China.

We speak of China and the Chinese, little thinking that the natives of the Flowery Kingdom never hear those terms until after leaving the place of their birth or coming in contact with some traveler. They have many names by which they designate themselves and the land which they inhabit, but Chinese and China are not among the number. The most ancient name of China is Tienhai, which signifies "beneath the sky." Since the present ruling house took control of the empire in 1650 the name of Tatsingkwoh has been applied to the kingdom as a whole and Chungkwoh to that portion known to American readers as the Middle Kingdom.

He Looked Honest.

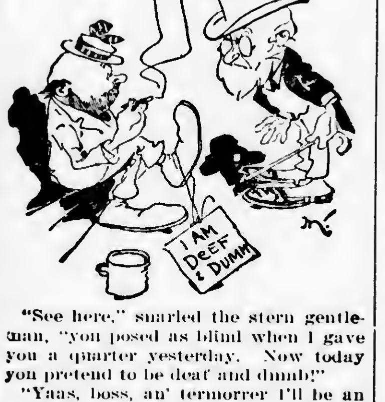
Uncle Snowball—Shoo, boy, I wouldn't dun be afraid to trust no man dat had sich an open countenance as yo' got.

He Was Generous.



"See here," snarled the stern gentleman, "you posed as blind when I gave you a quarter yesterday. Now today you pretend to be deaf and dumb!"

"Yaas, boss, an' termorrer I'll be an explosion victim, an' de nex' day a paralytic, an' de nex' day—well, boss, I believe in givin' patrons some variety for their money."—San Francisco Examiner.

The Antalgica

Or Vegetable Pain Reliever

was introduced to the public in 1848, since which time thousands of bottles have been sold each year to an appreciative public, which is a good evidence of its merits. It is adapted to so many ailments it should be in every household, for it cures all kinds of pains both internal and external. For Bronchial affections it is unrivaled by any article in the market. It is a sure cure for Cholera Morbus and Dysentery, if taken in season, also for Coughs. It is an effective remedy for rheumatic affections, stiff joints, swelled limbs, sprains, cramps, tooth ache and many other ills to which the flesh is heir. Try it and it will do you good It is sold at 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle by The Quimby Pharmacy, LeGro's Drug Store and the proprietor,

Straight Talks on Patent Medicines

The "Rexall" Remedies are successful and this is why.

They were placed on the market three years ago. They have scored already the record of the greatest success ever known in the history of the drug business.

"Come and go" popularity may arise from any number of causes (hullabaloo advertising among them) and may or may not be founded on real worthiness. But the man, the plan, the idea, or the article that truly succeeds, does so because he or it deserves to succeed, and for no other reason.

The success of the "Rexall" Remedies is therefore the first evidence of their real merit. They sell because they cure, and they cure because each one of them is the best remedy known to medical science for the particular ailment it is made to relieve.

There are nearly 200 remedies sold under the "Rexall" name, each for one disease or one purpose. Each of these has been selected by a committee of experts from among all other remedies of its class, for manufacture and sale by The United Drug Company, a co-operative association of leading American druggists.

Wherever you see the name "Rexall," you may know that it stands for a formula scientifically correct and proved efficient in actual, long extended practice. We know these formulas and are glad to answer all inquiries regarding them, giving full information as to the ingredients.

Here are three famous members of the "Rexall" family:

FOR CATARRH—MUCU-TONE

The chief ingredients of Mucu-Tone are Gentian, Cubebs, Cascara Sagrada, Glycerine, and Sarsaparilla.

Gentian is recognized in medicine as one of the greatest tonics ever discovered. It is the foundation on which Mucu-Tone is built. Gentian combines in high degree the tonic powers of all the known "bitters," with none of the disadvantages applying to them.

Cubebs have long been recognized as a specific in the treatment of all catarrhal conditions. Its action is prompt and its benefit almost invariable. In whatever part of the body the inflamed or diseased condition of the mucous membrane exists, the use of Cubebs has been recommended by the best physicians for many generations.

Cascara Sagrada is especially introduced for its necessary laxative properties.

The combination of these with Glycerine and Sarsaparilla makes Mucu-Tone a remedy that attacks catarrh from every point, gradually restores and rebuilds the diseased tissues to their former health and strength, promotes digestion and creates a normal appetite. Bottle, 50c.

CHERRY JUICE COUGH SYRUP

A new idea in Cough Syrups.

This preparation owes its efficiency to the presence of Wild Cherry, Vinegar Squills, Boneset, Horehound and Syrup.

All of these have been known for a hundred years as remedies for coughs and hoarseness.

In Rexall Cherry Juice Cough Syrup, all of these remedies have been combined by a process of manufacture that has blended them into a perfect medicinal harmony whereby the characteristics of each support and reinforce the others.

The pathological properties of each ingredient does its own particular work in easing the inflamed membranes, loosening the phlegm and setting up a condition of health in the bronchial and nasal passages.

One spoonful will relieve the inflamed membranes and temporarily stop the cough. One bottle will work a cure. It is exceedingly pleasant to the taste—children like it. Per Bottle, 25c.

FOR NERVES—AMERICANITIS ELIXIR

The Rexall Americanitis Elixir is a tonic nerve food composed chiefly of Free Phosphorus, Glycophosphates, Iron Pyrophosphate and Calisaya.

The wonderful results of this remedy are due to the fact that it supplies Phosphorus to the nerve cells in a condition in which it can be immediately and easily taken up by them. It is the only known preparation in which free Phosphorus, that is, Phosphorus which remains indefinitely unoxidized, is used.

The Glycophosphates, actual nerve tissue builders, are one of the most recent and valuable additions to the field of this branch of medicine and unquestionably a more efficient remedy than the well known hypophosphites.

The Iron Pyrophosphates is the most easily assimilated form of iron which gives tone and color, and the combined alkaloids of Calisaya Bark have a tonic effect on almost all the functions of the body.

In compounding these various elements, the very highest degree of pharmaceutical skill has been employed. 75c. and $1.50 a bottle.

This "Rexall" Guarantee Appears on each package:
"This preparation is guaranteed to give satisfaction. If it does not, come back and get your money. It belongs to you and we want you to have it."

ROYAL

The Absolutely Pure Baking Powder

Made of Cream of Tartar, and Free From Alum or Phosphatic Acid

Royal Baking Powder renders bread, biscuit, cake and all flour foods finer and more healthful.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Baking powders made from alum, phosphates and other harsh, caustic acids are lower in price, but they are injurious to the stomach.

"The injurious effect of alum on the mucous coat of the stomach is positive and beyond dispute; it is both an irritant and an astringent. The use of alum in any article of food or article used in the preparation of food should be prohibited."

Our Boston Letter

It tells about

Proposed New Race Track Near Lowell—More of the Speakership Contest—The Garrison Centennial—Death of "Billy" Hunt—The Boston Mayorality Campaign.

BOSTON, DEC 6, 1905.

One of the state house men who lives in Lowell reports to-day that the good people of that city are much disturbed over the establishment of a big race course and supposed gambling concern in Salem, N. H., only a few miles over the state line This forenoon there has been a hearing before the railroad commissioners in which the proposition seemed to enter somewhat. Further favors are wanted by the street railway combination which serves the territory in question and which runs partly in Massachusetts, so that it has to come before our railroad commissioners. One of the parties at the hearing was Mayor Wood of Haverhill, who is described as "something of a sporting man and likely to know about such things" He gave the commissioners to understand that the race track enterprise would surely go through to success, and when one of his associates rather questioned it, he replied that he was acquainted with Gov. McLane of New Hampshire, and he put his statement so that it seemed as if he reckoned upon his acquaintance to promote the job. The Lowell representative affirms to-day that the concern, which is a New York enterprise, with August Belmont as one of its backers and Andrew Miller president, under the name of the New England Breeders' Club, has got a special charter for some three miles square and it is under such terms that no constable or police can ever enter the grounds to interfere with anything which may be going on contrary to law. There is to be a big grand stand, capable of holding 40,000 people. One of our state officials says that they have a circular race track and another straightaway, with various other luxurious devices and he believes that the New Yorkers have an idea that they can go out into the country and run things about as they please, regardless of the sentiment of the community. The street railway tracks of that neighborhood have been laid with extra solidity and at large expense, as if the officials were preparing for large local traffic, and yet the immediate population is quite sparse. Lowell people fear that lots of their population will be enticed over the border. There is nothing in the situation which calls for action on the part of our state officials, as far as appears now, but they are getting their eyes open to what may be as bad for the morals of the state as the wholesale violations which were practiced at Readville. At the time when the wrath of the people is steadily rising against the rich spendthrifts who do not know what to do with the money which they extort by bad laws from a helpless people, it looks in bad taste and poor judgment for a lot of them to come up from New York with the idea that they can find wholesale license for vice in rural New England. They evidently have precious little realization of the temper of the public.

Further developments are yet possible over the speakership other than the peaceful election of Representative Cole of Andover. The fact is that some public-spirited men outside of the Legislature feel that Mr. Walker of Brookline surrendered too meekly altogether, and they are not at all certain but that the resentment of the public against the domination of the Legislature by corporations will lead to such an outcry by the people against their representatives who signed for Cole at first, or have done so since, that they will say that the situation is materially different from what they supposed it to be and that they are under no moral obligation to support Cole and will remove their names from his paper. There is certainly a group of Republican representatives who say that they will not vote for Cole because of the corporation interests behind him and of the methods by which the majority was obtained. When Gen Bancroft, president of the Boston elevated, asks a member personally to vote for Cole, or says that he wants him to vote for Cole, when he sends his private stenographer 35 miles to see a member to get him to vote for Cole, when other things are done of which mention is made in the same line, then the public begins to feel that it had some rights and that its representatives must represent if they are to serve their true function. One of the members who does not fall into line has secured several affidavits from other members of improper things which have been attempted with them. Of course it depends upon how strong a case can be made out before the election whether an effort is made to upset Cole, or whether things will be allowed to proceed quietly, but with an exceptionally sharp eye upon him and his committees.

Old people who remember the stirring abolition times, and young people who read about them and about William Lloyd Garrison will learn with pleasure of the celebration of the centennial of Garrison's birth. Next Sunday is the day, and the celebration will cover Sunday and Monday. White and black people will join and the rare services of a rare man will be recalled in a worthy manner. For this centennial, two sons of "the liberator," Wendell Phillips Garrison and Francis Jackson Garrison, have prepared a small volume entitled "Words of Garrison." It consists of pithy extracts from Garrison's writings, a biographical sketch, with mention of the portraits and statues which have been made of him and of the books which have been written about him. It is well worth a place in the library of every American who is well informed about his own country. Garrison's words have a true ring to them which will make them heard for centuries: "My country is the world; my countrymen are all mankind." "I am in earnest—I will not equivocate—I will not excuse—I will not retreat a single inch—and I will be heard." "I will be as harsh as truth and as uncompromising as justice." His biography shows how frequently he was the center of turmoil and how his life was in danger from angry mobs, but he came out of it all safely. He was a social outcast from the Beacon Hill circles. Henry W. Longfellow, the poet, would have nothing to do with him. Neither would Oliver Wendell Holmes, but Holmes changed his opinion later in life. James Russell Lowell and Whittier were of the same kind as Garrison and were in constant touch with him. There are lots of books which might well be skipped these days in order to give time to this little one of the grandest souls that the United States or the world has ever produced.

Last year, when Gov. Douglas was running for his present position, he had in his confidence, for statistician and computer of tariff figures Mr. Byron W. Holt of New York, who got together some of the facts which the governor used so effectively in his public arguments. Mr Holt has since gone to New York and is now the editor of Moody's Magazine, of which the first number is just out. It is a magazine for bankers, investors and men of affairs, nominally, but it has, judging by this number, much material which every intelligent voter ought to have knowledge of. One of the contributors is Charles A. Conant, formerly a Boston newspaper man, then Washington correspondent, then in the government service and now in a New York business house. He tells where the capital for great enterprises is gathered, and is also one of the contributors to a symposium on the increasing supply of gold, to which contribute Horace White of the New York Evening Post, Prof. John B Clark of Columbia, formerly of Amherst College, John DeWitt Warner and many more first-class specialists. There is critical comment of large interest to investors, and "The Pitfalls of Speculation," treats of a subject upon which the public ought to be especially well informed. Mr. Holt has been a writer for many years in financial lines, and his views have always been in favor of larger liberty of action and for the masses of the people.

"Billy Hunt," the state house boot-black, died this morning at the soldiers' home in Chelsea. Many members of the Legislature will remember him. My own recollection of him is not as the familiar boot-black, but as the proud veteran of the Civil War, for he was one of the black men who was entitled to march with the Grand Army companies on Memorial Day, and the decorating of the Shaw relief in front of the state house always impressed him deeply, as it does the other black heroes who were with Shaw that fearful day when he went to his death at the reckless and useless assault on Fort Wagner at Charleston, S. C. There is more under these black faces than we dream of, and men in humble occupation at home have war records of which any son of Beacon street or Fifth avenue would be proud. Peace to Billy Hunt's ashes.

Boston's city campaign rages briskly, yes, furiously. It has come to the pass where even Democrats admit that there is a fighting chance that Frothingham will be elected, though, of course, the probabilities strongly favor Fitzgerald, for the city has such an enormous normal Democratic majority. The factors of doubt are how many Democrats will vote for Dewey, the independent Republican, and how many Lomasney men will support Frothingham quietly. At any rate, the outcome is not certain yet.

Word comes from Portland, Me, that Boston liquor sellers sent lots of money down there to influence the election of mayor That shows, of course, how great their public spirit is (that is, their spirit is for the public), and their horizon is not bounded by state lines. LANDON

WHY IT SUCCEEDS.

Because It's For One Thing Only, And Palmer Is Learning This.

Nothing can be good for everything.
Doing one thing well brings success.
Doan's Kidney Pills do one thing only.
They're for sick kidneys.
They cure backache, every kidney ill.
Here is Palmer evidence to prove it.

Mrs. P. J. Sullivan of Pearl street, says:—"While I never had occasion to use Doan's Kidney Pills myself, my husband used them and they did him a lot of good. He had a weakness of the kidneys and heavy aching pain in his back for a long time. I have seen him so lame and sore across his back in the morning that he could not get out of bed without assistance. He tried other remedies but they did not do him any good. He got Doan's Kidney Pills at LeGro's drug store, used four boxes according to directions and they removed the lameness and righted the kidney secretions."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S.

The Food Value of a Soda Cracker

You have heard that some foods furnish fat, other foods make muscle, and still others are tissue building and heat forming.

You know that most foods have one or more of these elements, but do you know that no food contains them all in such properly balanced proportions as a good soda cracker?

The United States Government report shows that soda crackers contain less water, are richer in the muscle and fat elements, and have a much higher per cent of the tissue building and heat forming properties than any article of food made from flour.

That is why Uneeda Biscuit should form an important part of every meal. They represent the superlative of the soda cracker, all their goodness and nourishment being brought from the oven to you in a package that is proof against air, moisture and dust—the price being too small to mention.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Christmas Delights at Johnson's.

In all New England there is not such a splendidly satisfying Christmas Stock as WE can show you. 'Tis a very large store. Come in and be at home.

A Glimpse About the Rooms.

Dainty Bundles

Don't use fuzzy string and pins. Use our Dennison Holly and Santa Claus seals, tags and markers. They finish the package perfectly. But BUY EARLY, they "went" like snowflakes last year. We'll mail them.

10c per box

Holly Boxes

A dozen sizes, all the way from a cute box for a coin gift to a large one for the baby's new sweater. Very pretty. Then these "HANDY BOXES" with twine, glue, seals and bundling articles are a great help.

"Rozane" Ware

A new and beautiful pottery, "Woodland" in gray and buffs, "Egypta" in rich green, "Mongol" in glowing reds, "Royal" in deep golds and browns. All classic models, and at a price to sell them quickly.

The Copley Prints

They never fail. Jessie Wilcox Smith has some new child-beauties, and we have all the fine subjects that find such an increasing place in the homes of the world.

Hand Colorings

Masterpieces such as Alma Tadema's in photogravures, etchings, platinotypes, lithographs and photographs—exquisitely colored, bringing the original to your room.

The "Little" Pictures

It's a great line with us. Passepartouts—a long list, from Gibson's satires in dogs and cats, child-lore without end, scenery and oddities, for nursery, school, den and odd corners.

10c to 50c

Fine Posters

These strong German posters have a wonderful merit of forceful lines and colorings. College posters, heads and drawings by Hutt, Remington, Christy and all the others. The list is a large one.

The Grinning Gargoyles

See our casts. The pretty "Meditation" is winning everybody. We've bas-reliefs for the schools and everything from Lincoln lups to the classics and Barye's wonderful lion.

Picture Framing

Dainty photo and miniature frames 25c to $2.50, and frames to order for any sort of picture. Only PLEASE ORDER early. Christmas crowds this department to overflowing.

The Jap Frog-Skin

Here's a real, undeniable novelty in purses. Hand and "Vanity" Bags (see these), in imported leathers, etc. These goods are like our pictures—works of art.

The "Correct" Stationery

You can't get an engraved calling card or monogram at the last minute. This department has a wealth of goods to show and is making very attractive prices.

Ho for the Toy Shop

Now then—there's no better toyshop this side of Old Santa's Shop. Toys that "go," funny toys, dolls, all the best games, a children's paradise is our basement. Everybody welcome.

He went to Springfield about a week before his death to visit his daughter, and was taken ill Tuesday. Mr. Allen had lived in West Ware for the past 17 years, and until six years ago was engaged in farming. He was a member of the West Brookfield Methodist church for the past 35 years and was active in its work, being Sunday school superintendent and deacon. He leaves a widow, two sons, George H. and Clarence W. of West Brookfield, and two daughters, Mrs W. W. Thomas of Bondsville and Mrs. S. W. Houghton; also a stepson, John Hunter of West Ware, four grandchildren and two great grandchildren. Prayer was offered at the home of Mrs. Houghton Sunday afternoon and burial was in West Brookfield Monday afternoon.

Rev. B McKeany is ill at his home on East street.

Miss Lillian Ives is spending the week in West Brookfield.

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Holden visited relatives in Stafford Springs, Ct., this week.

Mrs. E. Heald of Auburn, Me., is a guest at the home of her sister, Mrs George Moulton.

Miss Annie Collis was the guest of Miss Ethel Alden in Ludlow the latter part of last week.

A number of the young people enjoyed a social time at the Country clubhouse last Saturday evening.

Miss Alice Bond and Miss Grace Hyatt have returned from a visit at Miss Hyatt's home in Milford, Ct.

Miss Grace McFarlane of Ludlow visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Rowland McFarlane over Sunday.

Miss Nellie Collins of Holyoke was the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs Michael Collins the latter part of last week.

Mrs. Henry R. Gould of Belchertown visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Morse the first of the week

Miss Alice Thompson, formerly of this place, visited at the home of her sister, Mrs Charles Banister, last Saturday.

Hubert Sedgwick of New Haven, Ct, visited at the home of his father, Butler Sedgwick, the latter part of last week.

Rev. L. L. Beeman will take for the subject of his sermon next Sunday morning, "The Enthronment of Christ in the Human Soul."

Mr. and Mrs E. H Woolard returned Saturday night from Biddeford, Me., where they were called by the death of Mrs Woolard's brother.

Mrs. F. W. Langelier and two children, Charlie and Lena, visited in Easthampton over Sunday. While there they attended the wedding of a relative.

Miss Viola Marsan has resigned her position as clerk in O. A Parent's store and has secured a position in the cloth room of the Boston Duck Co.

Miss Anna May Collis has resigned her position as bookkeeper in the cloth room of the Boston Duck Co. Her place has been filled by Miss Lulu Austin.

Miss Grace Childs has returned to her studies at Bradford Academy after spending the Thanksgiving vacation at the home of her parents, Mr and Mrs E G. Childs.

The Ladies' Aid Society held a meeting at the home of Mrs. Thomas Waterhouse Sr. Wednesday afternoon. The next meeting will be held at the home of the president, Mrs. O A Parent.

Miss Gertrude Marsan, who has been a teacher in the schools of Lexington is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A Marsan, previous to taking a position as principal of a school in Scotland, Ct.

At a meeting of the Sunday school board of the M E church held at the home of Mrs. O. A. Parent Monday evening, it was voted to have a Christmas tree and concert for the children on the Saturday night before Christmas.

Mr. Archibald has resigned his position as baggagemaster at the Boston and Albany station and has secured a position as telegraph operator in Worcester. Elwin Hayes has left his position with the Boston Duck Co. and has taken the position in the station made vacant by Mr. Archibald.

Miss Bridget Leary, 52, died at her home about 6 o'clock this morning. She was born and has always lived in Bondsville. She leaves one sister, Mrs. Thomas Sullivan of South Belchertown, and a niece, Miss Margaret Prendiville of Springfield, who has lived the greater part of her life with Miss Leary. The funeral arrangements have not yet been made.

WEST WARREN.

Mrs. Albert Watts of New London, Ct., formerly of West Warren, has been visiting friends in town.

Henry Labrie and Desire Couture have been called to Joliette, P. Q., by the serious illness of the latter's father.

Harold Aiken of Old Furnace has taken the position as telegraph operator at the Boston and Albany railroad station.

Mrs. E P. Berthuamue, who has been making an extended visit with her mother, Mrs J. B. Girouard of Chapel street, has returned to her home in New Bedford.

It was announced by Rev. Philias Trottier, pastor of St. Thomas's church, Sunday that the gross proceeds of the six-nights' bazar held recently amounted to $1541. Out of that amount it was thought that the net proceeds would be about $1425.

Robert Armour received a letter Friday from his daughter, Miss Jennie M. Armour in Newtonville, saying that she had married James Carnes, who was formerly employed as telegraph operator at the railroad station in West Warren. He is now employed as operator in the tower at Newtonville. The letter did not state when they were married or by whom Miss Armour, who is a native of West Warren, is well known here

Richard W, the 16 years-old son of Mr and Mrs. George A. Moody, died at his home on High street late Wednesday night after a serious illness of four days with pneumonia and acute bronchitis. He was born in Newberry, S. C, and went to West Warren in 1899, when his father came to superintend the cotton mills. He attended the high school in Warren and was a member of the freshmen class, of which he was president. He was a member of the Methodist church and Epworth League The young man is survived by his father and mother, four brothers and one sister The funeral will be held in the Methodist church Sunday afternoon at 2.30 The body will be placed in the tomb at Pine Grove cemetery and taken to Sandwich for burial next spring.

A Master Stroke

[Original.]

After marriage some couples seem to assimilate easily, while others are like fractious horses trying to pull together in double harness for the first time. Mr. and Mrs. Zerwick belonged to the latter class. Mr. Zerwick was a level headed, practical man. He had had quite enough of "spooning" during the engagement, and the wedding festivities had bored him. He wished to settle down to the humdrum of life. Not so the lady. She saw no reason why the honeymoon should not continue indefinitely.

Now, there were both truth and fallacy in her position. There is a difference between a lunar and a life honeymoon—the same difference as between a bubbling brook and a deep, silently flowing stream. Mr. Zerwick, though tired of the former, was ready for the latter. The consequence was that his wife jumped at the conclusion that they had made a terrible mistake—that they were not fitted for each other. One day, with as much deliberation as she could assume, she informed her husband of this conclusion. Naturally he was very much surprised.

"Well," he said calmly, "I fear it is too late to repair the error."

"Nothing under heaven would induce me to endure this any longer. I would soon land in a lunatic asylum."

"What do you propose to do?"

"Leave you."

"Well," replied the husband, "if you are to do that it would be far better to go before there are any children to suffer by this terrible mistake."

"The sooner the better."

"Would you like a divorce so that you can marry again?"

"Thank you. I've had quite enough of matrimony."

"I want you to be comfortable. I will leave you in possession here and live at my club."

"You are very kind. I shall return to my mother."

George Zerwick considered this merely a passing squall and while at business during the day thought it would have blown over by the time of his return. What was his astonishment when he went home to find his wife gone with her principal baggage.

The situation was serious. His first impulse was to go after, beg her pardon and bring her back if possible before her flight should become known. But for what should be ask forgiveness? He did not know. And if he should humble himself once for sins he had not committed would he not need to do so indefinitely? Should he await developments or bring matters to a crisis? If a knowledge of her foolish move got out it would be irreparable. He determined to settle the matter at once.

When Mrs. Zerwick got settled at her mother's she was not quite sure whether she had taken a very brilliant or a very silly course, but her mother, who had made a spoiled child of her and into whose ears she had poured all her husband's imagined harsh treatment, satisfied her, at least for the moment, that she had done just right and he would soon come to her crawling on his knees.

What was the young wife's astonishment the morning after her flight to receive a call from a lawyer, who, the moment she appeared in the drawing room, stood up and mechanically read something which she did not understand, but which the man informed her was a summons in divorce proceedings on the part of her husband, on the ground of desertion. The business air with which the attorney handled the matter caused the room to swim and the floor to sink.

"I—I—wish," she stammered, "to see my husband."

"My client does not desire an interview. You having deserted his bed and board"—

"Where can I address him? Is he still at home?"

"I am not at liberty to tell you."

"Do you mean that I can only communicate with him through you?"

"He did not tell me that he expected any communication from you, but said that if there was anything it must come through counsel."

"This is shameful."

The man bowed and was about to take his departure when she stopped him. "Stay. Will you forward a letter to my husband?"

"Certainly."

Going to a mahogany writing desk, she wrote a letter, a jumble of reproaches, threats, sprinkled with a minute quantity of self condemnation, and was about to seal it when the lawyer said:

"Pardon me. As Mr. Zerwick's counsel I must see that letter or I shall decline to transmit it."

Mrs. Zerwick tore up the letter and ordered the man to leave the house, but before the door was closed on him called him back, rewrote the letter and handed it to him to read. He did so, and refused to transmit it, on the ground that it would not be acceptable to his client.

At the end of an hour, during which Mrs. Zerwick wrote a number of letters, each more tractable than the last, she finally was brought into a state of mind to write simply:

"Sweetheart, forgive me."

She handed the note to the attorney, who glanced at it and put it in his pocket, while the writer turned away, and, throwing herself on a divan, buried her face in a number of pillows.

Five minutes after the attorney's departure the sorrowing wife was in the arms of her husband.

The secret of this temporary separation was well kept by the go-between, who was not an attorney, but a cotton broker, with no knowledge of the law whatever.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE---GRAVEL.

"I have long resolved that I would apprise you of the deep sense of obligation which I feel There is nothing which I now enjoy that I do not owe to the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy at a time when I was suffering all that a human being could endure. My troubles began in my kidneys and

I Never Expected to Recover.

I was compelled to use a cane when I walked, and I finally got so weak that I could not stand alone. My physician said I had Bright's Disease, which was, indeed, alarming information. To add to my affliction, after I had been ill about two years, I had a bad attack of gravel. I saw Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy advertised in our paper. After using one bottle I threw away my cane and went to New York on a visit, and three bottles cured me. I have never had a return of gravel, nor of the pains or weakness in the back, and though I am over sixty years of age

The Palmer Journal.

VOLUME LVI. PALMER, MASS., FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 15, 1905. NUMBER 37.

HEARING WAS CONTINUED.

On Palmer Water Co's. Petition For New Bond Issue.

$10,000 ADDITIONAL STOCK WANTED.

Town's Water Committee Represented at Hearing. Commissioner Not Satisfied.

The Palmer Water Company was given a hearing by Commissioner Trefry at Boston Monday on its petition for permission to issue $30,000 of 20-year bonds. The outcome was a postponement to next Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock, when the company is expected to present additional reasons for its request.

An advertisement appeared in the Springfield Republican of Nov. 28 announcing the request for permission to issue the bonds and also giving notice of the hearing. The town water committee, noting the advertisement and considering that it had a considerable interest in the matter, engaged Judge Kenefick to be present at the hearing and ask a few questions, as the committee has considered that in the event of the town installing a water system of its own it would first have to acquire the Palmer Water Co's plant, but in the endeavor to get any information from the company it has always met with refusals. The water company was represented by its treasurer, J. H. Gamwell, and by Lawyer C. G. Gardner of Springfield. The company stated that it desired $20,000 of the sum asked for to take up bonds issued 20 years ago and due January 1st; $9000 was desired to pay off a floating debt, and $1000 was for expenses incurred in extending the plant. The company also stated that it had a plan for raising the dam on its lower or service reservoir.

Judge Kenefick argued against the proposed extensions of the plant by the present owners. If, as is likely, the town is to acquire the plant, then the company should not proceed with extensions now; that matter should be left to the town. Statements concerning the value of the plant were put in, and also details which would have to be considered in case the town took the plant, as it is not the intention to furnish water for the village of Palmer alone, but for Three Rivers, Bondsville and Thorndike as well.

It was the opinion of the commissioner that the company needed the $20,000 for the redemption of the outstanding bonds of $10,000 The company will present further evidence on that point next week, and it is said that by that time the town and the water company may come to some agreement regarding the taking of the entire system by the town, although Treasurer Gamwell yesterday afternoon denied any knowledge of such a move, and stated to the Journal that the company had no proposition to make to the town at the hearing next week; in fact, that he did not know what he should do or say at the hearing on any phase of the matter. At the some time and place will be heard a petition of the company for permission to increase its capital stock $10,000, as per notice in the advertising columns.

The Universalist Fair.

The annual fair of the ladies of St. Paul's church of Palmer was held Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, and was unusually successful, about $250 being netted. The attraction the first evening was the usual turkey supper, which was attended by the largest number the ladies have ever been called upon to serve, but ample preparation had been made, and all were well and fully served. Wednesday evening there was an entertainment consisting of readings by Mrs. Nichols of Springfield, vocal selections by Mrs. Burch of Ware and Rev. W. A. Moore of Palmer, and instrumental selections by an orchestra of young people under the direction of B. A. Day. There was a sale of useful and fancy articles and homemade candy each evening, and a cook book of proved recipes issued by the ladies found many purchasers.

How Papa Found It Out.

When Mark Twain and his bride returned from their wedding trip they found a house waiting for them, completely furnished, the gift of the bride's father, Mr. Langdon. Mr. Clemens was at a loss to express his gratitude—for a few minutes. Then, however, he seized his father-in-law by his two hands and urged him whenever he was in the city to come right there and make himself "as much at home as if it were his own house."

The story is also being recalled how the young suitor broke the news to Mr. Langdon. "Have you noticed anything between your daughter and me, Mr. Langdon?" "No!" Mr. Langdon somewhat sharply replied. "Well," said Mr. Clemens, "if you keep a sharp lookout, you will!"—Philadelphia Inquirer.

WHO IS GEORGE THOMPSON?

Man Giving This Name and Palmer as Residence Stabbed in Springfield.

This morning's paper contains an account of the stabbing through the left hand in an Italian lodging house in Springfield yesterday afternoon of George Thompson, who gives his residence as Palmer. James Heaney was the party who did the stabbing. Thompson claims that Heaney, who was considerably the worse for liquor, was in a quarrelsome mood, and had been ejected three times from the lodging house. Each time Heaney returned he was anxious to administer corporal punishment to every occupant of the house Thompson said he attempted to transport the angry man through the door, but he was soon stabbed with an instrument which he did not see. It passed through the back of his hand, clear through the palm, and caused considerable pain. Judging by the size of the cuts, the blade of the knife must have been half an inch wide. No complaint was lodged against Thompson and he was allowed to go Heaney sustained a severe cut on the left side of his head and the upper part of his lip had been gashed so that it hung heavily. He was taken to the House of Mercy hospital, where his wounds were attended to. Just what caused them is not known, though it is thought that a club might have been used on him. He was released from the house of correction only yesterday morning. He was held on charges of drunkenness and assault and battery.

Careful inquiry fails to locate any person of this name in Palmer. The name is not in the directory, nor in the list of poll tax payers published last fall, which is supposed to contain the name of every man in town at that time; neither can anyone be found who knows a George Thompson.

Wales Woman Drops Dead.

Mrs. Mary Cooley, 62, dropped dead near her home in Wales Monday night about 8 o'clock. She resided near the state line and had been at work in the village during the day. She was walking home, and had nearly reached the house when she fell. She screamed, and some woodchoppers near by, who had gone to their shanty for the night, heard her and went to investigate. They found Mrs Cooley lying upon her face in the snow and carried her to her home, but she was dead. Medical Examiner Schneider was notified, and he found that death was due to heart disease, with which trouble Mrs Cooley had suffered for years. Mrs. Cooley had no relatives in Wales, but she has a brother in Springfield.

Will Amend Academy Charter.

The board of trustees of Monson Academy held a business meeting at the Academy Monday afternoon to take action in regard to the charter of that institution. The present charter specifies that the income of the Academy shall be a sum not more than $5,000. As the income at present exceeds that amount it seemed best to the trustees that the charter should conform to the income, and accordingly it was voted to petition the Legislature that an amendment be made to the charter allowing the income to exceed the amount at present specified The matter will probably come up for action some time during the winter session of the Legislature.

APPROPRIATE SERVICES

At Dedication of Three Rivers Church Addition.

EXERCISES ON SUNDAY AND MONDAY.

Interesting Addresses by Former Members of the Church and Sunday School.

The dedication of the new rooms which have been added to the Union church, Three Rivers, took place on Monday evening. Special services were held on the previous day, and on Monday evening a large congregation filled the auditorium to listen to addresses, all of which were made by former members of the Sunday school.

Union Church, Three Rivers.

After preliminary services and a theme by the choir, Rev. Herbert A. Barker of Boston delivered an inspiring address on "The Village Church of Yesterday and To-day." He presented a striking picture of earlier scenes and conditions of church life, and showed the need of adaptation to the changed conditions of the present day.

After the formal act of dedication, conducted by the pastor, Rev. Charles Olmstead, and the financial statement, presented by H. A. Shaw, secretary of the building committee, prayer was offered by Rev. H. L. Bailey of Longmeadow, scribe of the Hampden conference.

A congratulatory address was then made by President Rufus W. Stimson of the Connecticut Agricultural College at Storrs, who spoke forcefully of his boyhood lif in the village, the silent testimony of the mill on the Sabbath day when the church met at the schoolhouse close at hand, and of the early and lasting impressions received from the ministrations of the church. He was followed by Rev. Gilbert Forte of South Britain, Ct., who ably showed the deep impressions made upon him by the same influences when he was apparently swayed but little by them.

Rev. A. T. McWhorter of Standish, Me., was the next speaker. His keen wit in referring to himself as the greenest lad the Lord ever permitted to land on American soil, and in giving experiences of more recent date, prepared the way for more serious words in which he mentioned with vivid portrayal his impressions of the reality of the Christian religion received one Easter Sabbath in the church, and later the call to the ministry, which came under similar circumstances. The last speaker was Henry C. Newell, dean of Piedmont College, Ga, who gave a fitting culmination t a series of addresses which held every member of the audience to the close.

Rev. Charles Olmstead.

Rev. F. C. Taylor of Thorndike and Rev. V. H. Deming of North Wilbraham also participated in the services. Letters of regret and congratulation were read by A. W. Warriner, clerk of the church. These had been received from Mrs. Jane Milliken and her son, James I. Milliken of Lawrence, both charter members of the church; Edwin H Baker of New York, Rev. C L. Ayer of Windsor, Ct., who was a former pastor of the church; Rev. N. M. Pratt I Monson, Principal H. M. Thayer of Dalton, State Sunday School Secretary Hamilton T. Conant, and others. At the close of the service visitors were escorted through the rooms and many expressed delight with the success of the work

The church building was erected in 1877, soon after the organization of the church Some years later a small extension was added to the lower floor for the use of the young men. This was also used as a kitchen and dining room, but was remodeled several years ago to give added accommodation to the growing Sunday school.

As the building proved inadequate of late steps were taken at the annual meeting in January to devise better facilities for accommodation. After spending several hundred dollars in repairs upon the parsonage and the purchase of a piano for the Sunday school in the early months of the year, the building committee presented plans for enlarging the church. These were adopted and money to meet the supposed requirements was raised. Meanwhile arrangements were made to rebuild and install an excellent pipe organ which had been in use in another church of the state. This involved changes in the proposed addition, but on Aug. 23 ground was broken and the work was pushed rapidly to completion. The carpenter work was under the supervision of Lewis Percy, C. E. Elliott of Belchertown serving as foreman. A large portion of the labor has been contributed by workmen from the mill and neighboring homes, who have worked evenings with extension lights and on Saturday afternoons The addition is in the rear of the original building as shown in the cut, and with the porte cochère extends somewhat to the left, like an inverted T

The main body of the addition is 25 by 44 feet. It is carried to the full height and is lighted by the most approved electric lamps It comprises a basement in which a steam boiler has been placed for heating the entire structure, a vestibule, library, toilet rooms with modern plumbing, six class rooms, one of which may be used as a study, storage room, porte cochère organ and choir loft, and an assembly room for the primary department. The rooms have been handsomely carpeted, steam pipes bronzed, the walls covered with pleasing shades and the grounds about the building properly graded. The cash outlay, which has been made on favorable terms, is nearly $3000, all but $245 of which has been given by the local constituency of the church.

The members of the building committee are Rev. Charles Olmstead, F. A. Upham, J. T. Geer, J. H. Trickett, John Wilson and H. A. Shaw. The Sunday school has a membership of nearly 300, a number in excess of the membership of the church, and about two-thirds of this number are in regular attendance. With these added facilities the church and school hope for increased usefulness in the community.

The first of Frank Coffin's 28 snow storms arrived Saturday night, a little ahead of time, for Prognosticator Coffin hadn't planned for much snow until the new year. As it was only about three inches fell, but it was damp and heavy. A cold turn Sunday night has made excellent sleighing, the streets of the village being smooth and in good condition for it.

MUST PETITION AGAIN.

S. and E. Must Ask for New Location in Brimfield.

SAME SIDE OF HIGHWAY GIVEN TWICE

Work in Fiskdale Begun by the Hartford and Worcester Company; Ties Laid.

The Springfield and Eastern street railway company will have to petition again for a location in Brimfield as the result of the fact, brought out at the hearing before the commissioners in Boston Saturday, that there is half a mile of its location next to the Sturbridge line in Brimfield which is held by the Hartford and Worcester company. Some time ago the Hartford and Worcester company petitioned for a location in Brimfield, which was granted. Later they petitioned for a location for that part of the route where the two companies' locations were identical, on private land, and it was supposed abandoned the first grant, but at the hearing Saturday it was most decidedly stated that they still held this first grant, and the commissioners refused to grant a location on top of an existing location, and ruled that the Springfield and Eastern bring in another petition. The attorneys for the two companies thrashed the matter over for the greater portion of the day, and the question of locations for both roads—for the Hartford and Worcester claims to be desirous of building through Brimfield and Monson to Springfield — was gone into at length. The Hartford and Worcester, however, cannot petition for a location in Monson until it has track laid in the town of Brimfield, adjoining. Considerable feeling was shown at the hearing, and it is evident that the Hartford and Worcester is to lose no opportunity to keep the Springfield and Eastern out of Brimfield and Fiskdale if possible.

The Hartford and Worcester street railway company has commenced the work of laying tracks in Fiskdale for its extension to Brimfield. The company has begun grading and laying ties, and has its ties on the ground ready for the rails for a distance of about one-eighth of a mile from the Fiskdale hotel. The work is being rushed as rapidly as possible.

There is a bitter contest between the Shaw interests, who control the Hartford and Worcester, and the Consolidated interests, who are trying to connect their Springfield and Eastern line at Monson with the Worcester and Southbridge line at Fiskdale. Several hearings have been held by the railroad commissioners upon petitions from the Springfield and Eastern company for locations through Monson and Brimfield, but the Shaw people have opposed these petitions successfully in each instance. The people in Fiskdale believe that the present operations are merely for the purpose of obstructing the passage of the Springfield and Eastern's proposed line. The Fiskdale people are favorable to the Shaw interests, as they say the service given by the Consolidated between Fiskdale and Worcester is very poor, and they believe the other company would give a better service if it had a line. They desire the connection with Brimfield, Palmer and Springfield, and care little how they get it so long as a line is built which will give good service. The Shaw interests doubtless believe that a line in operation in Fiskdale will prevent the other company from securing a franchise in that town, and that any rights it may obtain in Brimfield and Monson will therefore be useless.

Small Fire in Ware.

A double house on Aspen street in Ware was slightly damaged by fire yesterday noon. The house is occupied by four families and owned by the estate of A. W. Lincoln of Warren. The blaze was discovered in the north-end tenement by Mrs. John Germaine in a bedroom next to her kitchen and she sent Louis Taylor, who lives upstairs, to ring in the alarm. The furniture of Mr. Germaine and of Mrs. Pickee, who lives underneath, was removed across the street before the firemen arrived. The fire was extinguished without much damage except by smoke and water in the upper and lower north-end tenements. The property was in charge of Philias Provencal, and all four tenements had been newly painted and papered. Mrs. Germaine had $63 concealed in the bedroom where the fire started, and claims that only $13 could be found. The bed was partly burned and possibly the balance of $50.

The subject of the sermon next Sunday morning at the Baptist church will be "Out of the Depths;" Sunday school at 12; Y. P S. C. E. at 6; evening song service at 7, followed by a short sermon on "The Glory of the Gospel."

The Claim Jumpers

A CHRISTMAS STORY

By.... ADDISON HOWARD GIBSON

Copyright, 1905, by Addison Howard Gibson

THE wagon was an old, ramshackle affair and creaked dismally as the shabby mules dragged it slowly along over the obscure prairie road. Their harness was a combination of ropes and well worn straps, whose hard edges had rubbed off patches of the sorrel hair from the animals' lank sides and sharp backs.

The wagon cover was soiled and patched in many places, and through its center protruded a short, rusty stovepipe, from which issued a thin volume of blue smoke which stretched out in a long wake behind, held in form by the chill December air.

Now and then flocks of brown sparrows would rise up out of the dead grass and whirl away like withered leaves borne aloft on an autumn breeze, while near the roadside saucy little prairie dogs perched above their holes and chattered and barked defiance at the dilapidated vehicle as it went lumbering by.

On a board across the front part of the wagon, lines in hand, sat a girl apparently not more than nineteen years old, though she was in reality twenty-one. A mass of dark gold curls peeped from under the hood that covered her shapely head, her eyes were bright hazel, and the breath of chill wind that crept up under the canvas gave a vivid color to her pretty cheeks.

"Faith, how much farther is it to Uncle Ethan's?" anxiously inquired a youth of ten who occupied a low bench that stood in the center of the wagon bed.

"A long way yet, dear, I am afraid," replied the girl. "More than a hundred miles, I should say."

"Then we tan't have no Trismus," plaintively sighed a curly haired mite scarcely more than five years old, who lay half buried in the folds of a huge buffalo robe.

"I'm afraid our Christmas will be rather dreary, Bessie," responded Faith, a momentary shadow crossing her fair face, "but let us be thankful we have such a nice shelter from the cold," she added quickly, casting her eyes about the interior of the canvas covered wagon, then out across the dreary stretch of houseless prairie upon which a few scattering flakes of snow were beginning to fall.

At the rear end of the wagon was a pile of bedclothes, while in a clear place near the middle stood a small heating stove, in which a cheerful wood fire was burning. On the ridgepole at the top of the bows hung several cooking utensils, and under the front seat was a good sized provision box, containing part of a sack of flour, some sides of bacon, tea, sugar and a few other necessary articles of food.

A little less than a year prior to the present time Faith Haskins' father had died, leaving her alone on a bleak Nebraska claim and with her little brother and sister, Clinton and Bessie, to care for. Their mother had been taken from them only eight months before her husband. The condition was a serious one, as they were left very poor, and there seemed nothing in the future sufficiently hopeful to mitigate their grief. Faith, however, true to her name, did not despair, but went bravely to work to support herself and the children. During the summer, with Clint's help, she cultivated a small patch of ground, and the winter previous had earned a small sum by teaching a short term of school. Realizing that it would be almost impossible for them to continue this mode of life for any length of time, she had written to her mother's brother, Ethan Bartley, who lived on a ranch in southwestern Kansas, and he had advised her to sell their small property and come with Clint and Bessie and make their home with him.

Very gladly had Faith accepted the offer, but, finding it impossible to convert their few effects into cash, she left the place in charge of a renter and, not having money for railroad fare, decided to make the journey by wagon. There were a score of young claim holders who would have been very well pleased to retain the girl as a housekeeper for themselves, but she cared for none of them and would not marry simply for a home.

It was a great undertaking, this journey of theirs and at this season of the year, but it seemed preferable to another winter on the claim, and they set out in apparently good spirits. The younger ones were indeed happy, as all children are at the prospect of a change. They had been traveling for about two weeks and had reached a point near the center of western Kansas and were pressing on toward "Uncle Ethan's ranch" as fast as the now jaded mules could take them.

It was a lonely and desolate sight that met Faith's eyes as they wandered wearily over the brown, cheerless plain. For miles and miles around no sign of a human habitation broke the monotonous wildness of the scenery save at rare intervals when some abandoned sod shanty or a dugout could be dimly seen, scarcely distinguishable from the brown grass which surrounded it.

"There ought to be a settlement somewhere near here," remarked the girl driver as a blue line of scrubby trees loomed up in the distance through the falling snow. "I hope we'll reach the timber before nightfall," she went on, casting a troubled glance at the threatening sky.

It was about 4 in the afternoon when she drove the tired team down a little slope which led into a low, winding valley. A scant growth of scraggy elms and ghostly sycamores skirted the small, crooked stream, while dense thickets of plum and persimmon were scattered here and there. The latter just now were prodigal in their production of bunches of golden purple fruit. A quick glance about decided Faith to camp here for the night. She was just reining the team from the rutty road into a sheltered glade when there was a sharp jolt, accompanied by a sound of breaking wood, as one of the wheels suddenly dropped into a deep, rain washed gully.

An involuntary cry of dismay escaped her when she leaned out and discovered that the wheel was broken.

"Oh, Faith, what ever will we do now?" cried Clint as he saw what had happened. And Bessie, thoroughly frightened, began crying bitterly.

"Never mind, little one; it'll be all right," said Faith encouragingly. "We can get the wheel mended somewhere." But despite her cheerful words she realized that it might require many miles of weary travel to have the damage to the wagon repaired. Even if there should be a shop within two or three miles, which was not at all likely in such an isolated spot, how was she to transport the heavy broken wheel even a single mile? Although she could see no way as yet to overcome the difficulty, she was determined not to give up. There was always some way out of every dilemma, and her ever hopeful heart told her she would surely find one in this instance.

She climbed out of the wagon and, assisted by Clint, began to unhitch the team, while Bessie, dragging the buffalo robe after her, stood under a persimmon tree gazing at the cause of their present trouble with tear wet eyes. The storm was increasing rapidly, and the icy wind blew the flakes through the long, dead grass with a sharp, hissing sound.

As Faith, shivering with cold and apprehension, led the animals away from the wagon the sound of approaching hoofs came through the snow laden air, and the next instant two men mounted on sturdy ponies reined in near the wrecked vehicle. They looked to be about thirty, were full bearded and clad in the rough garb usually worn by plainsmen of the west. Broad brimmed hats covered their heads, and each had a brace of heavy revolvers stuck in his wide leather belt. In one unaccustomed to this style of dress the appearance of these armed men might have induced a feeling of terror, but it was not so with Faith. Such types of western life were familiar to her, she having spent the past four years on the frontier of Nebraska.

"Good evenin', miss," said Ike Barclay, dismounting from his pony. "Had a breakdown, I see. Bad job!" he continued after examining the wagon critically.

"Yes, sir," returned the young lady, turning the mule she was holding so that she could face the men. "Is there any place near where I can get the wheel mended?"

"Waal, thar's ole Berger's blacksmith shop, over at Miley's store, but it's nigh three miles from hyer. Whar's yer men folks?" he inquired, glancing around.

"We have no men folks with us," replied Faith.

"Wot! Yer don't mean ter say yer travelin' alone with only them two kids?" broke in Jim Hancock.

"Yes," responded she simply. "We have come from Nebraska and are on the way to our uncle's, whose home is in the southwestern part of this state."

"Waal, I'll be"— But the speaker suddenly grew red in the face and did not proceed to tell what he would "be."

"Yer see," Ike began, "it seems plumb cur'us-like ter see a woman travelin' alone sich weather." Then after an almost imperceptible pause, as though for explanation, he continued: "But it's lucky we fellers happened along; it is, by ginger! Now, miss, if you're willin' ter trust Jim hyer an' me, we'll take that wheel over ter ole Berger's an' git him ter mend it up fer yer."

"If you'd only be so kind," returned Faith hastily, for, notwithstanding the relief she experienced, the situation was not free from embarrassment, "I'd be very much obliged."

"Not er tall," replied Ike, with an attempt at polite speech.

The combined strength of the two served to get the wagon propped up in a short time and the offending member removed.

"I reckon we can carry it betwixt us," said Jim. "But, gee whiz, ain't this wind cuttin'!"

"Reg'lar ole nor'wester," rejoined his companion. "A bad night fer them kids an' the woman ter be out, an' Christmas eve, at that! It's sufferin' wicked—'tis, fer sure!"

"Why, blame us, wot we chawin' erbout! Ther's Rob's cabin over thar a few steps, back o' them persimmons." Then, turning to Faith: "Miss, it's goin' ter be perty rough weather ternight, an' I reckon er cabin would be right smart comfer'abler than campin' out in er wagon. Ther's a shanty over beyond that patch o' timber—belongs ter a friend o' ourn, a chap on a visit ter his ole home in Indianny. Yer welcome ter 'bide thar—you an' them kids —if yer care ter."

"I'd be only too glad of shelter from this storm," said Faith—"that is, if you are sure the real owner wouldn't care."

"He's not one o' them kind—this friend o' ourn ain't. He's open hearted as th' day an' ther bes' settler in these yere parts."

Her anxiety on this score being removed, she allowed Ike to lead the way to the cabin, which was only a short distance, but invisible from where the accident occurred on account of the trees. It was a new log structure, tightly daubed with lime and sand. There were a snug fireplace and good though scanty homemade furniture.

Faith was overjoyed at the prospect of a comfortable lodging so strangely provided and cast a quick and curious glance about the place. The deer rifle thrown across the antlers above the fireplace and a man's old straw hat, coat and blue jeans hung on pegs at the head of a rude couch gave satisfactory evidence that the owner was a bachelor, but he was away, and the fact gave her no uneasiness.

Ike built a roaring fire on the open hearth, while Jim brought from the wagon such articles as would be needed during their stay. This done, the two men mounted and rode away, carrying the crippled wheel between them, but with a promise that it should be back " 'fore mornin'."

"Faeie," said Bessie, clinging to her sister's skirts as she made preparations for the evening meal, "this is most as good as Trismas, ain't it?"

"Yes, dear, and I'll try to make it up to be just as good as Christmas by an extra fine supper," said the older one stooping to kiss the happy face.

"Ah, Faith," spoke up Clint as he stirred the fire into a brighter blaze, "make flapjacks an' 'oodles of 'em, an', say, let's have brown sugar sirup!"

When Barclay and Hancock reached the blacksmith shop they tumbled their burden to the ground with "She'd never 'ave got it here, never!" Berger, large and dust begrimed, was just closing up for the night.

"Hol' on hyer, ole tinker!" greeted Jim, springing from his horse and pushing the wheel before him into the shop. "We want this 'ere wheel mended up right 'way."

"That's right," put in Ike. "An' le's see yer git an or'ental hump on yerself. We want to carry it back where it cum from 'fore this snow gits enny wuss."

Berger mumbled something about being tired and hungry, but nevertheless set to work at once. Satisfied that it would be repaired as expeditiously as possible, they hitched their ponies out of the wind and started for Miley's store. They paused a minute before one of the windows and looked in. The proprietor was tying up a package for a little man with a red scarf around his neck, while a solitary individual stood warming himself by the fire in the back part of the store. Suddenly an exclamation burst from Jim, and, grabbing his companion by the shoulder, he pointed excitedly to the figure at the stove.

"Look, Ike; thar's Rob Desmond got back, sure as shootin'!"

"Yer right, by ginger!" ejaculated Ike as he peered in above the rim of frost on the pane at a handsome, well built young fellow of about twenty-five who had taken off his hat and coat and seemed to be making himself thoroughly comfortable in front of Miley's old rust spotted heater.

"Wot'll he say?"

" 'Bout his cabin?"

"Yep."

"Lightnin' an' razors!"

"Say, Ike, I've struck an idee," whispered his companion, with a half suppressed chuckle. "We can have a good one on Rob—the best thing out—a reg'lar Christmas joke!"

"Wot is it?"

Approaching his friend, Jim spoke a few words in his ear. Ike put both hands over his mouth to check the laughter he could not quite repress.

"That'll be a rich one on Rob, all right. We'll do it! By jimson, we will!" he exclaimed. "A feller needs a leetle cheer o' some kind at Christmus time." Then after a few minutes of hurried conference the two entered the store. After greeting Miley, who stood behind his counter, they hastened back to the stove and gave the new arrival a hearty welcome.

"And what's the news?" asked Desmond as he shook hands with them both.

"News?" said Jim, assuming a reflective look and puckering up his eyebrows. "Oh, nothin' much, 'cept thet ole Biler's sold out an' left. An'—lemme see—yes, thar's Super, he got throwed an' broke his collar bone, an' us galoots has been doin' wot we could ter patch 'im up. Waal, an' then," with a wary look, "thar's some new settlers comin' in lately—wantin' timber claims, an' jumpin' 'em, too, when they git a chance. But how'd yer leave the ole folks back in Indianny?"

"All well, and could hardly tear myself away from them."

"I reckon hearin' 'bout yer claim has kinder hiked yer back," remarked Ike, regarding him out of the corner of his eye.

"My claim! What do you mean?" And Desmond's blue eyes dilated widely and grew almost black.

"I s'posed yer heered all about it 'fore this," said Jim. "Why, yer see, yer claim has been kinder took. A family moved inter yer shanty. Yes, they have, by ginger!" he added as a wave of incredulity stole over his listener's features.

"Do you mean to tell me that some low down sneak has dared to jump my claim while I've been back visiting my father and mother?" cried Desmond, the flush of doubt changing to one of resentment.

"Looks powerfully thet way," admitted his tormentur. "Seed a kivered wagon thar an' smoke pourin' out o' yer chimbley."

"Who is the sneaking cur?" demanded the now thoroughly aroused man.

"I dunno."

"Well, it won't take me long to find out," retorted Rob, drawing on his heavy buffalo overcoat with an angry jerk.

"Wot! Yer ain't goin' ter go ter yer claim right now?"

"Yes, and I'll see that that sneak thief gets out of my shack in a hurry. I've got pretty well warmed up," with a grim smile, "and don't need Miley's fire any longer."

"I wouldn't go if I was you," said Ike.

"You wouldn't?" eying him with contemptuous astonishment.

"No!"

"You must be a fool if you think I'm going to give up my land, after all I've done on it, without so much as a 'by your leave!' "

"But yer might get inter trubble."

"Might I?" cried Desmond, with a gesture of disgust, holding up a pair of heavy pistols and then thrusting them into his belt. "We'll see about that! If the cuss isn't off my premises inside an hour I'll give him 'trouble' and lots of it!"

"I don't think you'll run that settler out," said Jim coolly.

"You don't!"

"No, I don't."

"What's the reason?"

"Thar's sev'ral reasons, an' as fer me, I wouldn't want ter tackle the job."

"You wouldn't? Well, don't worry. I'll not call on you for assistance," and, with a quick stride, Rob Desmond walked out of the store, got his horse from the stable where it had been kept during his absence, mounted and was soon galloping away through the snowy dusk of the late afternoon.

When he was well beyond earshot the two conspirators went off into roars of laughter. Then they had to acquaint Miley with the occasion of their mirth, for he enjoyed a joke as well as the next one.

"It's a good one on Rob, by gum!" cried the storekeeper, joining heartily in the laughter.

"Which calls fer a box o' cigars an' two bottles o' Miley's temperance phosphate, don't it, Ike?" demanded Jim.

"That's wotever!" affirmed Ike. "An' the same to be charged ter Rob Desmond's account?"

"Exactly."

"Good enough," said Miley. "Five dollars is cheap a-plenty fer him to get off with. I 'magine I kin see him a-gittin' madder 'n ever an' ridin' like all persessed through the snowstorm down ter his claim," chuckled the old man as he reached for a box of cigars on the shelf.

"Hol' on a minute, Miley," said Jim. "Wot yer say, Ike, ter dispensin' with them cigars an' phosphatizin' this time an' takin' th' amount o' Rob's treat in the toys an' sich tricks fer Christmus presents fer them kids an' puttin' in five of our own fer somethin' neat fer that leetle woman?"

"The very idee! By thump! I kin remember how Noay's ark an' tin whistles an' sich do-funnies us'ter stir me up when I was a kid back in Jackson county at Christmus time. Yer a plumb genus, Jim, yer air, by ginger!"

Meantime Rob Desmond, his mind filled with righteous wrath against the unprincipled wretch who had dared "jump his claim," was nearing his cabin. In his anger snow and cutting winds were scarcely noticed. Only one dominating desire possessed his soul—to set eyes on "that rascal of a claim jumper" and order him off his domain forthwith.

When he reached the persimmon thicket he hitched his horse and walked energetically toward his cabin. The door was partly open, held so by little Bessie, who was watching the falling snow. She was alone, the others having gone to the dugout stable to see that the mules were made comfortable for the night.

The glow from the fireplace revealed, to the owner's astonished gaze, a bright eyed little fairy with long golden hair. She was swaying back and forth humming to herself. Then she broke out earnestly:

"Oh, Santy, tum right here an' make our wagon well, an', if you can spare 'em, just drop some nice Trismus presents down."

She ceased suddenly as the form of a man loomed up before her. She had been asking for Santa Claus, and there was now no doubt in her mind but that Rob, in his big fur overcoat covered with snowflakes, was the great personage for whom she had been calling.

"Where's your pa, little girl?" asked Desmond, entering his own cabin.

"He's gone," answered Bessie, looking half shyly at the visitor.

"Gone! Where to?"

"Gone to heben," said the little girl very simply.

"Humph!" muttered Rob to himself. "I didn't know claim jumpers went to heaven."

"Is you Santa Claus?" asked Bessie abruptly, fixing her gaze, first on the great buffalo overcoat dotted with white, then raising her eyes wistfully to the young man's handsome face.

"No, little one, I'm not Santy," said he kindly, the hard look on his face vanishing under the magnetism of the child's presence and guileless prattle.

Desmond loved children. What if some of her folks had wronged him! She was innocent and as pure as the new fallen snow. His anger having subsided, he drew from his pockets a few trinkets and a paper of pretty candies which he had bought at the store, "to be in spirit with the season," he had apologized to Miley. These he placed in Bessie's hands and watched the expression of delight that illuminated the child's face. She had hardly done thanking him when the door opened and Faith entered. Her eyes met Desmond's in one long, searching glance, then she turned white and leaned against the wall. Rob let his hat fall to the floor as he hastened toward the agitated girl.

"Faith! Faith Haskins!" he cried. "Is it you—and here?"

"Oh, Rob, I never expected to see you again!" she sobbed, burying her face in the folds of her shawl. The sight of an old friend had thrown her off her guard and brought back to her sharply and keenly all her trouble and loneliness and made her strangely weak.

When Clint came in a few minutes later he found his sister in the arms of what appeared to him to be a big buffalo. Never having heard that buffaloes were in the habit of coming into cabins and hugging people, he approached Bessie, whose teeth had just decapitated a candy rabbit, and asked in an awed whisper:

"What's got Faith? Is it hurtin' her?"

"I dess not," Bessie whispered back as well as she could with her mouth full. "He's awful nice, an' I dess he's a relation to Santa Claus. See what he dibbed me!" holding up her presents.

Returning from the blacksmith's shop, Ike and Jim left the repaired wheel by the wagon and stole quietly up to the shack. As they passed one of the windows they looked in to see if their victim were there. With surprise they beheld him sitting by Faith's side, holding both her hands in his. The firelight revealed to their astonished sight the two happy faces, while two equally happy children were sitting on the floor at their feet.

The fellows, realizing that their joke had "missed fire," started to walk away, but Rob, catching sight of them, went to the door and insisted on their coming in. After they had partially recovered from their embarrassment—and the genial atmosphere did much toward restoring them to their natural selves—they distributed their gifts and received the young lady's blushing thanks for all their kindness to her. Desmond said:

"Pretty good joke you tried to play on me tonight, boys," with a slap on their shoulders, at the same time laughing heartily. "But you see how it has turned out. Only I'll have to explain. This little woman, Faith Haskins, and I used to go to school together away back near the old Tippecanoe in Indiana.

"We grew up as lovers, but her father thought I wasn't of much account except to pick an old guitar or play the fiddle, so when he had taken his family off to Nebraska he wouldn't allow Faith to write to me, and of course I lost track of her. But I loved her just the same, and that I might become more worthy gave up my idle habits, taught school for a few terms and earned the money to give me a start here in Kansas on this timber claim and am in a pretty fair way to make my living, as you know. I find my little school friend has not forgotten me, and since she had the audacity to 'jump my claim' in my absence I think I may as well keep her here. Now, as you fellows have already had a 'finger in the pie,' I want you to go with us tomorrow to visit the judge over at the courthouse. Something's going to take place there that will celebrate Christmas in proper style. It was kind of you to see to repairing the wagon, but there won't be any use for it going to Uncle Ethan's ranch, for Clint and Bessie will have to stay and help us be happy. You'll go, won't you, boys?"

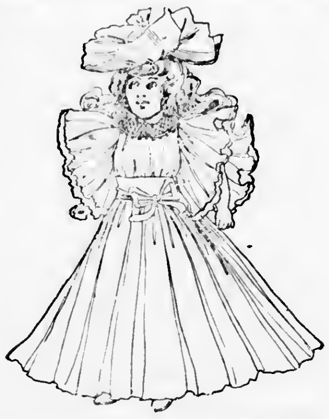
"Go? In course we will! We'll see you and her through, if the earth slips a cog. We will, you bet! By ginger, but you're a lucky galoot! I wish olo Christmus 'd drop a jewel like that inter my stockin's."

GIFT FOR A CHILD.

Pretty Doll of Crinkled Paper and How to Make It.

A doll dressed in crinkled paper is a pretty gift for a child. If the garments are to be put on and taken off the paper must have bands of fine elastic at waist and neck, and tie with ribbons to match the paper.

The simplest method of dressing the doll otherwise is to cut a length of crinkled paper to reach from chin to the doll's feet; run the neck up with silk, and make it join at the back. Cut holes for arms very neatly, and sew up the skirt where it joins. Sew it on. Then sew in frilly or bishop sleeves, joining them under the arms. Next make a very full ballet skirt, and sew this on also, hiding the joins with a sash. Add a smart bonnet or hat, and the doll is complete.



DOLL DRESSED IN CRINKLED PAPER.

Gift For a Bachelor.

The newest chair cushion is heart shaped, and it is a handsome Christmas gift for a bachelor. The pattern is quite easy to cut. Fold a piece of newspaper measuring eighteen inches by seventeen inches in half lengthwise. A small plate may be laid on this folded paper at the top and traced round to act as a guide for the shape of the two sides, which must not come in a straight line from the widest part to the point, but in a curved line. One pretty cushion is covered with pink china silk and edged with a frill of the same. It is ornamented with an applique design in cretonne of red and pink poppies. The applique must be done first. For this cut out a pretty spray of large flowers from a piece of cretonne and tack it in the center of the heart shaped piece of silk, which should first be lined. Then buttonhole all around with floss silk.

A Present For Grandmother.

A pretty spectacle case is quite easy to contrive if the maker of Christmas gifts is possessed of nimble fingers and a little patience. Here cardboard must be called into requisition, and two good sized oval pieces cut, which should then be neatly covered with black velvet, lined with colored silk and afterward joined together, the outer edge being finished with a little narrow gold cord.

Christmas a Lucky Birthday.

There is an old superstition that to be born on Christmas day is to be lucky all one's life, and in Silesia there is a belief that a boy born on Christmas day must be brought up a lawyer or he will become a thief.

The Origin of Christmas Greens.

At the Saturnalia, the heathen prototype of Christmas, it was the Roman custom to decorate the house with evergreens. This was done to give the woodland spirits a refuge from the cold.

Christmas Island.

Christmas island, in the Pacific ocean, and Christmas mountain, on the Antarctic continent, were so named because discovered on the 25th of December.

PALMER NEWS.

CROWDS ATTEND RECEPTION.

Ladies of Palmer and Vicinity Entertained by National Biscuit Company.

The throngs of ladies who attended the reception given by the National Biscuit Company last Saturday afternoon at Memorial Hall enjoyed an entertainment that was not only unique in the history of the town, but was also unusual in the benefits conferred upon the guests. From a social point of view, the affair was a pronounced success, while the benefits of better acquaintance with the products of the National Biscuit Company will be shared alike by the hosts and those who enjoyed their hospitality.

The thorough preparations that had been made for the reception were most apparent in the interior of the hall. Purple and white, the National Biscuit Company's colors, were everywhere in evidence, suggesting the purple and white package of Uneeda Biscuit, one of the best and best known of the Company's products.

In every available nook and corner were ornamental displays consisting of artistic arrangements of the packages containing the various delicacies that have made the fame of National Biscuit Company. The golden yellow of the Lemon Snap formed a harmonious contrast with the bright red packages of Graham Crackers and the royal purple and white of the Uneeda Biscuit But all these and many other good things were put to a better purpose than decoration. The delighted guests were served with refreshments, which included besides the products mentioned, other triumphs of the baker's art such as Butter Thin Biscuit, Oysterettes, Zu Zu Ginger Snaps and others, all of which have their purity and goodness guaranteed by the trade-mark of the National Biscuit Company on each end of the package.

Two most delicious confections were served as dessert — Nabisco Sugar Wafers and Festino Almonds. These deserve special mention, forming as they do, a class by themselves.

The committee having charge of this reception express themselves as delighted by the enthusiastic interest manifested by the ladies of this town, and the hearty coöperation of the Journal in contributing to the success of the entertainment. It was a complete success as a social event, and as an illustration of the merit of the products of the National Biscuit Company.

Who'll Pay the Bill?

That's the question to be settled between H. A. Northrop and a local painter. Mr. Northrop has a sleigh which he has had stored in Marcy's livery stable, and attempted to make use of it Wednesday, but discovered it gone. Investigation revealed that it was in a paint shop, painted and rubbed down and ready for the last coat of varnish. Mr. Northrop had given no orders to have it painted and could not understand how it came there, until it was learned that Mr Marcy had given orders to the painter to get what sleighs belonged to him which needed painting, and paint them. Mr. Northrop's was among the lot and the painter naturally took all that needed touching up. As the old German remarked, "The chob vas done but dhe bill vas not made cudt "

Mail Christmas Packages Early.

The wise person who has Christmas packages to mail will do it early, and not wait until Christmas Day or the day before. Delay until the last moment means that the packages will not reach their destination in time, and are quite likely to go through in a damaged condition owing to the large amount of mail matter at that time. Particularly is this true of packages sent to a distance, for they are likely to go in a sack at the bottom of tons of weight Light and flimsy packages should be avoided also, and wrappings should be good and strong. To insure careful handling and safe delivery it will be well to register Christmas packages, which can be done at small additional cost.

After Delinquent Taxpayers.

Tax Collector Hawkes is after those who have not yet paid their taxes, and is sending out first notices. The voters at the annual town meeting instructed him to have all taxes collected by February 1st or his salary would be reduced. In order to be sure that all are collected by that date he is obliged to begin his legal notices now, as the process takes some time.

1905 Christmas Season 1905

Let the "Old World Wag" as best it may throughout the remainder of the year, but the Christmas Season belongs primarily to the Children. It is a time to which they look forward with fond anticipation, and back upon with pleasure. A season of good cheer, when sorrow and unhappiness are left behind and joy and good cheer rule in the household. A contented mind, a full purse and gratified desires help to make the day pleasant. You furnish the second and visit our store and the rest follows as a matter of course. The Children are the first to be cared for and in our large stock their wants can all be supplied.

We challenge any store to show a better assortment of TOYS than is to be found in our Toy Department.

For LESS than CITY PRICES you can buy

Cars, Engines, Steamers, Hose Carriages, Hook and Ladder Trucks, Tops, Horns, Stoves and Mechanical Toys in abundance. The price—5c, 10, 25, 50c, etc., etc.

Games! Games! Games!

in abundance at 5, 10, 15, 25, 50c, and such a variety! Authors, Geography, History, Ring-toss, Target Games, Spider, Board Block, Sherlock Holmes, Logomachy, etc.

We aim to carry the best line of

BOOKS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

to be found in the market. Henty, Alger, Optic, Meade and scores of other writers are drawn upon and the 25c and 50c stories find ready purchasers.

Stationery is always acceptable, and we can supply the demand along this line. Already we have had a lot of lookers and many purchasers of our high grade Stationery, who pronounce our stock all right.

We wish to call especial attention to our line of Fancy Crockery.

No housekeeper ever has enough of this kind of goods. The fancy Salad Dishes, Berry Sets, Water Sets, Steak Dishes, and the numerous other kinds of Dainty China Novelties add beauty to the most common-place table. Pretty dishes do not satisfy the appetite of a hungry man, but they do gratify his taste for the beautiful.

We need only to mention Handkerchiefs to have you understand that the best for the money can be found here.

TOILET SETS, HANDKERCHIEF AND GLOVE SETS, MANICURE SETS AND AN ENDLESS VARIETY OF FANCY BRIC-A-BRAC CAN BE FOUND, IF ONE DESIRES A GIFT OF THIS KIND. FOR MEN THERE ARE GLOVES, NECKTIES, UMBRELLAS, UNDERWEAR AND HOSIERY. POSSIBLY A SMOKING SET, SHAVING SET OR TRAVELLING CASE MAY PLEASE.

It is not so much the value as the appropriateness of the gift that pleases.

Don't forget that we have a fine line of Staple Dry Goods, from which to choose such as Table Linens, Towels, Napkins, etc., etc. You can combine usefulness and pleasure in your gift.

We have arranged our tables a little earlier than usual for those who want to make their selections, and many have taken advantage of their opportunity to make an early purchase and get just what they want. All pronounce our assortment one of the best. Won't you pay a visit to our store, look over the stock and give us your opinion? Some go elsewhere to look but come here to buy. Won't you combine the two by coming here first and save yourself an extra trip.

Remember the best place to buy Holiday Goods this year as in the past is at . . . .

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 15, 1905.

FORGOTTEN.

The first snow storm of the season, on Sunday, demonstrated that the town by-law relative to the removal of snow from the sidewalks is about as useful — so far as a great many abuttors are concerned — as though it had never been adopted.

ALL KINDS OF TROUBLE.

That is what the Springfield and Eastern is having in getting its line built to Brimfield. And Brimfield people are having nervous shivers for fear that, just as their fondest hopes appeared about to be realized, the two roads will dispose of each other after the manner of the Kilkenney cats and that electric connection with the outside world will remain only a vision of the future.

FOR CHRISTMAS.

When making up your list of Christmas presents have a thought for the friend who has gone to other scenes and other work, perhaps in a distant state, but who is still interested in the news of Palmer and the surrounding towns. What present could be more acceptable than a subscription to the Palmer Journal, which would carry to the absent one, 52 times in the next year, the news of his or her former home and vicinity. No letter which you could write would convey half so much information. Try this, and see if the Journal does not make one of the most pleasing gifts to friends of this sort.

THE CHRISTMAS JOURNAL.

Following a custom adopted several years ago the Journal goes to its readers to-night in magazine form—its Christmas number. The cover, while not so ornate as in some previous years, presents a modest but attractive front page in green and maroon ink on blue-granite stock. Inside are 24 pages, filled with a variety of interesting matter, both local news and miscellaneous reading, the latter including several short and two long stories of a Christmas nature. It will make an interesting number to send to some distant friend. The demand for advertising space has been large — the Journal's Christmas number having made a reputation for itself in past years — but care has been taken that these columns should not overshadow those devoted to reading. They make interesting reading of themselves, and will of course be carefully scanned by the holiday shopper. They present an almost unlimited variety of merchandise, and the merchants who have made use of them will of course benefit accordingly.

THE WATER SITUATION.

The prospect of the town of Palmer being able to deal on reasonable terms with the Palmer Water Company in the acquisition of its plant assumes a new aspect in view of the hearing on the company's bond petition in Boston Saturday. The town at its annual meeting last spring appointed a committee to consider the question of providing water for the entire town. By law it is prohibited from engaging in that business in the village of Palmer without first acquiring the plant of the Palmer Water Company, so the first move of the committee was to try and get a price from that company. It met with little encouragement. The matter was taken under consideration by the company and weeks went by without a reply; finally a price was refused. The committee then made a proposition to the company, offering to call a special town meeting and recommend the purchase of the plant at a price named by the committee, a price which it considered liberal. Again weeks passed by without a reply, but at length the committee was informed that its offer was refused, and that the company would refuse to consider any offer at any price for the acquisition of its plant. The latter part of the account of the hearing Monday for permission to issue $30,000 of bonds announces that the hearing is postponed until to-morrow, and that it is possible that by that time some agreement will be reached for the taking of the plant by the town. This is construed to mean that the company will probably name a price—a reasonable price—at which it will be willing to sell. The town is in earnest over the water matter and will be willing to pay a fair price for the Palmer Water Company's plant, but there will be strenuous opposition should the price be beyond a reasonable figure, and a probable refusal to consider it. It is the wish of all that the matter may be amicably adjusted.

THERE are times when it would be nice to be the king of Spain, and others when it wouldn't be so pleasant, judging from an American standpoint. Extensive preparations are being made for his marriage, next February or March, to Princess Ina of Battenburg, and he hasn't even met the lady yet. Most young men prefer to pick out their own girl and do their own courting, instead of having it done by proxy.

THAT is an agreeable Christmas present which the 30,000 employes of the American Woolen Company have had given them, — a notice that their wages will be advanced 10 per cent January 1. The company has mills in seven states, and the increase will add about a million dollars to the pay roll.

Do you expect to get an invitation to the wedding at the White House?

IT is plainly evident that muncipal ownership is not much of an issue in Boston. That party's candidate for mayor at the election Tuesday received only 500 votes out of a total of over 90,000

EVERYBODY is interested, of course, in the approaching marriage of the first young lady of the land, and all will hope that her future years may be many and full of happiness, with never a shadow of any material size.

THE proposition of Secretary Bonaparte to dismantle the Constitution because but few of her original timbers now remain has raised a storm of protest from all parts of the country. Indignation meetings have been held in many places, and if public opinion carries any weight it will be a long time before the suggestion of the secretary of the navy is carried out.

BOSTON failed to enroll her name in the list of housecleaning cities on Tuesday, Fitzgerald winning the mayorality contest by about 11,000 votes. Frothingham, who gave up a sure reëlection as speaker of the House to make the run, was defeated because of the candidacy of Judge Dewey, who insisted on running as an independent after being defeated in the primaries by Frothingham, for which he has forfeited the respect of a large number of his former admirers.

NOW that Mary Rogers has paid the penalty for her crime it will be well if there is no further display of the mawkish sentimentality which has been prominent in numerous papers and sections of the country. For crimes such as hers the state of Vermont has provided a certain penalty, and while the hanging of a woman — or a man either, for that matter—is not a matter to be gone into lightly, Gov. Bell could see no reason why sex should affect the degree of punishment, and in this he is right. Laws are not placed on the statute books to be regarded lightly, nor are penalties to be set aside for mere sentiment. If Vermont does not desire capital punishment, the way is open to make the change.

THERE seems to be little criticism of the verdict of the Merriweather case. The young man is sentenced to remain within the grounds of the naval academy for a year, and to be publicly reprimanded by the secretary of the navy; though the first part of the sentence is modified so far as to allow him to take part in the annual cruise The investigation brought out the fact that Merriweather's conduct was only that which was expected and approved, if not openly by the officers in charge certainly by a passive cognizance in matters of that kind, and that there was no intent on the part of the young man to injure his opponent. If the result of the fight and the following investigation shall have the effect of ending these fistic encounters, then who shall say that no good has been gained?

THE perils of those employed on the lightships to safeguard the lives of others was forcibly evidenced in the experiences this week of the crew of lightship No. 58, off the south side of Nantucket. The vessel was chained 42 miles at sea, and Sunday, in the severest storm of this season, began to leak. Help was asked for by wireless telegraph, but so fierce was the sea that no vessel could go to the scene, and 2 o'clock Monday morning came the word, "Send help from anywhere—" and then the message broke. Government vessels were started from Boston and Newport as soon as it was possible for them to live in the heavy seas, and one of these became disabled and was blown miles out of her course. A lighthouse tender managed to get alongside Monday, and after standing by for several hours took the ship in tow but had gone only a short distance when it sank, the crew having barely time to get away in their life boat. All were landed safely, but their last 24 hours on board were anxious ones, with incessant hand bailing to keep afloat, and no certainty that help could reach them.

THE football game and its brutalities is occupying the attention of the public just now, and a picturesque view of the game is given by Malachy Hogan of Chicago, a prize ring authority, after seeing a game between Michigan and Chicago He says:

"A prize fight is a pink tea compared with a football game. A prize fight is a a match between two men who try to knock each other out with padded gloves Now, compare the boxing game with the football game. There are 22 husky fellows fighting each other about every minute. It would be fair enough if the fight was between two men, but what kind of a game is it when five or six big fellows jump on one man, after he has caught the ball, and try to kill him I would rather take my chances with Bob Fitzsimmons than to go up against four or five 200-pounders running at full speed to stop me when I am running my best When it comes to comparative brutality the football game and the boxing game should not be compared. The pugilist is a gentleman when it comes to a classification on brutality. He fights one man, while in football all fight one with the idea of putting him out of the game without administering a punch. Give me the boxing game if the question of brutality is to be considered. You don't see any ambulances and doctors lingering about the prize ring, and you don't see anybody quit the ring with a broken leg or a shattered rib The pugilist who gets an upper cut on the point of his chin is around smiling the next day, but I fail to see how a football player can even grin the day following a game in which he has had his ribs fractured or his ankle dislocated."

A Wonderful Bed.

A very costly bed was built in Bombay for a native ruler some years ago. At the four corners were full sized figures of Grecian maidens, the ones at the top holding stringed instruments, while those at the foot bore in their hands huge fans. Extending the full length of the bed was a music box capable of playing for half an hour before the repertory of tune was exhausted. The weight of the body set this music box in motion, while at the same time the figures at the head of the bed fingered the strings of their instruments, while those at the foot waved their fans, a concealed motor furnishing the power that kept the fans going all night long.

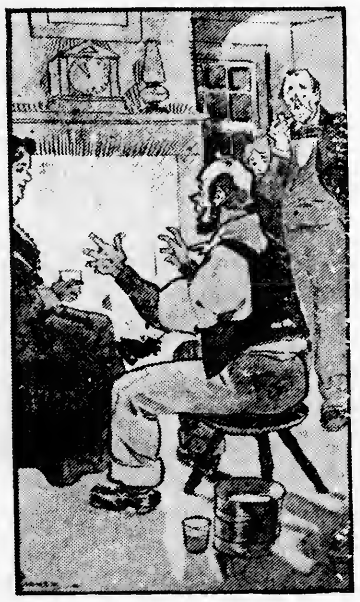
HIRCUS, THE DANCING BILLY GOAT

By

MICKEY FINN

[Copyright, 1905, by Ernest Jarrold.]

IT was Christmas eve, and Patrick Doolan, the foreman of the gas works, had summoned a goodly company of his friends to celebrate the holiday season and the arrival of two barrels of Irish turf from his native town. A bushel of this peat lay glowing in the fireplace. While the snow was softly piling itself upon the window casings and the wind was taking liberties with the shutters Judy Callahan slyly pinned upon the lapel of Dick Walsh, the letter carrier, a sprig of Irish ivy. By inquiry from rheumatic Flaherty, who sat in the ingle nook nourishing his shins, Dick learned that the symbolic meaning of Irish ivy is "I cling to thee." Judy's shriek a moment later indicated that Dick had taken advantage of the information. Just then Jack Doolan, the youthful heir to the Doolan estate, put his head inside the door.



"'TWAS THREE MONTHS O' STRAP AND CARROTS."

"Father, can I bring in the nanny? The snow is fallin' on her through the roof, and she's tremblin' wid the cowld."

"Of course, my son," said Mr. Doolan heartily. "Bring her in. We don't want our milk watered."

"That's a foine baste you have there," said Flaherty. "How much milk does she give?"

"Two quarts a day, but she used to give three quarts a day before her husband died. She's pinin' away since that time, poor gur'rl. I think 'tis the love-sickness she has," said Mr. Doolan.

"Dear, dear, look a' that, now!" said Mrs. Reagan sympathetically. "I always said that nanny goats was sintamintle. And how long is the billy goat dead, Mr. Doolan?"

"'Tis five years the 24th day o' this month," replied Doolan. "Sorra day 'twas whin we lost Hircus. A more gaynial nor a more willin' goat you would not find in all Har-rlem. Sure his death was a tragedy and a calamity."

"How was that?" quavered old man Dougherty, the stonemason.

"Well," resumed Doolan, "'twas a tragedy the way he was translated and a calamity whin his death took away the only chance I ever had o' makin' a fortune.

"'Tis quare about goats," continued Doolan. "They are born wid a certain amount of eddicashun. Show me the goat that wouldn't know a cabbage or a turnip whin he sees it. Of course a goat knows nothin' about machinery. There was a goat that used to stop the horses drawin' a street car, but whin they put a trolley car on the track you couldn't find that much o' the goat as would grease a griddle. But a goat can be eddicated wid sugar and a strap to do tricks. Now, I suppose none o' ye would believe me if I told ye that I taught Hircus to dance as fine a jig or hornpipe as ever you saw in a theater."

A chorus of disbelief arose.

"Yes," said Doolan, "and no Frinch lady could do a finer pass sool on her toes, as they say in the heathen language. You must remember that I was very poor, and I'd be layin' awake nights thinkin' o' some plan by way o' makin' a fortune, and whin my wife bought the two kids to start the dairy the idee came to me like a flash—I could eddicate the goat to dance. Whin I got that idee in me head I could think of nothin' else. Cassidy, how much money do you think a dancin' goat could earn on a theater stage?"

"Well," replied Cassidy, "I should think that $300 a week would be none too little for so dignacious a curiosity."

"There," resumed Doolan. "D'ye hear what Cassidy says? Three hundred dollars a week for half an hour's work a day! Faith, I felt the money in me hand! But 'twas weary work teachin' the goat. An old animal trainer told me that cruelty and kindness mixed would do the job. Whin the goat minded me I tickled his ribs and gave him carrots, but whin he got stubborn I lathered him with a strap. Mrs. O'Brien, you remember the time we had teachin' Hircus to walk across the room on his hind legs?"

"'Deed I do, Doolan!" said Mrs. O'Brien, with a reminiscent sigh.

"Ye'll excuse me, ladies and gentlemen," said Flaherty, rising and putting on his hat, "but I must leave ye. A dancin' goat is too much for my voracity. I couldn't swallow it."

When the door had closed Doolan went on: "Every night after supper the table was shoved back agin the wall and the lesson began. And, would you believe it, it takes three months to teach the goat to stand on his hind legs for five minutes! After that 'twas easier. There was a little gur-rl named Ellen next door that took a great interest in the eddication of the goat. She was about the size of the goat whin she stood up, and 'twas pure joy to see Hircus waltzin' around the kitchen to the music of my fiddle. With the goat's head on her shoulder and her arms around his neck they would whirl slowly around in the dawdlin' circles of the mazy, as the poet says"—

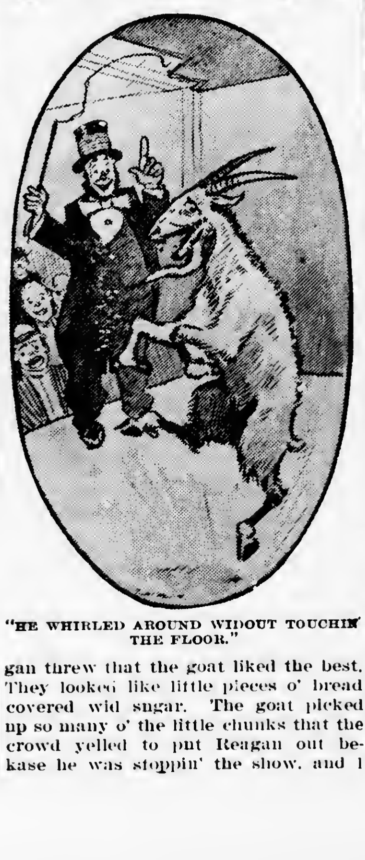
"How perfectly lovely!" exclaimed Judy Callahan.

"After the lesson was over each night I used to give the goat all kinds of tasty things, like potato peelin's, cabbage stumps and such like, as a reward, and 'twas the habit o' keepin' the goat hungry all day that led to the loss o' my fortune. 'Twas three months o' strap and carrots before the goat could do a dacint heel and toe, work as hard as I might, and two weary months before he would nod his head and make a bow the same as if he was before an awjence."

"Hark to that now," said Dougherty to Judy Callahan in a whisper. "A goat makin' a bow!"

"As I said before," Doolan went on, "when the goat had learned to bow at a wink we made his bally suit. The thing that cost the most was the skirt, made of red silk and shaped like a parasol. It looked like a hollyhock turned upside down. Then we put a little green cap wid a red tassel on the goat's head and a pair o' white slippers on his feet. And whin we showed him his picture in the glass he grinned like a woman puttin' on her Sunday bonnet. The tears fill me eyes whin I think that only for that joker Reagan I might be ridin' in me own divvil wagon wid rubber wheels.

"The first public appearance of the goat as a bally dancer took place in a barn in the Bronx. We fixed up a stage wid planks and boxes, and 25 cents was charged at the door. The news got around, and long before the time to begin the show the barn was crowded to the doors. Half the roof was gone off the barn, but that hurt nothin', for the night was clear. I was so afraid that the goat wouldn't do his work that I gave him nothin' to eat for twelve hours before he came on the stage, and the poor beast was fair famished. Whin I walked out on the stage, hand in hand wid the goat, I thought the awjence would go crazy. They yelled wid sheer delight whin the goat made his bow, and every man in the barn was on his feet, and a hundred o' them had cabbage leaves and carrots in their pockets to give to the goat, like the ladies have bokays to give to the play actors. As the goat whirled around doin' a waltz he would stop now and then to pick a bit o' cabbage or turnip that some one threw on the stage. But 'twas what that rogue Reagan threw that the goat liked the best. They looked like little pieces o' bread covered wid sugar. The goat picked up so many o' the little chunks that the crowd yelled to put Reagan out bekase he was stoppin' the show, and I had hard work to get the goat dancin' ag'in. After that the goat seemed to get lighter and lighter upon his feet until he hardly touched the stage. There were times when he whirled around in the air widout touchin' the floor, and the crowd gaspin' wid astonishment at this wonderful beast. And while he whirled he seemed to be gettin' bigger and bigger till he was as round as a balloon the boys play wid. He would go up in the air, whirlin' like a pinwheel, for ten feet, and thin light on the stage soft as a thistledown, and fly up ag'in till he spun up farther and farther, lookin' like a red umbrella on a big punkin, and he was gone through the hole in the roof, thranslated intirely."



"HE WHIRLED AROUND WIDOUT TOUCHIN' THE FLOOR."

"And where did he go?" said the awe struck Mrs. Cassidy in a whisper.

"Some o' the little boys sittin' on the fence outside said he wint up in the direction of O'Rion, and others said 'twas toward Arcturus and Niptune he wint."

"And what was it that Reagan gave the goat?" said the materialistic Walsh, anxious for an explanation of the seeming miracle.

"'Twas yeast cakes that the rogue had covered wid sugar, and the goat ate fifteen o' them."

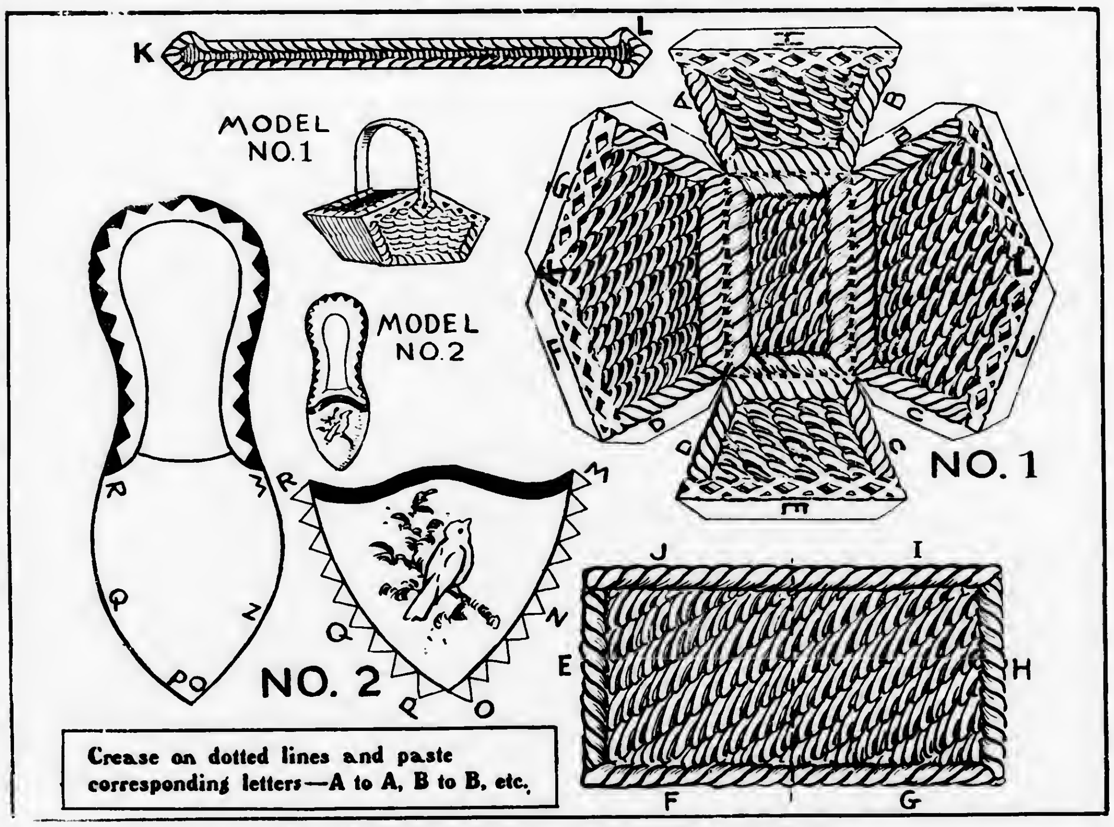
Christmas Cut-Outs For Children



Crease on dotted lines and paste corresponding letters—A to A, B to B, etc.

NO. 1—MARKET BASKET. NO. 2—SLIPPER MATCH SAFE.

These cut-outs may be used for Christmas tree ornaments or as doll house accessories. If it is desired to keep them permanently they should be mounted on thin cardboard before they are cut out. By retaining and using these prints as patterns only, as many of each of the different articles as may be desired can be made of colored paper or cardboard.

His Appointment.

Husband—I think I shall have to go out tonight, my dear. I have an appointment. Wife—Oh, Tom, what is it? Husband—An appointment with my tailor. He is to call here at 8 to collect his bill.

Charcoal.

Charcoal is one of the greatest purifiers of water that we have. Water or any substance allowed to percolate through it will be freed of all animal organisms or foreign particles. It is one of the best sweeteners of the breath. After a hearty meal it is a splendid thing for the stomach if added to it is a little ginger. It is excellent with which to cleanse the teeth, for it removes fungous growth that many tooth powders fail to touch. It relieves pain caused by a burn.

Expert Dyers.

The Tyrians, it is claimed, were the most expert dyers of ancient times. The fabrics dyed with the famous tyrian purple did not assume their proper color until after two days' exposure to the light and air. During this time they passed through a gradation of shades of yellow, green, blue, violet and red, which the dyers understood how to arrest and fix at any moment.

Something For Nothing.

Visitor—Digging potatoes, eh? Farmer's Boy—Yep. Visitor—What do you get for digging potatoes? Farmer's Boy—Nawthin'. But I git somethin' fer not diggin' 'em. Visitor—Indeed? What would you get for not digging them? Farmer's Boy—Licked.—Judge.

Aims of a higher order, even though they be not fulfilled, are in themselves more valuable than lower ones entirely fulfilled.—Goethe.

Some Christmas History.

In 1805 the terms of peace between France and Austria were argued and agreed to on Christmas. In these Austria was forced to make several large gifts of territory to France, and Italy to acknowledge Napoleon as king of Italy.

The United States forces began their withdrawal from Charleston, S. C., to Fort Sumter on Christmas, 1860.

Under duress from the powers, Turkey, on Christmas, 1876, gave out a new constitution for the whole Ottoman empire, which granted Christians equal rights with Mohammedans—a decree, by the way, which the sultan began cheerfully to disobey as soon as the duress was removed.

Why Tommy Is Doing Penance.

Grandma—Are you looking forward to your Christmas dinner, Tommy?

Tommy—Yep, grandma, but not so much as Johnny Jones.

Grandma—Why so, Thomas?

Tommy—His grandma died last week, and he'll get all her Crissmus turkey.

Changing Countenance.

He changed countenance rapidly.

Slipping on his face the Santa Claus mask, he made a triumphant entry into the parlor with the bundle of toys.

The Past Versus the Present.

Oh, Christmas time is coming fast,
So cheer up, girls; be pleasant
And shake the fellow with the past
For that one with the present.

PALMER NEWS.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. MERRIAM.

Resolutions Adopted by the Palmer Historical Society.

At the last regular meeting of the Palmer Historical Society a committee was appointed to draft suitable resolutions upon the death of Mrs. William Merriam. The resolutions prepared were as follows.

Whereas, since it has pleased the Master of Life to remove from our midst a loyal and faithful member of this society, Mrs. William Merriam,

Be it resolved: That in this act of Divine Providence we, the members of the Palmer Historical Society, feel a deep personal bereavement.

Mrs. Merriam was one of the early members of this organization. A regular and faithful attendant upon its meetings, she had always shown a deep and earnest interest in the success of its work. She had enriched its collection of relics with many valuable loans and donations, and above all had given to the society the influence of a most inspiring and unique personality. She had stood among us in an especial sense as a link between the present and the past. Ever entertaining a deep interest in the events of the period in which she lived, her mind at the same time was rooted and grounded in the history and traditions of her childhood. There was in her nature a vein of simplicity, of honesty, and of perfect candor such as is seldom found in this day and generation. Her life was a standing rebuke against all cant, false pride and hypocrisy. She was honor and frankness personified. She was true to the core.

Her interests were wide and deep as the sphere in which she lived was broad. She recognized no distinctions of race or color, creed or sect, but felt a sympathetic heart-throb for the woes of all mankind.

A life like hers cannot exist during a span of nearly four-score years upon this earth without leaving behind it a better atmosphere, a reflective influence for good which will not soon pass away.

Resolved: That we extend to her bereaved husband and family our most heartfelt sympathy, feeling in the midst of our sorrow that in some way or other the Father's will is best, that

"When we come where she has stept
We shall wonder why we wept;
We shall know, by true love taught,
That there is all and here is naught."

Finally resolved: That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the family of the deceased, that they be printed in the Palmer Journal, and be entered upon the records of this society.

FRED WILDER CROSS,

LAVINIA E. CARPENTER

Former Palmer Boy Given Surprise Visit and Gifts in His New Residence.

The following item, taken from the Framingham Gazette of November 24th, will be of interest to the friends of J J Prindiville, formerly of Palmer Center, now residing in South Framingham:

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Prindiville have recently moved into their new home on Union avenue and their many friends thought best to give the house a suitable warming. The affair was planned to take place sooner, but owing to sickness it had to be postponed. None of the enthusiasm or good wishes waned by keeping, however, and Thursday evening there assembled a large company of friends, drawn thither by a sense of good-will and a desire to congratulate John J and his good wife on the handsome and comfortable home they have established.

The company did not come empty-handed either. To give the man of the house a reminder of the friends who think well of him a handsome bookcase and desk of antique oak had been secured and brought along to be put into the "den" Mr. Prindiville has planned in his house, and where, as he sits and muses over the evening cigar, or the latest political sensation, he can have it at his side as a reminder of the friends who think well of him.

Hon. E. J. Slattery made the presentation speech and the whole affair was a complete surprise to the recipient. Mrs. Prindiville had been let into the secret, but her surprise came when Mrs. R M. Raymond presented her in behalf of the friends with a very pretty candelabra.

The evening was passed very pleasantly, the whole house being open for inspection in all the details of its many beauties and conveniences. These comprise as pretty, commodious, and convenient living apartments as heart could wish. Both Mr. and Mrs. Prindiville have shown excellent taste in plan, finish and furnishings of their home in the rooms they occupy.

There was music by the Knights of Columbus orchestra and sociability and everybody wished the host and hostess, with their two bright children, unlimited happiness in the house now so happily warmed.

Mr. Prindiville has been in business in South Framingham about a dozen years now; he has been successful; has become one of the substantial men of the town; and he deserves it. Everybody who knows John is glad of it.

Central Massachusetts Electric Co's. Annual.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Central Massachusetts Electric Company was held in the company's office Monday afternoon, when these officers were elected: Clerk, F. N. SOME QUAINT PINCUSHIONS.

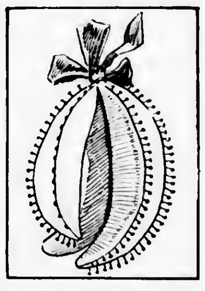
Made to Resemble Fruits and Vegetables—Useful Christmas Gifts.

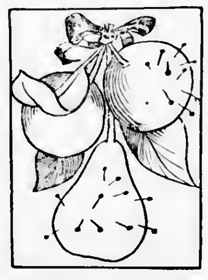
Pincushions in the form of different fruits and vegetables are always pretty and acceptable Christmas gifts. Some dainty ones which are popular in France are worthy of being copied. The first design represents three bananas and is carried out in banana yellow satin, the shadings being put in when the pincushion is completed and the bananas tied together with a deep green satin bow.

In making fruit pincushions always bear in mind to copy the natural thing as much as possible and allow a certain amount of loose material for filling. Draw your design on cartridge paper before cutting it out in the actual material.



BANANA PINCUSHION.

The second sketch is of an apple and pear pincushion for hanging on the wall. You will require a thick piece of millinery wire, which must be covered with dull brown silk or dark brown paper to imitate the twig, and a realistic touch consists in the introduction of some tiny pieces of broken benzoin gum glued on to the stem, so often seen on the real thing. The topmost apple is green, and the material of all the fruit in this group is satin. The shape is cut in two halves neatly joined with silk, the join hidden by pins. The other apple must be a ripe one and shaded accordingly. You will find this shading excellent practice if you are a lover of painting. Please yourself what variety of apple you choose as a model, and if you like to give a coating of gum water to the fruit when completed you will find the colors considerably heightened. The pear must be cut into four portions and will require careful stuffing. The leaves are made of green satin, the veinings painted in, and the leaf stiffened at the extreme edges with fine wire. All smooth surfaced fruits look well made of satin. Greengages, however, are the only kind of stone fruit that can have satin as a covering, for plums and peaches must be made of velvet a shade lighter than the fruit itself in order to afford facilities for shading. Oranges and lemons are always effective, and oriental satin is best for their construction.



APPLE AND PEAR PINCUSHION.

From fruit to flowers and vegetables is not far, and one of the little French trifles especially admired is in the shape of an open and closed pea pod composed of pale green satin. The open pod is made of double satin with wire inserted between, and the peas are actual dried ones colored green and gummed in. They should number the lucky nine. The closed pod is well stuffed and is the actual pincushion. A piece of green silk wire connects the pods and is bent loopwise and finished off with a ribbon bow.

A charming gift is a bulrush and water lily pincushion. The water lily must be accurately copied from the flower and the petals made of a good quality of satin doubled so that the satin is seen at the back of the petals. The center is yellow, and there is a large cool looking satin leaf as a background for the delicate flower, from under which hangs a bulrush made of russet velvet and intended for as many pins as you please. The flag leaf must not, to be true to nature, consist of satin. A deep green linen would be more like the real thing. Sunflowers make handsome pincushions, while the wild rose is dainty for tiny millinery pins; but small petaled blossoms are not easy to carry out and are not of much practical use. There is, however, always a certain fascination in the achievement of fruit pincushions, and they are exceptionally pretty. A bough of tangerine oranges requires careful modeling, but how well it repays care, for the fruit will give quite a glow to the most ordinary bedroom wall paper and create a "false," certainly, but still a pleasant, impression of the glories of orange land.

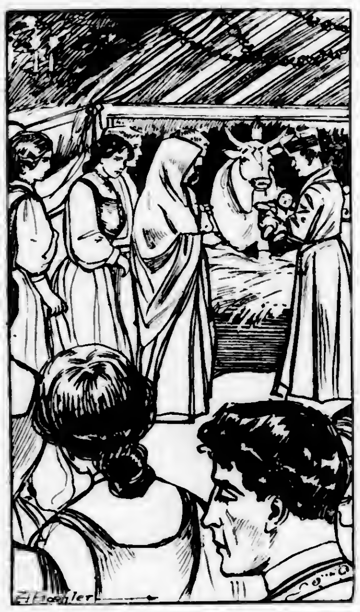
Mexico's Christmas Posadas

TO one who has been away from the United States for a term of years the Christmas holidays there seem like a feverish rush, and the simple pleasures indulged in during the nine days of posadas in Mexico are returned to with a certain measure of relief.

A posada is an inn, and the idea pervading these festivities is that story, known to all the world, of Caesar Augustus, who, in the height of his power, wished to know the number of people who bowed beneath his scepter. In order to determine the fact he decreed that a census should be taken of all the nations composing the great Roman empire. To effect this Augustus sent twenty-four commissioners to the different parts of his world. The edict commanded that every person, rich or poor, weak or strong, should go to the place of his birth or to the original place of his family to have his or her name inscribed in the Roman registry.

Joseph and Mary, who were both of the royal house of David, went to the town of Bethlehem. They found it so full of people on the same mission that they wandered about the town for nine days seeking shelter. On the ninth day they were allowed to stay in the stable of a posada, and there the Nino Santo, or Holy Child, was born. The posadas are held for nine evenings in commemoration of those weary days.

Of course there are miserable homes where no sign of a posada is held, but Mexicans, rich and poor, are generous. No matter how dirty and ragged, every one is welcome in the churches, beautifully decorated, and at the nightly posadas held in them, though there the penatas are omitted, as the celebrations are entirely of a religious nature.



THE BABE IS PLACED IN THE MANGER.

To the children the penatas are very important features of the season. They represent men, women, goats and other animals, beautiful flowers, immense chrysanthemums, giant roses and peonies, lovely dahlias, nuns, monks in full costume and graceful musical instruments. Each figure contains an empty jar or penata of pottery, which is hidden by the decorations or costumes of colored tissue paper, most skillfully applied. The jars are filled with goodies and unbreakable toys.

When friends have been invited to a posada the house is decorated with evergreens and mosses, flowers and tinsel in all the rooms and corridors. In one room is the scene in the stable of Bethlehem — the stable yard and servants, the animals, trees and plants, groups of Biblical characters, little toy fountains. All that money can do to beautify the beginning of the "old, old story" is done according to the taste and means of the host and hostess. The little manger, amid soft lights and draperies, stands ready for the Nino Santo.

A procession of the guests and family forms in another part of the house, and the pilgrims, or peregrinos, march two and two, led by one who carries the Babe. Singing sweet hymns and the litanies, they go through the house, winding in and out of the rooms and galleries.

At last the wanderers stop at the door of the room in which is the manger. Two voices, representing Mary and Joseph, in a wailing hymn beg to be admitted. Voices within chant a denial. Finally a voice announces who they are that plead for shelter; then the door is thrown open, and the peregrinos are allowed to enter. The Babe is placed in the manger, often by a priest, and songs of rejoicing burst forth.

The penatas are next on the programme, the details varying with the fancy of the host.

In a convenient place the penata is suspended, and the little folk, and big ones who choose to take part in the merriment, are blindfolded one at a time, turned around a time or two, then given a stick with which to break the jar if possible. So many trials, then another tries. When one succeeds the contents fall to the floor and a scramble follows to see who gets the most. In some old families there are evenings when the numerous servants partake of the joys of the posada and share in the souvenirs and refreshments provided.—Collier's Weekly.

HIS CHRISTMAS SERMON.

An Aged Wayfarer Who Taught a Curate Contentment.

An English clergyman declares that the best Christmas sermon he ever heard was preached by a woman—and in three words!

"In my little parish, under the sweep of the Sussex downs," he says, "I was walking swiftly home one night buffeted about by the gray clouds of driving rain that the fierce sou'wester swept landward from the sea when a poor, helpless, aged woman asked me for a trifle for a night's lodging.

"Curates are supposed always to be poor. It was Christmas time, and I had just parted with my last sixpence at a lonely hamlet where work was scarce. Still I could not leave my stranger in the street, so I asked her to come with me to my lodgings.

"She shambled along through the mud with her streaming clothes and clouted boots, and we entered my little room. My thoughtful landlady had made my table ready. A plate of hot toast was standing in the fender; the kettle sang vociferously, as if impatient to be used; in front of the fire stood my slippers and an easy chair.

"To my surprise, my poor, worn, haggard companion raised her dripping hands and burst into tears with the words, 'Oh, what luxury!'

"That was the best Christmas sermon I ever heard, and the only one I have never forgotten."—Youth's Companion.

Long Words.

The longest words in English are short by comparison with certain monstrosities in other languages. It is common in German to use compounds which, although not involved or cumbersome in meaning, look alarmingly long, and it is said that one Sanskrit word has no less than 152 syllables.

FOR TOM'S SAKE

A Tree Which Bore Good Fruit

By OTHO B. SENGA

[Copyright, 1904, by Otho B. Senga.]

A MOST wonderful and gorgeous Christmas tree stood in the window of the great store of Warden & Joyce. All day a constantly changing throng of small admirers exclaimed at its magnificence and registered extravagant wishes before it.

Children richly clad and full of joyous anticipations, children in comfortless rags, who knew Christmas only by the sight of the happiness of others, stood side by side and gazed with longing eyes at the bewildering array of costly gifts and brilliant decorations.

A small girl of twelve or fourteen, with face unnaturally old and sharp, unsmiling eyes, critically examined the tree in silence. Up and down, from side to side, her keen gaze wandered.

"I bet it's empty at the back," she finally muttered.

Poor child! Her brief experience had already taught her the unreality and falsity of many glittering things. She stepped quickly into the vestibule where she could see that part of the tree away from the window. A sudden joy flushed into her face.

"It's true—that tree is true," she whispered eagerly. "The back is as good as the front."

She hesitated an instant and then raised her clasped hands beseechingly.

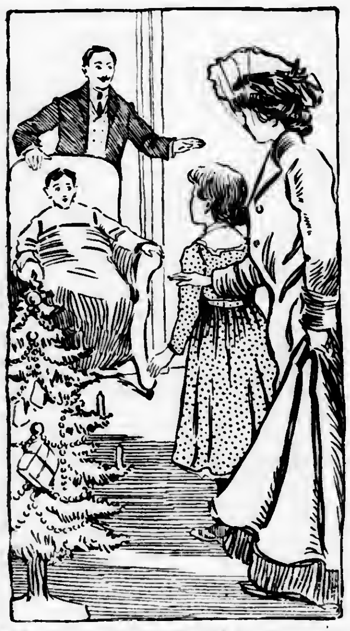
"God," she cried, "send me a tree for Tommy!"

Her intense longing made her voice sharply imperative, and the first word struck harshly on the ear of a richly dressed young lady who was passing close to her.

"You mustn't swear, child!" she exclaimed hurriedly.

"I wasn't swearing," the girl answered calmly, without resentment. "I was praying for a tree for Tommy."

An elegant carriage waited at the curb, and as the young lady stepped to the sidewalk the footman threw open the door. She stood for an instant, as if thinking, and then, turning quickly, she went back into the vestibule, where the child was still standing.



MISS STANHOPE GAVE ONE LOOK AT THE TALL MAN.

"Will you come with me a minute? Out of the crowd," she added hastily as the girl faced her with surprised eyes and an unchildlike, repelling look on her thin face.

"Will you step into the carriage? Please do. I want you to tell me something, and it is so very cold"—

The girl seated herself on the luxurious cushions, the young lady followed, and the inwardly disgusted footman closed the door.

"Will you tell me your name and where you live?" the lady questioned gently.

The child regarded her earnestly.

"Depends on who you are and what you want. You ain't a charity worker nor a slum visitor?"

The young lady smiled understandingly.

"My name is Margaret Stanhope, and I live on Commonwealth avenue. You—you spoke of Tommy."

The girl's face softened.

"Yes; he's my brother. My name is Maggie Taylor, and I live on Burnham street," adding with a return of her former manner, "but it ain't a slum street, and I don't want no charity."

Miss Stanhope smiled radiantly.

"But I do, Maggie. I am so glad our names are the same. I need just what you do not—charity. Tell me something about Tommy." She lingered lovingly over the name. "Why did you pray for a tree for him?"

"Because he's sick. He's only twelve, and he works in an office, and his boss is away, and Tommy took sick after he'd gone. Tommy feels sure that if he was here he'd send his wages to him just the same, for he's a good boss and awfully kind to everybody, but the other man—his pardner—is different."

"Maggie," said Miss Stanhope earnestly, "I wish you'd help me to have a happy Christmas. I am all alone in the world, without any one to care for me, and I want to do something for some one—for some one named Tommy, because—because six months ago I did a wrong and cruel thing to some one by that name. It would help make my Christmas happy if you would let me arrange a tree for your Tommy. Will you?"

The girl drew a long breath.

"It ain't charity?" she asked doubtfully.

"Not to you nor to Tommy," answered Miss Stanhope, [illegible] it will be to me."

"For Tommy's sake," murmured the girl assentingly.

"For Tom's sake," echoed Miss Stanhope tenderly.

The unbending footman was still more disgusted when he was directed to make another round of the stores, and his bearing was absolutely frigid when he was required to carry a most unbecoming load of bundles up the stairs to the little home on Burnham street. That the indignity of a good sized tree was laid upon him also required the concentration of all his thoughts upon the generous wages Miss Stanhope paid to enable him to endure the present situation.

"I keep house for father and Tommy," whispered Maggie, leading the way. "Tommy's in the kitchen. I left him there in the big chair 'cause it's warmer. We'll take all these things in here"—opening the door of a neat sitting room—"and when we get the tree fixed I'll push him in in the chair."

Surely never before was a tree so quickly made to blossom and bring forth fruit, and it was a "true" tree, with gifts on every side.

Maggie surveyed it with joyful pride, her thin face losing its careworn look and becoming almost childlike with the flush of happy excitement.

"Miss Stanhope," she whispered positively, "prayers are answered—I know it now."

Always, in the way he thinks best," answered Miss Stanhope earnestly, adding in her heart, "Lord, I believe—help thou mine unbelief!"

"I'll bring Tommy in now," Maggie said, and went softly out to the kitchen.

She returned almost immediately.

"His boss is there!" she exclaimed excitedly. "He got back yesterday. Ain't he awfully good to come so soon to see Tommy? Tommy looks better already! The boss 'll push him in."

They both turned toward the door as it was opened, and a big armchair with the sick boy in it was pushed carefully over the threshold.

Miss Stanhope gave one look at the tall man behind the chair and started forward.

"This is Tommy's boss," began Maggie, mindful of her duties as hostess, but the greeting of her two guests quite disconcerted her, for Tommy's boss caught the aristocratic Miss Stanhope in a close embrace, while Miss Stanhope cried penitently, "Oh, Tom, Tom, I have been so sorry, and I have wanted you so!"

The Origin of Santa Claus.

Santa Claus is of German origin. This is true if only because that is the German name for St. Nicholas. That he is an old man is because in the ancient pagan feasts in celebration of the decay of the old year and the birth of the new an old man played the principal part. Among the Greeks and Romans it was Saturn, the father of all the gods, and among the Norsemen it was Thor, who was long bearded and white haired. That the saint is St. Nicholas is due to the fact that that venerable personage's feast day was celebrated at about that period. St. Nicholas was a bishop of Myra, who flourished early in the fourth century. He is the patron saint of children and schoolboys, and hence it was natural that he should be a part of a celebration when the children received gifts and when they were allowed to be "heard as well as seen."—New York Mail and Express.

Tragic Christmas Days.

Christmas, which is usually regarded as the happiest day of all the year, has frequently witnessed tragic events. Diocletian began one of his persecutions of the Christmas in 303 when on Christmas day he burned a church full of the followers of the Nazarene.

William the Conqueror is said to have slaughtered 100,000 men, women and children on Christmas day in the year 1068.

In 1170 Thomas a Becket preached a Christmas day sermon that caused his death four days later.

John Wycllf, the great reformer, died on Christmas day, 1384.

In 1663 Christmas day in London saw the great plague at its height. One thousand people were dying daily.

Took the Hint.

"This seems like a sweet dream," he rapturously remarked as he lingered with her at the doorstep.

"It doesn't seem like a dream to me," she replied, "for a dream soon vanishes, you know."

He vanished.

Springfield's Greatest Showing of Christmas Handkerchiefs.

With offices in Manchester, St. Gall and Paris we have the best possible facilities for securing first choice of the best Handkerchiefs in the world, and buying from the makers we get them at the lowest prices. Through the Manchester office we receive the products of the famous Irish and British manufacturers; from St. Gall come the beautifully embroidered Swiss Handkerchiefs; and Paris supplies us with the newest ideas and richest novelties long before they appear in other stores. Christmas of course is the great Handkerchief selling time of the year and to accommodate this great trade the space allotted to this stock has been increased to more than five times its usual size, and duplicate assortments of the most popular kinds are located in various parts of the store. The immense variety of styles affords unlimited choice; our great wholesale stocks, in addition to those bought for retail selling, insures complete assortments—except of the finest novelties—up to the last day of Christmas trading; and with all the room we have given to the display, you can make your selections with comfort.

A GREAT

Holiday Stock of Umbrellas

An Umbrella is one of the most popular Christmas gifts, and a very practical one, being useful and invariably acceptable. There are thousands of styles in our great holiday stock, and whether you want an inexpensive one for everyday use or one of the finest silk, with beautifully wrought handle, you can select here from an assortment unapproached in extent or variety. It is almost unnecessary to say that a given price will buy a better umbrella here than anywhere else.

Fine Silk Umbrellas

A feature worthy of especial note is that nearly all of our Silk Umbrellas are rainproofed by a special process which is a great improvement over the usual process, giving the silk a much greater resistance to rain and rendering it more durable.

The covers are of silk Serge, Taffeta and Levantine; the frames are Fox's English Paragon, the strongest and best frame made, with eight ribs.

FOR WOMEN

At $7.50 Sterling silver handle, with inlaid pearl and mounted with opal.

At $8.50 Long sterling silver handle with Punjab ivory finely etched.

At $10 00 Sterling silver handle, with chrysanthemum design in raised effect, and chain.

At $11.00 Dark Ivory handle, with sterling silver inlay and mount.

At $15.00 Ivory handle with heavy sterling silver balihead.

At $17.00 Hand-carved Ivory handle, animal designs, including mouse, monkey and dragon, mounted with etched sterling silver ball top. The work is of a high grade, done by Japanese artists whose names are engraved on each handle.

FOR MEN

At $7.00 Buckhorn handle with gold trimming.

At $7.00 Handsome Curved Horn handle, with gold nose piece and mount.

At $8.00 Fine Ivory handle, with design in silver deposit.

At $8.00 Lancewood handle, beautifully mounted with gold.

At $9.00 Handle and shank of Palmetto wood.

At $9.00 Handle of Punjah Ivory, beautifully etched, and mounted with sterling silver.

At $9.50 Horn, with silver deposit, etched.

At $11.00 Heavy solid Ivory handle, sterling silver inlaid and mounted.

There is a variety of other designs at each of the above prices.

Our $5.00 Line

This is the most popular price for a really fine Silk Umbrella, and we show over one hundred styles of handles, no two alike. The styles for women include the long 9-inch handles with bulb and cap tops, a fine line in sterling silver, gold and pearl; gun metal and silver deposit; gun metal and ebony mourning handles; pearl with gun metal trimming; the natural wood in great variety. The men's styles come in horn, ivory, buckhorn and English furze, boxwood and other fine natural woods, also gun metal. They come either plain or sterling silver mounted and inlaid. The values are the best we have ever presented at $5.00

Umbrellas for Everyday Use

For everyday use we show a correspondingly broad variety, both 26 and 28-inch, women's and men's. Everyone made on strong frame, with good durable covers, and an unlimited variety of handles in natural wood, silver, gun metal, pearl and gold mounted, at $1, 1.19, 1.50, 2.00, 2.50, 3.00, 3.50, 4.00 and 4.50.

Children's Umbrellas

Good serviceable Umbrellas, 22 and 24-inch sizes, made with small handles to fit a child's hand; excellent values, at 50c to $1.50

Also a line of Play Umbrellas, made extra strong, 18-inch size, at 50c to $1.00.

Christmas Eve At the Grange

By Arthur W. Marchmont

Copyright, 1905, by Arthur W. Marchmont

WHEN Awdrey sent her young brother, Gorham, spurring to Hardinge to fetch me in hot haste to Lanston Grange, I knew the cause must be urgent and scented danger in the air. We had heard whisperings and mutterings of fresh Jacobite trouble, and I feared my uncle, Sir Guy Lanston, had allowed himself to be drawn once more into the business.

Some ten days before a stranger, a Master Richard Lovelace, had appeared suddenly at the Grange, and my uncle had set off on a mysterious visit, from which he had not returned. Now, it was concerning this Lovelace that something of a cloud had come between my sweet Awdrey and me. I had come upon the two in close conversation and had seen the fellow kiss her hand with a look in his dark eyes that had set my blood tingling and my fingers pricking with desire to punish him for his meddlesome intrigues.

Awdrey had but laughed at my moody remonstrance, and when I questioned her would tell me nothing.

"Geoffrey, Geoffrey, you but worsen matters!" she cried, with a toss of her pretty head. "Because a gallant gentleman in a hard case lays his lips to Awdrey's poor fingers, and your wits are not sharp enough to see the reason, you must needs leap like a blind horseman into the slough of mistrust and cry, 'It is Awdrey's fault!' Is everything you cannot understand to be Awdrey's fault?"

"And were my lips to go a-mumbling Mistress Pallister's fingers, would you cry: 'Geoffrey is right! Well met, lips and fingers?' "

But at this clumsiness Awdrey bridled and tossed her head again.

"Mistress Pallister, forsooth!" she exclaimed again in high dudgeon and walked away with her head in the air.

"If you leave me like that, Awdrey, I'd better go and"—

She broke into my surly words with a laugh.

"Yes; better go and stay away until your wits are sharpened enough to guess the riddle of your own mistrust. Mistress Pallister, indeed!"

"I'll return when your Master Lovelace has gone," I replied bluntly and came away and for a week had not been to the Grange. Seven miserable days they had been. So you may think how my heart beat when I got her message by young Gorham and knew that in the time of danger she had turned to me and how willingly I sent my horse galloping straight across country to Lanston that bright December morning.

She was waiting for me in the large domed hall of the Grange, pacing restlessly up and down by the huge equestrian statue, the statue of old Sir Guy, who fought with the great Edward and won his gold spurs at Cressy and Poitiers and founded the Lanston family. Her face and manner were full of trouble.

"I have not forgiven you, Sir Mistrust, though I have sent for you," she said. But her sweet blue eyes were telling another tale.

"You are in trouble, sweetheart. When I have helped you, send me away again if you will," I said.

"You have learned how to stay away."

"And a harder penance never grieved a penitent, Awdrey."

"A sincere penitent should never sue in vain, it is true," she said demurely and then with a smile looked up and added: "So you're forgiven. And, oh, Geoffrey, the trouble is sore indeed!"

"Tell me," I answered, and when she did tell me I saw in truth she had not underjudged it. This Lovelace was a far greater one than I had deemed—no lesser than the young pretender himself. He had come over at the bidding of certain reckless counselors, who had advised that a rising could be organized if he would but show himself to his followers, and now the plans had all miscarried, his presence in England had been discovered, and he had fled to Lanston to hide while means could be devised for his crossing again to France. It was this business which had taken Sir Guy away, and the ill news was come that he had been laid by the heels by his old enemy, the gout, and had done nothing.

Nor was that the worst. Sir Burton Prendergast had got wind of the matter in some way and might be trusted to do his worst against Lanston. A more malignant, rancorous, spiteful rat of a man did not breathe in all the good county of Sussex than Sir Burton, and he had never forgiven Awdrey for having rejected him a year ago nor me for having won her from him and would welcome a chance to strike at Lanston. If it were once known who Lovelace was and that the Grange had sheltered him, the consequences would be no less than ruin. The government had not yet forgiven Sir Guy for his old Jacobite work and would readily seize on a pretext now for punishing him and his.

"I don't know what to do, Geoffrey," cried my cousin, wringing her hands distractedly. "Tomorrow we have, as you know, our customary Christmas eve masquerade and every one will be here, Sir Burton among them, of course. Master Lovelace is known to be here, and if he does not show among the guests suspicion will be aroused, while if he does he may be recognized and we shall be ruined."

"He must be away, sweetheart. I can do it. Why didn't Sir Guy come to me?"

"Because you are not with us in this."

"True, I am no Jacobite, but when was a Hardinge not with Lanston in an hour of trouble? But I can do it. I will."

"I knew you would." And she smiled as she laid her hand in mine.

"I see it," I exclaimed as a thought struck me. "I'll to Shoreham and charter a vessel from old Nick Naselby there, and we'll have her off the coast by dusk tomorrow and a boat in Master's cove, down by Dancher's gully, ready manned for Master Lovelace by then. Let him keep close till then—nay, better, let him ride away openly this afternoon and return secretly after dark, then lie here hidden till the morrow at dusk. I'll be here to guide him, and if we don't trick this Prendergast write me down fool."

"Where can we hide him, Geoffrey?" cried Awdrey nervously. "If any one should come they will surely find him here."

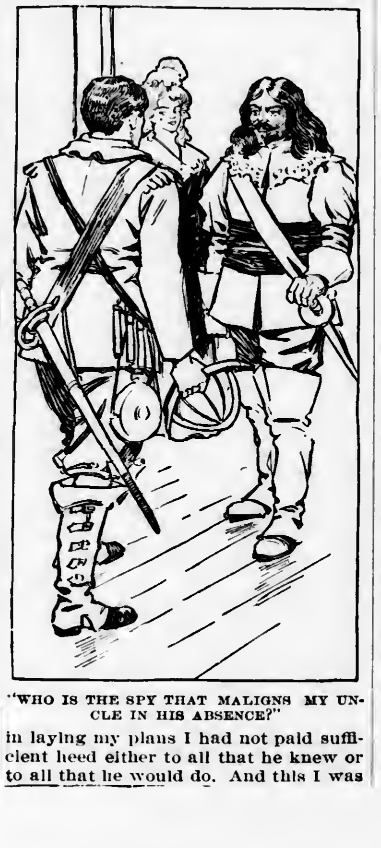
"No one will come, sweetheart. And if they do have you not the safest hiding place in all the three kingdoms, here in this very hall? It is not the first time old Sir Guy has served and saved the Lanstons. Where are your sharp woman's wits, dearest?"

"Of course. I had forgotten the bronze horse." And she smiled.

The statue was, in truth, a hiding place of the best. In the troubles of the civil war the Lanston of his day had conceived a cunning arrangement by which arms and ammunition and at need a fugitive royalist could lie hidden in the great horse. By a shrewd contrivance the legs of the knight swung on hinges and covered a space large enough to admit a man's body, the entrance being concealed by the armor of the knight and the trappings of the horse, and means had been devised by which air could be admitted through the joints of the armor.

I lost no time, but rode off at once on my errand. I had but little difficulty in providing the needed vessel and arranging among my own men for the boat to be in readiness at Master's cove, and, late though it was, I rattled to Lanston to tell Awdrey that all was well.

But Sir Burton Prendergast was not a vindictive malignant for nothing, and in laying my plans I had not paid sufficient heed either to all that he knew or to all that he would do. And this I was to discover at the Grange in the afternoon of that fateful Christmas eve.



"WHO IS THE SPY THAT MALIGNS MY UNCLE IN HIS ABSENCE?"

It was just dusk, and while waiting for Master Lovelace to put himself in my charge Awdrey and young Gorham and I stood in the decorated hall chatting with that mingling of nervousness and strained cheerfulness which the crisis of such a matter will commonly evoke when the actors are all alike full of anxiety and each wishful to hide the feeling from the others.

"You are rather like our guest in build, Geoffrey," said Gorham, but Awdrey protested with a blush and a flash of the eyes. Gorham, boylike, was the more positive for the protest, however, and made me stand with my back to them while he pointed out the marks of resemblance, and they were still discussing this when we caught sight of the guest coming down the stairs. Just at that same moment one of the serving men dashed in at the front door and with signs of great excitement and fear exclaimed:

"There's a troop of soldiers in the avenue, Mistress Awdrey, coming to the house. They are almost at the door."

Our consternation may be imagined. Awdrey turned as white as the marble pedestal of the great statue against which we were grouped. Catching Gorham by the arm, I pushed him and the servant toward the door and whispered:

"Take the fellow away and go to meet the soldiers and shut the door behind you. Quick, boy, quick!" The moment he was gone I darted behind the statue, thrust open the secret entrance to the hiding place and called to Master Lovelace. "Your only chance of safety is here, sir," I said, and without more ado I bundled him into it and closed the entrance after him, whispering to him to lie as still as death. "Open the door now, Awdrey, and remember, sweetheart, Master Lovelace left yesterday!"

Then, making a great effort, we began to talk and laugh together, much in our usual fashion, when Gorham came back with the officer in command of the soldiers.

"I am sorry to intrude upon an unpleasant errand at such a time, madam," he said to Awdrey, "but unhappily I have no option. I am Captain Hilary, and my instructions are that a person of dangerous importance, no less than the young pretender, is here in Lanston Grange disguised as one Richard Lovelace, and I have to request you to deliver him to me."

"Perhaps you will allow me to answer you, captain. I am Sir Guy Lanston's nephew, Sir Geoffrey Hardinge, at your service, and caring for matters here in my uncle's absence. My cousins are scarcely fit to deal with such a business. A Master Richard Lovelace was here, but if you will inquire you will find that he left yesterday."

The officer answered suavely:

"My instructions are very precise and clear, sir."

"That may be, but I am not concerned with them. Whence comes your information? Who is the spy that maligns my uncle in his absence?"

"I cannot reveal the source of my information, sir, but I have my duty to do," answered the officer.

"And will do it like a gentleman and a man of honor, I am sure. And since we have many Christmas guests on the point of arrival I would beg you to do your will speedily."

Without more ado, a number of the men were brought in, and while Awdrey, Gorham and I waited in the hall they spread all over the house and searched it from roof to cellar. At the end of an hour or so Captain Hilary came with many apologies for the unwelcome business and declared that he had evidently been misled by wrong information.

We watched the soldiers form up and depart, and Awdrey drew a deep sigh of relief as she linked her arm in mine.

"How good that you were here, Geoffrey," she whispered. "And what next?"

"As soon as they are well away your guest and I must be off. Gorham, see that the horses are ready and then slip away and watch the men well out of sight and note the road they take. Quick, lad."

Awdrey and I waited alone together in the hall. The strain of the excitement had wrought upon her nerves somewhat, and she was very sweet, gracious and loving as I sought to soothe and reassure her. Gorham came hurrying in.

"There's something wrong still, Geoffrey. Sir Burton Prendergast was waiting by Overbury Cross and met the captain there. They had a long conference and are now coming back here together. Can Sir Burton know anything?"

"We shall see and must hope he does not," I answered quietly. And soon after Captain Hilary returned, Sir Burton with him.

The officer came to the point at once. He had learned that the prisoner he sought was still concealed in the house and said he must therefore take further measures and must remain in the Grange.

I did not like the thing at all, and liked it far less when, at Sir Burton's instigation, he said he would remain in the hall, that all must pass in or out of the house by that way, so that he could see them, and that all the other doors must be locked, with men posted outside.

It was in all truth a very awkward predicament, and as I was racking my brains for some expedient young Gorham's words, that I was like Mr. Lovelace when seen from behind, occurred to me and suggested a plan to outwit them. If the soldiers remained in the hall poor Master Lovelace must either be starved or driven to surrender, and either event spelled ruin. My plan was therefore to play at escaping from the house, get to my horse and lead the soldiers a dance across country in pursuit.

There was a small casement from which I could easily leap to the terrace below, make a dash for the stable yard where the horses were ready and ride away across the park beyond. That was easy, but it must be so done that one or other of the sentries should catch sight of me and thus bring the rest of the pack upon my heels.

I knew where the men were posted, and, having from an upper window attracted the attention of the groom who had my horse in readiness, I went down, opened the casement and leaped out. It was now getting dusk, and a soldier who was close at hand saw and challenged me instantly and discharged his musket as I was darting toward the stable.

In a moment the whole place was in the utmost confusion, and as I mounted, taking care to pretend a violent attack upon the man who held my horse while I told him to say I was a stranger to him, the troopers were already to horse and came clattering round the old house after me.

Things went just as I would have had them. I was careful that none of the men should see my face, and I put my horse at the hedge and leaped into the park.

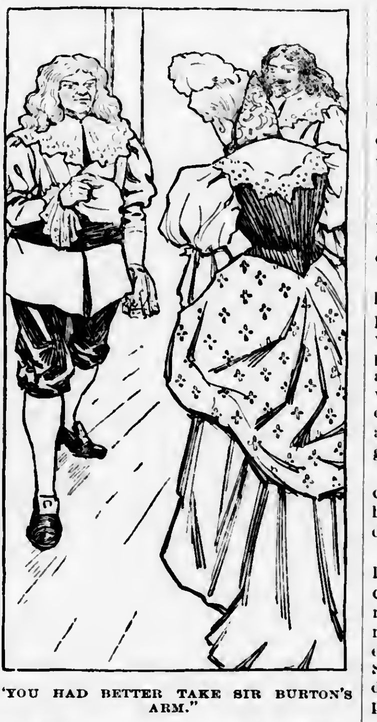
I did not hurry matters at the start. The hedge caused a little trouble to some of the troopers, and, my wish being to bring as many of them as I could away from the Grange, it was my cue to let them think that they could catch me, but this had consequences of a different kind. Those who could not take the leap stopped to empty their muskets after me, and then, finding the gate, they came streaming through.

Old Noll had little relish for the shooting, and when one of the balls, from an accidentally well aimed shot, came ripping and singing close to his ears he shook his head and plunged forward as though impatient to be out of range.

It was a new sensation to play the part of the fox in the hunt, but I had no qualms about the result.

I went easily across the great park, therefore, dropped into Winthrop lane at the end, rattled across Twinbury common and skirted the three cornered copse, being careful all the time to keep as much in sight of the hounds as the fast darkening evening would allow.

Once I played a trick on them and let them come almost upon me. I had breathed old Noll up the steep side of the haunch, and once across it I dismounted and waited for my pursuers. On catching sight of me the men raised such a shout of exultation as brought all the laggards spurring up, and they dashed toward me, making sure of their capture.



"YOU HAD BETTER TAKE SIR BURTON'S ARM."

But I was ready, and, picking my way along the zigzag sides of the fir wood there, I carried out the plan I had formed. At the bottom of the valley, between the haunch and Dandy Chine, lie the Quagmire woods, as nasty and dangerous a bit of country as the name could mean, and into this I purposed to lead them by degrees. Noll and I knew the way well enough, but it was another case with the fellows who were after me. I led them on, keeping in sight till they were well into the middle of the woods, and when I reached the sudden turn by Dead Man's corner I gave Noll his head, and away we flew along the narrow track, leaving the men floundering in the quagmire, calling to one another and shouting and oathing finely.

We were soon clear off, and, urging the old horse to his utmost efforts, I headed in the direction of Hardinge and rattled home at a pace which would have surprised the soldiers indeed could they have seen it.

Once at Hardinge I changed my costume rapidly, while another horse was saddled, and then galloped back through the night to Lanston. I was all anxiety to know how matters had sped there in my absence and hoped indeed that Master Lovelace had already been released and was away with young Gorham, as I had arranged.

But to my chagrin my ruse had been but partly a success. Captain Hilary and Sir Burton were still at the Grange and in the hall awaiting the return of the troopers with their captive. A number of the guests had arrived and were grouped about in the rooms and hall looking mightily ill at ease and uncomfortable, while Awdrey was far more distressed than before and had been weeping.

"You have been away, Sir Geoffrey?" said the captain.

"I am not aware that I am your prisoner or accountable to you for my movements," I answered brusquely. "I think you have carried this farce far enough. In truth, I shall hold you responsible for the outrage to which I have been subjected. Because I chose to leave here and gallop to Hardinge for a change of costume your fellows, forsooth, must needs come clattering after me, firing their muskets and actually putting my life to the hazard. You'll find them now hard stuck in the bogs on the other side of Muttlebury haunch. But the thing is intolerable. Come, Awdrey, let us go to the guests and leave this gentleman to do his will."

The captain's face darkened as I said this, while Sir Burton Prendergast gave me an ugly, sneering look. And when Awdrey put her hand on my arm she showed in her fingers a slip of a note and whispered, "Take it. Danger."

"This farce has gone far enough, Sir Goeffrey, as you say," cried Prendergast, growling angry and coming to us. "Mistress Awdrey will remain in my charge. Have a care," he added in a whisper which could not reach the captain's ears. "I know the secret of this statue and shall tell it unless Mistress Awdrey purchases my silence in the way I have told her."

I could have struck him for his mean, cowardly threat, but I masked my temper.

"Probably she will put herself in my hands, Sir Burton, seeing that she is affianced to me."

"If she does not wish to ruin her father and you all, she will tell you rather that she is affianced to me, Sir Geoffrey. A word from me and this thing will be known. And I am in deadly earnest."

But the game was not lost yet for all that. I knew that my ruse had drawn off nearly all the troops and that if I could but smuggle Master Lovelace out of the statue he could get away easily from the house with one of my men to act as guide.

I stood a moment as if thinking in great perplexity, and then, giving Awdrey, who was very pale and frightened, a significant pressure of the hand that lay on my arm, I released it.

"I see no other course, Awdrey, but to comply. You had better take Sir Burton's arm and go to the ballroom. We must set things going or the whole county will think we are mad."

His face lighted with triumph as he held out his arm and my sweet Awdrey placed the tips of her fingers upon it, while I turned to Gorham and, under pretense of giving him some directions about the evening's arrangements whispered that he was to get the prisoner out when I had cleared the hall and send him away with my man as guide.

I exchanged a few sentences with the captain, who stood plucking moodily at his mustache, and then went after Awdrey.

All the guests were now in the great ballroom, and, signaling to Awdrey to come with her partner to me, I took my stand close to the door of a small room that lay between that and the dining room. I maneuvered so that Sir Burton stood between me and the door, which I placed ajar, and then my plan was ready.

"This is a serious matter, Awdrey," I said, "and I think Sir Burton and I had better talk it over together."

"I have no wish for your interference, Sir Geoffrey," he replied insolently. "I can manage my own affairs."

"But this is more my affair than yours," I retorted. And before he knew what I was intending I linked my arm in his and pushed him roughly through the door and, clapping my hand on his mouth, forced him through into the dining room beyond. Then I freed his mouth, and he did precisely what I had reckoned on his doing.

He sent up a cry for help, shouting that there was treachery, and called for Captain Hilary, who came running in from the hall, on to which the dining room opened. As soon as the captain entered I slammed the door behind him, and this gave Gorham his cue to act, and, setting my back to the door, I turned upon the two men.

"This is a private quarrel between Sir Burton Prendergast and myself, Captain Hilary, and you will have the goodness not to interfere."

"There is treachery afoot!" shouted Sir Burton, mad with rage. "The prisoner you want is in the hall concealed in the statue, captain. This is a trick to cheat you of him."

"Let me pass, sir. I shall hold you responsible," said the captain to me on the instant, speaking very angrily.

"Responsible for what?" I exclaimed. "The man's mad. Does he mean that he and you have been all this time in the hall there and he has given you no inkling of the story he now tells? You don't believe that, surely?" I said, holding my place at the door and listening with all my ears for some sound that Gorham had done his work.

"Let me pass, sir!" cried the officer, drawing his sword. "In the name of the king let me pass!"

"Do you draw upon an unarmed man?" I exclaimed, and as I spoke I heard a sound from the hall which seemed to show that young Gorham had succeeded.

"If you hinder me further your blood will be on your own head. Will you let me pass?" said the officer fiercely.

"Do you mean you would murder me for a cock and bull story such as Sir Burton Prendergast's?" I asked, delaying him to the last safe second. "The door there through the anteroom is open, but if you prefer this it is nothing to me."

He dashed out sword in hand, and Sir Burton was following him when I laid my hand on him and barred the way.

"I have a reckoning with you," I said, for I wished to give time for Master Lovelace to get clear away, and words between us grew hot and fast until Captain Hilary came back and demanded that Sir Burton should come and explain the secret of the hiding place. I let him go then and followed.

Then Awdrey and some of the guests came out into the hall, and a pretty scene of cross purposes followed. Sir Burton Prendergast asserted that the horse was the hiding place, and he and the officer tried vainly to discover the opening until Captain Hilary, losing all patience, declared that he would have the statue hewn in pieces if the secret could not be found.

"But there is nothing in it," I said for the twentieth time, and at length, when I saw Gorham among the rest and a glance told me all was well, and fearing, moreover, that the statue would really be destroyed, I myself opened it.

"You can see for yourself," I said. And while Captain Hilary thrust his head into the opening a smile ran round the faces of the guests, who came crowding forward in curiosity at the secret of the statue and amusement at the apparent farce of the proceedings.

The captain flushed with vexation at cutting so sorry a figure and was in doubt whether to vent his anger on me or on Sir Burton.

"There was some one there, I know," said the latter, trying to bluff it off.

"Do I understand that you make an insinuation of falsehood against me, Sir Burton Prendergast?" I asked, facing him and speaking sternly. "This matter is now personal to me." And, not relishing my stare and having no stomach for a quarrel, he flinched and with a shrug of the shoulders said to the officer:

"I am very sorry, Captain Hilary, but it seems I was wrong."

"What do you propose to do next, captain?" I asked. "We are at your commands, but you will understand that our Christmas keeping is not likely to be the merrier for any prolonging of this matter."

"I shall hold you responsible for this, Sir Burton. You have kept me here while things have been arranged for the prisoner's escape. I withdraw my men and shall make my report." Thus the interfering bully found himself prostrate between the two of us and in danger of kicks from us both. "If the prisoner was in concealment there and you knew it you have prevented my capturing him. Why didn't you tell me, sir?"

I smiled at this turn, but it was not our cue to let the captain believe we had ever concealed any one.

"Rest your mind easy and do not blame even this meddling mischief maker causelessly. We have no one at the Grange whom we wish to conceal." And this was true, for by this time Master Lovelace was well on his way to the boat.

Captain Hilary went away then, grumbling and smarting with the irritation of a man who feels he has been tricked, but cannot lay finger on the proof, and as soon as he was gone I signaled to Awdrey and Gorham to lead the guests away while I detained the cowardly traitor who had come so near to causing serious mischief.

"A word with you, Sir Burton," I said shortly. "You have acted tonight the part of a coward and a spy, and in doing it you have cast imputations on me. Tonight I do not make it a personal matter, but tomorrow, if you are still in the county of Sussex, or if within six months you show your face here, I give you my honor that I will horsewhip you first and shoot afterward. You know whether I am a man to keep my word."

He turned pallid with fear, said not a syllable and without more than one sneaking, furtive, frightened look at me slunk away and the next morning left the country for his health's sake.

I was still loitering in the hall when Gorham came and told me how he had managed to get Master Lovelace away, and as I was praising him for his smartness Awdrey came.

"Is all safe now, Geoffrey?"

"Yes, sweetheart; you can dance with a free heart."

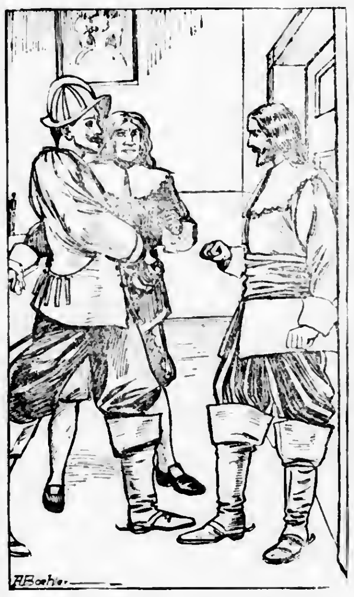
"A 'free' heart?" she echoed, playing on my words and smiling.

"So far as all that is concerned."

"'All that' was very terrible while it lasted. But you did splendidly."

"A penitent had to earn his forgiveness, Awdrey. Is it earned?"

"Not quite earned yet. You gave me up very readily to Sir Burton, you know," she cried and withdrew the hand she had slipped into mine, moved some paces away and stood glancing at me, demure in face, but with eyes all alight with smiles.



"LET ME PASS, SIR!" CRIED THE OFFICER.

"How can I earn it? I did what I did for the best."

"You are bad at guessing riddles," she laughed.

"She's under the mistletoe, Geoffrey! Can't you see?" cried Gorham from the doorway, with a laugh.

"Marplot, Gorham!" exclaimed Awdrey, blushing rose red. But before she could turn to run after him I had caught her in my arms.

"It is Christmas eve, sweetheart, and I am a clown of a penitent," I whispered as I kissed her.

"You deserve to be punished for your dullness," she protested.

"Then give it me back, Awdrey." And I held her happy, blushing face close to mine.

"If I do it's under compulsion."

"That's a new name for mistletoe," cried Gorham again as he ran off to join the dancers.

We lingered a moment for that which was under neither mistletoe nor compulsion and then followed him, forgetting all about the recent crisis and as happy a pair of lovers as all Sussex could find that merry Christmas eve.

Christmas In Rome.

A characteristic sight which precedes a Roman Christmas is the so called cattio, or sale of fish by auction, which is held at San Teodoro, near the forum, in the small hours of the morning, and every year attracts large crowds of buyers and sightseers. It is a sight worth seeing, the vast circular market literally packed with row upon row of baskets, in which the scaly fry are carefully arranged, the light glancing off their many colored scales in a thousand prismatic reflections, while the owner of each stall shouts at the top of his voice and the merry crowd goes round laughing and bargaining and trying to cheapen the fish, for at Christmastide it often reaches fabulous prices, and one is reminded of the extravagance of the ancient Romans, one of whom is said to have paid 20,000 sesterces for a single gray mullet.—London Mail.

A Recipe For Plum Pudding.

Crumble a pint of breadcrumbs from the center of a stale loaf and pour over them a cup of scalded milk; when cool add three-quarters of a cup of sugar, a teaspoonful of salt and the yolks of four eggs beaten together; chop a half pound of suet and thoroughly mix with it a half pound each of raisins, currants and almonds; add a teaspoonful each of cinnamon and nutmeg, a third of a teaspoonful each of cloves and mace and the whites of the four eggs stiffly beaten; serve with hard sauce.

The Animals At Christmas

SAID Santa Claus, "'Tis Christmas eve
(The animals looked pleasant),
And each of you will now receive
His yearly Christmas present.
But I'd be glad if every guest
Would mention what he'd like the best."

The Tapir said: "That pleases me.
I'll state succinctly, therefore,
If I may be so bold and free —
The only thing I care for
Would be those matches on the shelf,
With which I'd like to light myself."

His wish was granted. Then up spake
A timid little Adder:
"Sir, but a trifle it will take
To make my Christmas gladder;
A slate and pencil, if you please,
Would let me do my sums with ease."

The Reindeer said: "You may believe
I'd be a happy fellow
If I were sure I would receive
A good sized umberrellow;
And also I'd like four golosh-
Es and a rubber mackintosh."

The Pig a fountain pen desired;
The Cow tin horns requested;
The Horse, for a new hat acquired,
His gratitude attested.
The Caterpillar said: "I am Proud of my caterpillarsham."

So all of them were gay and glad,
And they were happy, very;
They liked the presents that they had
And waxed exceeding merry.
Dear humans, at your Christmas feasts,
Pray take a lesson from the beasts.

—Carolyn Wells in Reader.

Christmas Candy.

To make chocolate caramels dissolve over a fire one cupful of molasses and two teacupfuls of sugar; add one-quarter of a pound of grated chocolate and a piece of butter the size of an egg; boil for fifteen or twenty minutes; pour into flat buttered dishes to the depth of a quarter of an inch and when cold cut into squares an inch in size.

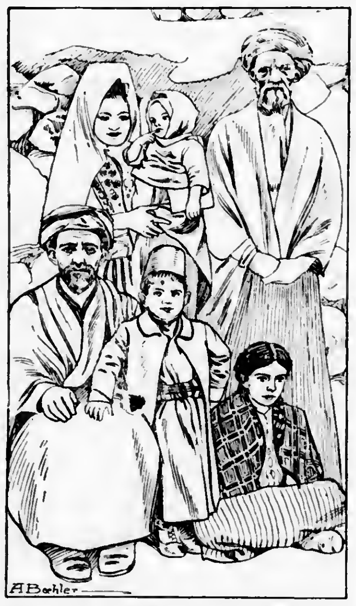
Christmas Eve In Bethlehem

BETHLEHEM, the central spot of interest in the Holy Land at Christmastide, is a Christian town set in the heart of Mohammedanism, where once a year the Greek church grants the use of the grotto of the Nativity to the Latin church. The ceremonies begin on Dec. 24 by the image of the youthful Christ being carried from the basilica of St. Helena to the sacred grotto of the Nativity, where the traditional spot of Christ's birth is marked by a silver star set in the rocky pavement.

The service begins at 10 o'clock in the evening. It opens with the chanting of psalms without any musical accompaniment. The patriarch of Jerusalem usually officiates in the grotto, but on this occasion he is represented by the Latin bishop. The interior of the church is most picturesque, for there are only a few chairs provided for foreign visitors, while the bulk of the congregation is made up of the Bethlemite women in their blue dresses with red frontlets, wearing peaked caps when married and flat caps covered by white veils when single.



TYPICAL BETHLEHEM FAMILY OF TODAY.

As they enter the church they at first kneel down and then sit upon the ground in true oriental fashion. "In the dimly lighted church," says one who has seen the service, "these squatting varicolored figures, with their beautiful faces lit up by fits and starts by flashes of the candles, intent on devotion, seem like so many modern Madonnas come to celebrate the glory of the first Madonna."

Precisely at midnight the pontifical high mass is celebrated, the figure of Christ is brought in a basket and deposited upon the high altar, and the procession forms to accompany it to the crypt. As the long, chanting procession winds through the dimly lighted church there is something weirdly solemn about the ceremony, and as the sacred image passes various acts of worship are performed by the devout attendants. On the procession moves through the rough hewn, dimly lit passages from the Latin church to the grotto of the Nativity.

When the procession of richly robed ecclesiastics reaches the silver star set in the pavement the priests pause and stand in a group about the basket, which is deposited upon the star. Around this star is the inscription, "Hic de virgine natus est" ("Here he was born of a virgin"), for this is the spot upon which tradition places the actual birth of Jesus. There the impressive narrative of the birth of Jesus as found in the gospels is slowly recited, and when the passage (Luke ii, 7), "And she brought forth her firstborn Son and wrapped him in swaddling clothes and laid him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn," is read the figure is reverently picked up from the star and carried over to the opposite side of the grotto, where it is put into a rock cut manger. This concludes the service.—London Sphere.

Mistletoe Myths.

Many English girls believe that they will not be wedded inside of twelve months unless they have at least one kiss under the mistletoe. In many counties a berry is plucked from the mistletoe with each kiss, and when there are no berries no kisses are allowed. Mistletoe used to be considered a charm or amulet to ward off the baleful influence of witches. It was also considered that its influence was irresistible, that no one could possibly pass beneath it without yielding to its power, and hence both matron and maid must submit to the salutation which has since become customary.—Self Culture Magazine.

Lorenzo Dow and Burr.

When the timid colonial clergymen were afraid to criticise Aaron Burr's treason they asked Lorenzo Dow what he thought of Burr's meanness. He raised both hands like a great V and shouted: "Aaron Burr mean! Why, I could take the little end of nothing whittled down to a point, punch out the pith of a hair and put in 40,000 such traitor souls as his, shake 'em up, and they'd rattle."

Why His Head Didn't Ring.

Two Scotsmen turning a corner came into collision. The shock stunned one of them. He pulled off his hat and, laying his hand on his brow, said: "Sic a blow. My heid's a-ringing aga'n."

"Nae wonder," said his companion. "Your heid was aye empty—that makes it ring. My heid disna ring a bit."

"How could it ring," said the other, "seein' it was aye crackit?"—Scottish American.

O MISTLETOE

By NINA PICTON

Copyright, 1905, by American Press Association

What could I do?

THREE times she passed beneath the mistletoe,
With face so arch and eye of blue,
And I, distraught, what could I do?
Rank coward—I turned round and let her go.
O mistletoe!

From every nook and corner blazed the light;
Eyes gleamed like stars in matchless ray,
Yet ne'er an eye of black or gray
Shone full and soft as hers that old year night.
O wondrous light!

Each one waxed bold as forth she came again,
And o'er her golden hair the bough
Of witchery hung. My hour came now.
I caught and kissed her like a man insane.
O happy swain!

She neither screamed nor smiled nor chid me then,
But brushed her cheek like thistledown,
And then a tiny, childish frown
Came 'twixt her brows. "At last!" cried she. "Oh, Ben, Slowest of men!"

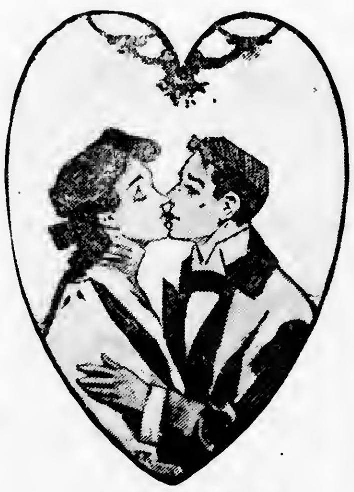
No ear but mine heard that imperious blame.
The crowd had passed. We twain stood there
In perfect bliss, without a care,
And o'er and o'er I breathed her perfumed name—
O Rose aflame!

The joy bells rang. The old year crept away.
Lusty and young the new year stood,
Aglow with promise, life and blood.
Ah, never was such night or holiday—
For all they say!



I caught and kissed her.

CHRISTMAS IN THE VAL DI ROSE

By

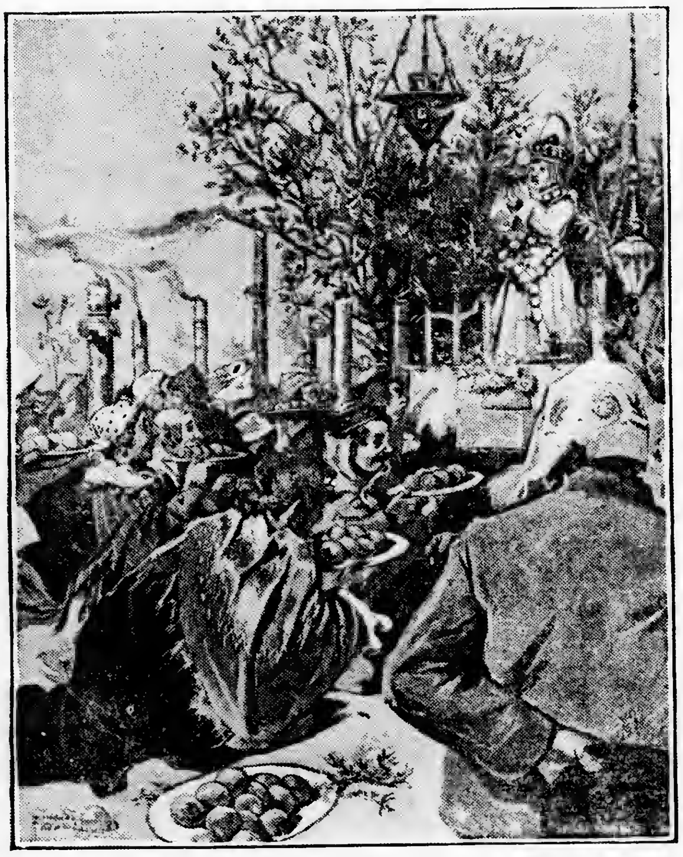
WALTON WILLIAMS

IN mediaeval times, when learning was rare and confined mostly to the regular clergy living in monastic communities, it became the fashion to illustrate the gospel narratives by means of more or less realistic dramatic representation. This method of instructing the unlettered was borrowed from the old heathen mysteries, and the monks and nuns who devised the pious scheme made every effort to impart a reverential understanding of the subject illustrated. This is the origin of the mystery or miracle plays and also of the sacred tableaux vivants which in time were enacted in the rural churches. These living pictures always illustrated some Biblical subject and were probably of great spiritual benefit to those who could not read.

It was thus that the great features of the Christian religion were made intelligible to the public. The practice began early in the tenth century and grew in favor for at least 200 years. In the thirteenth century, however, the custom had become so subject to abuse that the clergy began to frown upon it, and finally they prohibited all forms of Biblical representation in the churches.

In time most of the Easter mystery pictures disappeared from the churches, but many of the Christmas illustrations had acquired such a firm hold upon the popular heart that they remained and have been brought down to the present day in a somewhat modified form. Such is the "Bambino," which is seen today in all parts of the Christian world and which has come to possess almost a ritualistic significance.

Another Christmas mystery which still survives, although its perpetuation is confined to a limited region, is the quaint and decidedly impressive Christmas ceremonial known as "the offering." This custom has been repeated for centuries on Christmas day in the churches of the Italian highlands. It is illustrative of the visit of the magi to the infant Jesus at Bethlehem. A little boy is chosen to represent the Saviour. Dressed in a white robe, wearing a gilded crown and holding a globe in his hands, he stands upon an altar surrounded by olive branches and a multitude of lighted candles. Votive lamps hang above him, and abundant offerings of fruit and flowers are at his feet. A crowd of peasants, both men and women, clad in festival attire and wearing the picturesque head coverings of the Tuscan mountaineers, bring oranges and pomegranates from their tiny gardens and offer them devoutly to the weary little representative of the Lord of the harvest.



THE OFFERING IN THE VAL DI ROSE.

Wordsworth's "Joke."

A rare old book, called "The Living Authors of England," published in 1849, commences with a study of Wordsworth, in which is recorded what is said to be the only joke the poet ever made. At a friend's house after dinner, it appears, the conversation turned upon wit and humor. Thomas Moore, who was present, told some anecdotes of Sheridan, whereupon Wordsworth observed that he did not consider himself a witty poet. "Indeed," he said, "I do not think I was ever witty but once in my life."

Being pressed to tell the company what this special drollery was, the poet said, with some hesitation: "Well, I will tell you. I was standing some time ago at the entrance of my cottage at Rydal Mount when a man accosted me with the question, 'Pray, sir, have you seen my wife pass by?' whereupon I answered, 'Why, my good friend, I didn't know till this moment that you had a wife?'"

The company stared and upon realizing that this was all there was to the poet's joke burst into a roar of laughter, which Wordsworth smilingly accepted as a genuine compliment to the brilliancy of his wit.—Harper's Weekly.

He Goes Out.

"That's a pretty swell smoking jacket you've got on," said the caller.

"Smoking jacket?" replied Henpeck. "Why, this is my house coat."

"Well, that's the same thing"—

"Well, I guess it isn't the same thing; not in this house. When I want to smoke I have to put on my overcoat."—Philadelphia Press.

His Dictator.

Milly—And how does your brother take married life? Tilly—He takes it according to directions. His mother-in-law lives with him.

A Bath In Bubbles.

"To take a bath at Tiflis, in Russian Caucasia, is to court a never to be forgotten experience," says one who knows. "The masseur who presides over the toilet of his patrons is a weird looking figure. His head is shaved, a rag is twisted around his waist, and his feet are dyed a beautiful red. You are seized by this individual, rubbed, pushed face downward on a marble slab, find his feet in your spine and his hands upon your shoulders. Then he grinds his feet up and down your back. They are round your neck, on your head—everywhere! Then he vaults lightly off, and in a moment, from a linen bag filled with soap, he has squeezed clouds of perfumed bubbles, and you are hidden in them from head to foot as completely as if you had fallen into a snowdrift. You are not absolutely bruised, but you are clean."—Kansas City Journal.

Wonders of the Eye.

Viewed as an optical instrument, the human eye may well be called perfect, for it is an apparatus contained in a globe less than an inch in diameter, in which is produced an image practically perfect in form and color and which can be accurately adjusted almost instantly for every distance from five inches to infinity, which is movable in every direction, has an area small enough for the detection of the most minute details and at the same time large enough for the appreciation of large objects, and which enables us to see all shades of color and to estimate distance, solidity, and, to some extent, the consistency of objects, and yet this wonderful instrument, perhaps the most varied in its capabilities of any part of the body, is persistently misused and neglected. Is it any wonder that some day nature resents this treatment and leaves the offenders in total and perpetual blindness?

Richard Wagner of No 4 village dislocated his left ankle Monday, while engaged in a game of basketball. He will be unable to work for several weeks.

Hector Hebert and John T. Haley, who recently took civil service examinations for the post office department in Boston, received their appointments Tuesday and went to Boston yesterday to report for duty this morning.

Misses Katherine, Agnes and Eva Downey were pleasantly surprised on Wednesday evening at the home of their sister, Mrs Napoleon Gingras on Pleasant street, by the woman's auxiliary of the Hibernians, who presented them with a purse of $20 in gold.

The funeral of Richard W. Moody, son of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Moody, who died last week Thursday, was held in the Methodist church Sunday afternoon. There was a large attendance at the service, many coming from Warren, among them being members of the Warren high school. Rev. Eaton B Marshall, pastor of the Methodist church, and Rev John Mason of Lynn, a former pastor, officiated, and a quartet composed of Miss Elizabeth Chapman, Miss Laura Thompson, James T. Campbell and J. Chester Forte sang. There were many beautiful floral tributes, including one from the high schoolmates in Warren. The bearers were J Chester Forte, Joseph Campbell, Charles M. Heidel and Eugene A. Bemis. The body was placed in Pine Grove cemetery in Warren, and will be taken to Sandwich for burial next spring.

LUDLOW.

Mrs. Angelina Waite is ill with blood poisoning

Mrs. F. G. Bennett has been spending a week at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William B. Graves of North Prescott.

A supper was served by the members of the Ladies' society of the Methodist church in the church parlors Wednesday evening to a large number.

Hoag; secretary, Mrs. Ella Ward; treasurer, Mrs. Nettie Chamberlin; conductress, Mrs. Grace Schmidt; associate conductress, Mrs. Jennie Hopkins. These officers will be installed in January.

WARE.

Death of Oldest Resident.

Mrs. Elizabeth Paige Fields died at her home on Pleasant street in Ware Sunday evening as the result of a fall sustained two weeks ago, when she fractured her hip Mrs. Field was 97 years, 10 months and two days old, and had been for some time, so far as was known, the oldest person in Ware. She was born in New Braintree and lived there until 1855, when she went to Ware, where in 1861, she married Theodore Fields, who died 12 years later. Since that time she had lived with her sister, Miss Sarah Ann Barr, until the latter died, two years ago, also from a fall. Mrs Fields was remarkably active in spite of her advanced years and until after she was 90 attended church and went about among her friends and neighbors She is survived by three nieces, Mrs. John W. Cummings of Ware, Mrs. George F Snow and Mrs. William W. Gray of New Braintree, Arthur Barr of Cambridge, and Frank Knight of Brooklyn, N. Y. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon, Rev John Wriston officiating, and burial was in the old cemetery on Church street

James E. Tiffany has secured a position in the store of L B Gates.

Mrs Sara L. Richardson of Danvers has been spending a part of the week at the home of J N. Lincoln.

Miss Lena Lindsey will sever her connection with the telephone exchange office about January 1, and will go to Springfield to live.

Mrs. William S. Hyde sailed from New York yesterday for France to spend the winter with her daughter, Baroness Camille Eynard.

Miss Katherine Brannigan, who has been spending a two-weeks' vacation in New York city, has resumed her duties in the store of C. Hitchcock & Co.

W. S. Dunham fell on a slippery sidewalk on Bank street Tuesday afternoon and broke one of his right ribs. He was attended by Dr. G. F. A. Spencer.

Rev. J. A. Riordan, curate of All Saints' church, announced Sunday morning that the net receipts from the Thanksgiving party in the town hall amounted to $1467.

John H. Neff has been appointed general superintendent for the George H. Gilbert Mfg. Co. in the mills at Ware and Gilbertville and will assume his new duties about January 15th. Mr. Neff succeeds Mr. A. B Paton, who will leave Ware about January 1 to engage in the manufacture of woolens in a mill which he has purchased in Stafford Springs, Ct.

Ware council, Knights of Columbus, has elected the following officers: G. K., Cornelius Fitzgerald; D. G. K., James Dugan; F. S., Carl Bohmiller; R. S., Cornelius Shea; T., John W. Clark Jr; C., John Gleason; W., Peter J. King; A., Amie D. Girard; I G, William J. Norton; O. G., Michael Buckley; L, William Rohan; trustee for three years, Daniel E Clifford.

At the annual meeting of the Ware aerie of Eagles Monday night these officers were elected: Past president, George Haley; president, H. Lemoureux: vice president J. E. Tiffany; chaplain, L. S. Charboneau; financial secretary, J. O'Brien; recording secretary, J. A. Riley; inside guard, J. Coughlin; conductor, M. Fitzgerald; treasurer, F. Harris; trustees, G. Haley, H. Gormley, J. F. Casey.

At a meeting of G. W. Lawton Post, G. A. R., Tuesday night, these officers were elected: Commander, Hubert M. Coney; senior vice commander, A. H. Richardson; junior vice commander, F. P. Clark; quartermaster, Geo. S. Marsh; surgeon, Henry M. Hitchcock; chaplain, Silas A. Spooner; officer of the day, D. Otis Holden; officer o the guard, Charles H. Rood; delegate to convention, George S. Marsh; alternate, D Otis Holden.

A joint meeting of the overseers of the poor and the selectmen was held Monday evening, when the books of the former board were looked over by the selectmen. As a result, the board feels that the overseers of the poor will need $4000 to carry them up to March 1, at the present rate of expenditure, but found that $2000 was due the town from the state and other towns to offset this. Mr. Girard favored the calling of a special town meeting as soon as possible, that this necessary $2000 might be raised, while Mr. Casey did not express himself in favor of any haste in the matter. Mr Farrar, the the third member of the board, was not present. At a meeting of the overseers Tuesday night John T. Casey resigned as secretary of the board. The overseers held still another meeting Wednesday evening, but it was devoted to talk mostly. It was practically agreed that C. W. Booth was a desirable candidate for clerk of the board, if one should be appointed, but no definite action was taken in the matter. Bids of $70 and $65 were received from Dr. L E Dionne and Dr. A G. Blodgett, respectively, for the care of the poor during the remainder of the year, but no decision was reached in the matter.

Delaware's Hundreds.

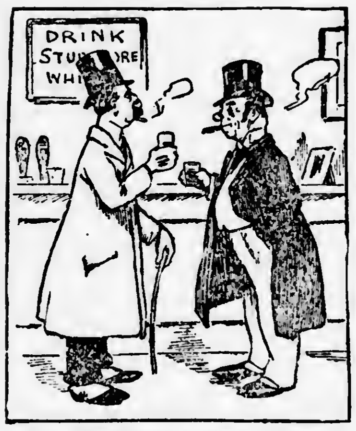
In the days when the Saxons dominated England prior to the coming of William of Normandy the people were formed into divisions of hundreds. This was done mainly for military purposes and the convenience of assembly upon the summons of the powerful earls and barons to whom the people owed allegiance. These hundreds usually consisted of ten families, each family being computed at a minimum of ten persons. In time the families increased in membership, but did not lose their individual identity or change the designation of organization. In the natural order of events these hundreds expanded into communities and ultimately into geographical divisions and took on geographical designations. Some of the American colonists adopted this form of geographical division, and thus we still have hundreds in Delaware and Virginia, although in the latter state that form of designation is but seldom used. But in Delaware hundred is universally used to describe the divisions of a county and is equivalent to the township in other states.

The Last Long Sleep.

Familiarity with death is apt to alter one's earliest conceptions of it. Two ideas are very generally accepted which experience shows to be false. One is that the dying usually fear death and the other that the act of dying is accompanied by pain. It is well known to all physicians that when death is near its terrors do not seem to be felt by the patient. Unless the imagination is stimulated by the frightful portrayal of the supposed "pangs of death" or of the sufferings which some believe the soul must endure after dissolution it is rare indeed that the last days or hours of life are passed in dread.

Most sick persons are very, very tired. Sleep—long, quiet sleep—is what they want. I have seen many people die. I have never seen one who seemed to fear death, except when it was or seemed to be rather far away. Even those who are constantly haunted while strong and well with a dread of the end of life forget their fear when that end is at hand.—Scribner's Magazine.

No Objections.



"Old Crosstwigs is dead, I hear."
"Ah! What complaint?"
"Complaint! Haven't heard of any. Most folks are rather pleased."—Ally Sloper's Half-Holiday.

A Thoughtful Husband.

What is more touching at the holiday season than to see an old man planning a pleasant surprise for his aged wife?

"I's tryin' ter raise money enough ter git my wife a new dress for Christmas, sah," said Uncle Ebony to Mr. Featherstone.

"Ah, I see. You want me to give you some chores to do, uncle, eh?"

"Well, no, sah. I t'ought perhaps you could git de old lady a job at washin', sah!"

Duty puts a clear sky over every man, into which the skylark of happiness always goes singing.—Prentice.

Our Boston Letter

It tells about

The Boston City Election — State Prison Pardons — Smoking on the Streets — Coming Legislative Matters.

BOSTON, DEC. 13, 1905.

Day after the election, with over 8000 for the regular Democrat over the Republican, finds the workers for a higher type of government in a disgusted frame of mind. But they are disposed to give Fitzgerald the benefit of the doubt and to receive him with a fair chance for his administration. There remains the mysterious communication which Congressman McNary made to George W. Anderson, with the question whether there is anything in it which Anderson will press now that the election is over and Fitzgerald is the legal mayor-elect of Boston. Moral conclusions from the election are numerous, and so are political ones. On the part of the defeated, there is heard the suggestion that Boston is such a solid Democratic city that it will never do to take a Republican again for candidate for mayor, but that any effort to smash the Democratic machine must be made with a Democrat. This makes it pertinent to say that there was talk before the primaries of taking James J. Storrow for candidate, but he refused because he was committed to stand by the school committee reform, and the presumption, from his being a candidate yesterday (and he was elected) that he agreed to run for school committee and so was bound and could not run for mayor.

Another point which some urge is that this election proves that there must be created a political Greater Boston so that the votes which are now in the suburbs will be available to offset the votes which now carry the city. But that is only one of the arguments in the case and there is plenty to be said on the other side. Probably more interest attaches to the fate of the machine men, especially of the Lomasney crowd, to see what will be done to them by the victorious Fitzgerald. Before the election predictions were freely made that all the regular machine men would find themselves "out on the bricks" after election if Fitzgerald won, and so that the machine men were bound, whatever happened, to vote for Frothingham. They did not do so, but a material part of them must have helped swell Fitzgerald's plurality. Doubtless the chasm will be bridged with the rank and file and only the worst of the machine offenders be made to walk the plank. No administration can afford to have many quarrels on its hands.

Justice is becoming more stern in its aspects in Massachusetts and all persons with any criminal weakness may take warning from the present policy that they will probably have to pay the penalty for their crimes, if they are caught. The former custom of pardoning a life prisoner or two at Thanksgiving has been stopped. To-day's proceedings of the pardon committee of the council emphasize the same tendency. Three petitions for pardon were heard. They were those of Maher of Worcester, serving a four-years' sentence, and St John of Sutton and Taylor of Deerfield, serving life sentences. In each case there was a very persuasive plea presented for clemency. There were petitions signed by the friends and neighbors. Witnesses were present to tell of the previous good character of the convict. Extenuating circumstances were emphasized. In the Taylor case it was said that it was the wife, and not the man, according to the belief of some, who poisoned their child. The listener would think that the pardon ought to have been granted. But in Taylor's case his own plea of guilty stood against him, not to be removed or obliterated by any pleas, or by any excuses that he was practically forced to make the plea by his counsel, Judge Conant. Nobody tried to deny that terribly bad character given to Taylor's wife and her family. His own good character and his family's were established. But the committee could not be convinced. Ex-Representative Davenport of Greenfield conducted the case and argued that Taylor had been punished sufficiently already. In the Maher case a story was made out full of power and pathos and there could be no doubt that if the pardon was granted the man would do all that was promised in his behalf. But justice is stern. His sentence, which would expire November 16, 1906, with the commutation for good behavior, will probably have to be served. Notice is thus served to the public in these cases, that those who yield to their bad influences, even though the temptation is great and the excuses are many and plausible, cannot expect, under Massachusetts practice, to escape paying dearly for their failure to hold their passions under control as long as they are responsible for their conduct, and the plea of temporary insanity is not nearly as powerful as it was before it had become abused by much exercise. In the Taylor case the result was such as probably to lead to a further effort to secure the pardon by another council. The committee stood two to two after the hearing, with Lieut.-Gov. Guild absent. When the report was presented to the council at the session this afternoon there was a vote of five to three that the pardon be not granted. But a tie in the committee and a vote by which a change of one would make a tie in the council is more favorable to the prisoner than he obtained on either of the two previous occasions. In the other two cases the report was unanimously adverse and was sustained by the council.

Presumably many persons who are troubled by the personal habits of their neighbors will be interested to hear what my informant regards as sure proof of the upward march of the human race. He is a business man, visiting New York at times, and his observation is that the Boston practice whereby young men are frequently seen on the streets sucking a pipe does not prevail nearly as much in New York, and he argues, in consequence, that Boston is lagging in the procession. Another particular wherein progress is made in both Boston and New York, is that it is not considered good form nearly as much as ten years ago, for business and commercial men to step to the bar and take a drink. Men are coming to look down upon the practice as beneath approval, to put it mildly, and something which had better be omitted. Still further, from a wealthy New York family comes the information that in good society there the use of liquor and tobacco is having less approval than in recent years and people are cleaning up in such matters, that is, it is a little off color to be prone to indulgence. All of which is doubtless encouraging to a great many and a sign of better times coming.

Brief mention, for the sake of a great cause and a great man, is due to the Garrison centennial, which occurred December 10. The ardor of the colored people in commemorating the birth of their race's benefactor, and the enthusiasm of the whites who remembered Garrison was thrilling. These reminiscenses raise the fair question, how much worse is Boston to-day, with its grafters in city hall, even with Fitzgerald elected, if any one pleases, than Boston in pulpit and press and counting room upholding slavery, which is infinitely worse than grafting, and with its "broadcloth mob" leading Garrison through the streets with a rope around his neck. Is Boston so wholly bad compared with Boston 60 years ago as to-day's Cassandras would have us believe? Certainly Garrison is held in high honor, and the aristocratic Boston of the past, even its Winthrops, is execrated because it despised Garrison. What a change since even Longfellow would not recognize Garrison.

Good reason exists for predicting that one of the measures to be presented at the coming session of the Legislature will be a bill to tax railroad bonds as well as railroad stocks. It is not a new measure, for it has been before two or three Legislatures in recent years already. But its paternity has not been particularly reputable and it has never made a decent show at the committee hearing and has never had even a minority report in its favor, if I remember correctly. Next session, however, it will have better standing. The proposition is that railroads should be taxed on their capital which is represented as bonds as truly as on that represented by stock. If it is said that the bondholders are taxed locally already, then the answer is that practically the bondholders escape taxation by making no returns, and if the present law stands, then the railroads ought to be required to make official returns where their bonds are owned, so that they may be taxed locally. Thus a big fight may be precipitated, and it may be true of the bondholders, as well of the transgressor, that his way is hard.

Some people are becoming sensitive about the governing of Massachusetts by Kidder, Peabody & Co of Boston, the biggest financiers in the state. Control of the Legislature for years has been traced to them, whether through the Boston elevated or the Boston gas combination, or other great corporation interests. All tracks lead to Kidder, Peabody & Co's door. Robert Winsor, William A. Gaston, Robert M. Burnett and associated interests, inside and outside, are concerned. These men are Democrats and the question is asked with hot indignation whether Republican Massachusetts is to submit always to be governed in a business way by a coterie of Democrats. Threats are made of substituting Republican control, but there is no Republican combination in sight which seems strong enough for the undertaking.

James R. Keene is noted for his civility. He is as polite to a poor man as to a millionaire. On this account servants always hold him in singularly high regard.

A broker, the other day, complimented Mr. Keene on this trait.

With a smile Mr. Keene said:—

"I learned in my youth that it is best to be polite to everyone.

"I was walking in the country one day in my youth, and on towards sundown I lost my way. As I plodded on, tired and hungry, I met a farm hand.

"'Jack', I said, 'what is the way to Berenda?'

"The farm hand looked at me with a frown.

"'How did you know,' he said, 'that my name was Jack?'

"'Oh,' I said, 'I guessed it.'

"'Then,' said the farm hand, 'guess your way to Berenda.'"

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

The Christmas Fakir

By A. W. FERRIN

No one welcomes the advent of the holiday season more heartily than the sidewalk merchant of the city, the street fakir, for, while he seems to flourish like a green bay tree all the year round, at Christmas time he reaps his great harvest of pennies, nickels and dimes. The hearts of even the most parsimonious open with the approach of Christmas, and purse strings loosen as at no other time. On every corner and between corners these curbstone nomads are surrounded by admiring and purchasing citizens, and "novelties," from rubber pigs which can be inflated to the size of a small balloon and in exhausting their airy contents squeal like a real porker, to elaborate mechanical toys, sell like hot cakes.

Every year distinct features of this queer trade come to the surface and are put on the market simultaneously by fakirs throughout the country. The factories in which these things are made work overtime to meet the demand of the shrill voiced "barkers" who personify Santa Claus to the children of the city. New York is the great headquarters of the fakirs, and they visit it at least once a year to arrange for the novelties of the ensuing season and to do a little business in the metropolis itself. There are several large jobbers in the city who deal exclusively with the sidewalk peddlers, and they issue voluminous catalogues describing thousands of articles suitable for sale on the street. Every fakir carries one of these books, and when he runs out of stock he sends an order to his firm, which is filled by return express.

On most of the things he handles the fakir makes a profit of 100 per cent and sometimes more than that. Articles sold for a dime are usually bought for a nickel, and those which sell for a nickel for 2½ cents. Occasionally, however, when some novelty makes a real hit, the manufacturers put up the price until the fakir's profit is only a cent on each sale.

The old time favorite, the jumping jack, evolved into a sailor who climbs a rope hand over hand; dirigible tin mice, kissing bugs, lobsters and crabs, papier mache frogs which jump like the hero of Mark Twain's famous story, all find a ready market, while cheap perfumery, Christmas cards and lead soldiers are peddled in vast quantities.

Just where the fakir gets his title is a mooted question. The real fakir, whose habitat is India, is a person of religious consequence and has nothing to do with "fakes" unless it be that he performs wonderful tricks which owe their success to sleight of hand rather than to the influence of the gods by whom the fakir is professedly actuated. However, fakir is as good a name for the itinerant vender as any other, and its etymology doesn't matter much. Some of the fakirs make enough by their petty trade to graduate into manufacturers of Christmas novelties or even into a higher line of business, and it is well known that one of the wealthiest men of New Orleans, who owns sugar plantations, stores and factories, once peddled shoestrings.

Carrying his capital in his pack, the wandering salesman is independent to a degree rarely equaled except by the idle rich and Weary Willie. In the olden days, before the invention of the newspaper and the telegraph, mediaeval merchants, travelling from palace to palace and from town to town, shared with the troubadours the profession of disseminating the news.

Sincere by Nature.

The physician has methods by which he determines whether or not a patient is shamming. Other people have different methods, which may sometimes be as successful as the doctor's.

"Do you believe that was a real faint of Sally Ann's, or do you think she just shammed so's to look interesting to Willy Lane and make him offer to take her home in his buggy?" asked one of the participants in a recent picnic.

"It wa'n't any sham on Sally Ann's part," said Mrs. Ricketts, to whom the appeal was made. "I should think when you know Sally Ann wears sixes and that she lay there with her feet sticking right straight up for everybody to see for nearly fifteen minutes you'd realize that 'twasn't any make believe faint."

Mrs. A. Peterson, living in the northeast part of the town says "Mr. LeGro recommended Doan's Kidney Pills to me some time ago and I used them, obtaining remarkably good results. Before I took them for over two years I had attacks of dull heavy aching in the small of my back just across my kidneys. If I sat in one position for any length of time I became so stiff and lame that I could hardly get up, and if I stooped it caused sharp twinges in my back so bad that they made me cry out. I tried other remedies but they did me no good. Doan's Kidney Pills helped me from the first and finally removed the backache. I have had no return of the trouble. Should I ever have a reoccurrence I now know what to do. I recommended them to a lady friend of mine, Mrs. L. Lafarr, out in the carpet mill district. She used them and told me afterwards that they cured her of a severe backache."

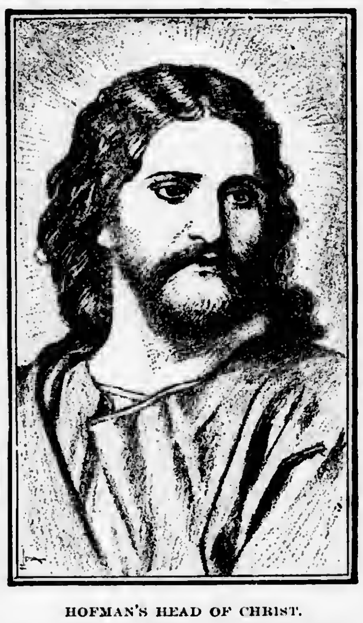
The Christmas Triumph

By GEORGE LAY LAW

AFTER a little over 1,900 years from the birth of its founder Christmas has become the most generally observed religious holiday on earth. There is scarcely a land beneath the sun that does not witness some celebration of the day set apart to commemorate the birth of the Carpenter of Nazareth. While in many Asiatic countries few participate in these celebrations, there are yet enough so that all peoples are learning the significance of the ceremony. Then, too, the number of actual participants is increasing year by year, so that it takes no very great stretch of the imagination to picture a time when Christmas observances will be practically universal.

The charge of the Master to carry his gospel to all the world has been religiously obeyed, and the prophecy of the thousand years of peace which were to follow close on that consummation should be on its way. Of the six continents Christianity entirely dominates four and is rapidly winning its way in the other two. Both North and South America are Christian in every part. The same is true of Australia and the surrounding islands constituting Australasia. All Europe follows the same faith, with the single exception of the southeastern corner belonging to Turkey, and even a considerable part of the Turkish empire, including Armenia, Bulgaria and others of the Balkan states, embraces Christianity, while Christian missions exist in Turkey.



HOFMAN'S HEAD OF CHRIST.

In Africa, where the British govern Egypt and all South Africa, while France has virtual control of Morocco and other European powers have colonies throughout the continent, the faith of the Nazarene has a larger following than any other religion.

Asia, teeming with its vast Chinese and Hindoo hordes, is practically the only continent in which Christianity is not the dominant faith, and even here it has incalculable political and strategic advantages that are rapidly working a transformation. Siberia, occupying nearly half of the entire continent, is ruled by a Christian power. India, on the south, is under the control of England, and the missionaries are gradually winning their way. Tibet, the stronghold of Buddhism, is under Russian influence and is being invaded by England from India. Palestine, Syria and Persia contain important Christian missions, though as nations they are still under Moslem control. The Boxer uprising was practically the last gasp of the virulent opposition to the advance of Christianity in China. The lesson received from Europe at that time, the important concessions granted in the chief ports to the great Christian powers, the invasion of Manchuria, the introduction of the railroad and the ever increasing numbers of missionaries, all of these things are gradually working a change in the Chinese empire. Mission work is rapidly increasing in Korea. Japan has borrowed most of her civilization from Christian nations and is seriously discussing the proposition of adopting their religion also. The Philippines belong to America, and a considerable portion has been Christianized.

Christmas morn in the year of our Lord 1905 will therefore have a meaning to more nations and more people than any previous Christmas morn in the history of mankind. The fact that this day will be celebrated by such widely variant types and in such widely separated nations gives a powerful suggestion of unity in the human race.

Very Lively.

A London paper relates that a crowd of sightseers scurrying across the road from the Strand caused a partial block in the traffic. The lagging of a particularly pompous old gentleman roused the ire of a held up cabby. "Now, then, hurry up there, can't yer?" he shouted.

"Am I not hurrying, cabman?" was the mild expostulation.

"'Urryin'?" snorted cabby, with a flick of his whip. "You're a-jumpin' about like a bit o' stickin' plaster!"

Quite Solid.

"Let me see a plain wedding ring."

"Solid?"

"You bet I'm solid. We've been engaged more'n a month."

CHRISTMAS AT SANDRINGHAM

How the Royal Family of Great Britain Celebrates.

The royal family of Great Britain keeps up Christmas at Sandringham in a right royal and old fashioned way.

Tasteful decorations with holly and mistletoe abound everywhere. Every one comes down to the dining room, where breakfast is taken en famille. Every one has presents for some one else. All the servants and tenants are remembered, so that there are many happy hearts on Christmas morning. Substantial joints, geese and turkeys, with other good things, have a delightful way of turning up at the very houses where they are most wanted.

After breakfast the royal family and guests and the ladies and gentlemen of the household go on a tour of inspection to view the decorations, and then, provided the weather is fine, they walk to church, which, of course, has been tastefully adorned in appropriate and approved Christmas fashion. On the entry of the king and queen the congregation rises—that is the only formality observed. The king's domestic chaplain takes the service—a bright choral service, with Christmas hymns and an anthem.

Then comes luncheon—which is the children's dinner—attended by the king and queen and other members of the family. The Christmas pudding is brought in, blazing up merrily, to the intense delight of the little princes and princesses.

The late afternoon is the most exciting time for the juniors. The doors of a certain room have been kept rigorously fastened since the previous evening, her majesty and other members of her family having duly dressed a large Christmas tree therein. The door is opened, and the whole party troops in, while the royal children evince the greatest delight at the Christmas tree ablaze with lights and weighed down with presents. Afterward all sorts of games are entered into with a heartiness and zest that must surely appeal to every one.

Dinner comes along at 8:45, to which all guests staying in the house and many of the household are invited by the king. The king and queen and guests assemble in the drawing room first, and then a procession is formed, led, of course, by their majesties, who are followed in order of precedence by the others. The tables are laid in the grand salon. The guests are seated at small oval tables, the king and queen sitting opposite each other at one, and are waited on by special footmen. Boar's head, baron of beef and plum pudding are the staple dishes of the royal Christmas dinner.

After dinner there may be a dance or a command performance in the state ballroom, the walls of which are decorated by gorgeous Indian trophies presented to his majesty when he visited that country.—Pictorial Magazine.

David's Well.

Within two miles of Bethlehem is a well which is said to have been the one from which the mighty men of battle in Israel, after breaking through the Philistine host, brought water to David, in response to his exclamation, "Oh, that one would give me to drink of the water from the well which is by the gate!" David refused to taste the water for which his brave men had risked their lives and poured it out as an offering to God. Some picturesque ruins are said to be those of the home of David's youth.

Encouragement.

Jack (bitterly)—I suppose that young Richman who comes to see you so often will give you such an expensive Christmas gift that you won't want the trifling present I can afford to buy you?

Marie (coyly)—No. I think you had better save your money for—er—future contingencies, Jack.

Academy Notes.

Public rhetoricals will be held at the chapel next Friday evening.

The basket ball team will play the Stafford high school team in Stafford, Ct., tomorrow afternoon at 3 30.

Miss Doyle, '05, has been elected vice president of the senior class of the Springfield Business School in Springfield.

Miss Fuller, '07, entertained several of her friends at her home on Green street last Friday evening. The time was passed in playing whist, and refreshments were served.

A H. Briggs, '06, has been spending a few days at his home in Woonsocket, R. I

The joint meeting of the Lino and Philo societies, held last Monday evening was largely attended and much enjoyed.

The first basketball game of the season was played Wednesday afternoon, when the school team was defeated by Warren high school by a score of 40 to 18. Monson, while minus the services of her star forward, Briggs, was very slow in passing the ball and terribly weak at basket shooting. Warren played an exceptionally good game and deserved their victory.

Mrs. Harriet R. Bradley is visiting friends in Worcester.

Edwin M. Hatch is ill at his home in South Monson.

Miss Mary Robbins is visiting friends at Somerville, Ct.

Mrs. N. S. Chaffee of Enfield is visiting relatives in town.

The public schools closed to-day for a two-weeks' vacation.

Mrs. M. M. Severy of Springfield is visiting relatives in Monson.

D. M. McCray of Hampden visited his son, O. C. McCray, on Pease avenue this week.

A business meeting of the Monson Social club will be held in club rooms to-morrow evening.

A special meeting of the Universalist parish will be held next Tuesday evening at eight o'clock.

Miss J V. Cantwell has returned from Boston, where she has been attending a musical convention.

Miss Nellie Thayer, a former student of Monson Academy, is visiting the Misses Moore on Flynt avenue.

Miss Mae McDonald has returned from Fitchburg, where she has been employed during the millinery season.

Mt. Ella Lodge of United Workmen will hold their annual election of officers next Tuesday evening in Workman Hall.

Edward Aldrich, while working with a sawing machine yesterd y, cut off the tip of one of his thumbs.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas O'Connor of North Adams were the guests of Mrs. John Leahy on North Main street the first of this week.

G. W. Fields of Warren, who is to run the Langwald mill as soon as completed, has hired the Frank Morris house and will occupy it at once.

A very enjoyable afternoon tea was held at the home of Mrs. N. M. Pratt on High street Wednesday afternoon. There was a large attendance.

The social committee of the Quaboag Country Club announce that the next whist party at the clubhouse will be on the evening of January 1st.

A large derrick, which was being used to hoist an eleven-ton stone at the Flynt granite quarries Wednesday, fell to the ground but very fortunately no one was injured.

The Men's Assembly of the Methodist church will hold their regular meeting in the Methodist church next Monday evening and will be addressed by Representative A. D. Norcross.

The Greek fruit store in the bank block has been removed to Noble's block on Main street, recently occupied by the Chinese laundry, the laundry having been removed to the rear of Noble's block.

A snow-slide from the roof of the bank block frightened a pair of horses attached to a sled driven by Michael McCarthy Monday afternon, and they started to run but were stopped by the driver without damage.

Next week Friday and Saturday, for the convenience of the public, Postmaster Seymour will open the office in the morning at 6 30 and will keep open in the evening until 8 30. This extra time will be greatly appreciated.

Edward Carlson, a teamster at the W. N. Flynt Granite Company's farm, was taken to the hospital in Springfield yesterday, when he was operated on for appendicitis. While his case is considered a serious one, it is hoped that he will recover.

Mr. and Mrs. Bert Doyle of Springfield are spending a few weeks at the Century House. Mr. Doyle has charge of a construction gang of the New England Telephone company, which is at present setting more poles on the rural line over East Hill.

Miss Maria Carter, 70, died at her home in Green stree' yesterda afternoon after a long illness. She leaves one sister, Mrs. Rufus Gage, and one brother, Cullen Carter of Palmer. The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock and burial will be in the No. 1 cemetery.

The Men's Club of the Congregational church held their regular meeting in the church parlors Monday night, and listened to a very interesting talk by Dr. Lemon of Washington, D. C., on "The country and people of Palestine." A lunch and social hour followed the speaking. There were about 40 present.

An interesting stereopticon lecture on "Ben Hur," will be given in the Academy chapel at 8 o'clock this evening The lecture will be delivered by Rev Albert L. Squier of Newton, and the proceeds will be donated by the Epworth League, under whose auspices the lecture is given, to the organ fund of the Methodist church. It is hoped that there will be a large attendance.

At the regular meeting of Marcus Keep Women's Relief Corps, held Wednesday evening, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Nellie Holdridge; senior vice president, Mrs Ada Graves; junior vice president, Mrs Nellie Munsell; chaplain, Mrs. Harriet Fenton; treasurer, Miss Mary Fuller; conductor, Mrs Ella Howlett; guard, Mrs. Mary Mumford; delegate to the state convention, Miss Mary Fuller; alternate, Mrs Annie Hale.

"Down in Maine," the four-act-drama, which was presented in Memorial Hall Tuesday night by local talent drew a large audience, in fact the largest audience seen in Memorial Hall since the local minstrels several years ago. The parts were all well taken, and showed hard work and much rehearsing. William L Ricketts as Zeph Cummings, Helen M. Needham as Susie Cummings, Allen J. Buffington as Mose Gossin, and Fred Sweet as Neil Wentworth were unusually good; in fact every one who took part deserve creditable mention. The King's Daughters, under whose auspices the entertainment was given, will clear nearly $100, which will be expended in their charitable work about town

Round Trip Rates Reduced.

If you have occasion to visit the western country before the first of the year, now is your opportunity, because tickets will be on sale via the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, from Chicago on the first and third Tuesdays of each month, to various western destinations and return, good for 21 days, at 75 per cent of the one way fare. To other sections of the country, one fare plus $2 for the round-trip is charged.

If you are going West, write to us, and we will figure out the lowest combination possible, and give you advantage of it. Don't hesitate to ask for all the information necessary to make your trip pleasant. Tickets can be obtained from your local ticket agent, or from Geo. L Williams, N. E P. A., 368 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

An Effective Example.

A clergyman was very fond of a particularly hot brand of pickles, and finding great difficulty in procuring the same sort at hotels when traveling, always carried a bottle with him. One day when dining at a restaurant, with his pickles in front of him, a stranger sat down at the same table and with an American accent presently asked the minister to pass the pickles. The minister, who enjoyed the joke, politely passed the bottle, and in a few minutes had the satisfaction of seeing the Yankee watering at the eyes and gasping for breath.

"I guess," said the latter, "that you are a parson?"

"Yes, my friend, I am," replied the minister.

"I suppose you preach?" asked the Yankee.

"Yes, sir: I preach twice a week usually," said the minister.

"Do you ever preach about hell fire?" inquired the Yankee.

"Yes; I sometimes consider it my duty to remind my congregation of eternal punishment," returned the minister.

"I thought so," rejoined the Yankee, "but you are the first of your class I ever met who carried samples."—Tatler.

A writer in the Ladies' Field states vigorously that she is not a believer in "respect due to age." "Why respect should be considered the sole prerogative of age is a thing I have never been able to understand. When people have displayed consistent foolishness or vacuity throughout their youth and middle age why should a younger and perhaps wiser generation be expected to look up to them with reverence simply because seventy years have passed over their heads? Respect surely should be a question of character and not of age."—Stray Stories.

A Colossal Harp.

The largest harp ever made, so far as is known, was that invented and constructed by M. Veritan, provost of Burkli, near Basel. It was known as the gigantic meteorological Æolian harp. It was 320 feet in length and was erected in the garden of its inventor in 1787. This harp consisted of fifteen iron wires, 320 feet in length stretched between two poles. The wires were from two to three inches apart, the largest being one-sixth of an inch in thickness and the smallest one-twelfth of an inch. They were placed in the direction of north and south and inclined in such a manner as to form an angle of from twenty to thirty degrees with the horizon, being stretched by means of rollers properly disposed for the purpose. Whenever the weather changed the wires sounded with such loudness that it was impossible to go on with a concert in the house. The sound sometimes represented the hissing noise of water in rapid ebullition sometimes that of a harmonicon and sometimes that of distant chimes or an organ.

The First Hats.

Discoursing on the subject of hats an antiquary expressed the opinion that the hat was first used quite as much for decoration as for protection. The ancestor of all hats he considers to have been the fillet, or band, around the hair worn by the ancient Greeks, among others. Probably the first hint gained by men regarding head ornaments was through observing the crests, plumes and antlers of various birds and beasts. The eastern races, with their fondness for ceremony and display, afford the most notable instances of the use of hats as signs of rank and authority. Thus in Buddhist countries the gods are represented as wearing elaborate forms of headgear. In Korea the fashion attains its height, no fewer than fifty kinds of hats being worn by the natives as indications of their social position.

The Limit.

Tom—May Pechis is certainly what you might call a "kissable" girl. Dick—Kissable? Why, man alive, she's positively edible.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Cruel Plant.

A Canadian climber, the Physlanthus albens, has received the name of "cruel plant" from its ill treatment of butterflies. It flowers in the mouth of August, and the butterflies, attracted by the perfume, hover around it in large numbers and push their trunks into the corollas to sip the honey. A pair of sensitive vegetable pinchers in the heart of the flower grips the delicate proboscis, and in spite of struggles to get free the butterfly hangs suspended until it dies. Apparently the plant has nothing to gain by the death of the insect, as it is not carnivorous, like the Venus fly trap. In fact, if the butterfly were allowed to come and go it would tend to foster the species by assisting cross fertilization. It appears, however, that the "cruel plant" came originally from Brazil, where the butterflies are much stronger and extricate their suckers from the trap. We may add that another Canadian plant, the Cnicus discolor, is charged with cruelty. The flower has a gland which secretes a viscous liquid capable of liming insects which are fond of it. Moreover, they seem to be stupefied and poisoned by it, and no reason can as yet be assigned for the deadly consequence.

How Dreams Are Weighed.

An ingenious instrument which demonstrates the close connection that exists between dreams and brain calculation is known as the "tilt board." A long, shallow tray big enough for a man to recline upon is balanced exactly upon a steel blade. A subject is placed upon it and put to sleep, whereupon the end containing his feet generally falls. But eventually the subject begins to dream, and then the tray containing the sleeper's feet reascends, the extent to which it moves varying according to the vividness of the dream The explanation is that the blood leaves the brain of a sleeper directly the mental activities cease, and, the head as a result becoming lighter, that end of the balance rises. When the sleeper dreams small quantities of blood are recalled to the brain to supply the dreams, and the balance is gradually changed. In this way dreams may be weighed.

Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men

By J. A. EDGERTON

Copyright, 1905, by J. A. Edgerton

NINETEEN hundred years ago
Came a message sweet and low;
O'er an infant's humble birth
Fell a new strain to the earth.
Angels sang the chorus then,
"Peace on earth good will to men."

THE BABE IN THE MANGER.

SINCE that dim and distant time
War has been in every clime,
Earth has been submerged in blood
Of a common brotherhood;
Yet amid the battle cries
Oft that sweet song would arise.

BACK and forth the standards reeled
On the grim and tented field,
While afar that hallowed air
Rose to heaven like a prayer,
Where the few were chanting still,
"Peace on earth, to men good will."

IN this later, brighter day
Are we nearer peace than they?
Still our soil with blood is wet.
War is round about us yet.
Will the carnage ever cease?
Still we hear the song of peace.

IT will come. 'Tis not a dream.
Through the darkness shines a gleam.
'Tis a glimpse, a prophecy
Of the years that are to be,
Of a new time come to birth,
Of the dawn of "Peace on earth."

"PEACE ON EARTH."

STRANDS of steel and cable bind
Closer all of humankind,
And the workers of the world
Have a common flag unfurled.
Thought and traffic banish strife;
Love becomes the law of life.

NINETEEN hundred years ago
Came a message sweet and low;
And that song by angels sung
Through the centuries has rung.
Hark! It rises once again,
"Peace on earth, good will to men."

The Universal Desire.

She was superbly dressed in the pinnacle of fashion and would have been beautiful but for a certain stern, businesslike expression that rather marred the sweetness of her face.

First looking up and down, she darted swiftly into a narrow passageway and was soon knocking at a door emblazoned with the legend: "Signor Oleo Margerino. Clairvoyant. Future Foretold."

The door opened.

"Where is the signor?" she nervously demanded.

"In bed, mum."

"Horrors! What's the matter with him?"

"Nervous prostration, brought on by overwork."

"Overwork?"

"Yes, mum. Since September he's been busy peerin' into de future fer people wot wanted ter know de value uv Christmus presents dey wuz goin' to get so's they'd know how much ter spend on theirs."

Stifling a shriek of despair, she sped away on the hunt for some other clairvoyant.—New York Herald.

"Of course," he said, "I appreciate the motive that actuates you in your efforts to get along without a girl, but"—. "Well?" she said inquiringly as he paused. "Taking everything into consideration," he went on, "is it true economy?" "Isn't it?" she demanded. "Well, I hardly feel competent to pass judgment on the question," he replied. "I have just received our family physician's bill for the treatment of three cases of acute dyspepsia that developed in the family during the last month. "Now, perhaps"—. Congressman Dixon of Montana is telling of the experience of a young eastern woman with one of his constituents. She left the train at a way station in eastern Montana one afternoon and asked the only man in sight how she could get to her distination, far out in the country. "You'll have to wait for the stage in the morning," said the man. "You can't get any rig here." "But where am I to stop?" inquired the young lady. "There's nothing here but the station and I can't sleep on the floor." "Guess you'll have to bunk with the station agent" "Sir!" she exclaimed. "I am a lady" "So is the station agent," said the man.—Montana News.

BAKED HAM.

New Feature of Holiday Feast Borrowed From the South.

It goes without saying that his majesty the turkey will grace the Christmas dinner table, but for variety and to give a new note to this feast it is an excellent idea to follow the southern fashion of introducing ham to share honors with the reigning fowl.

The ham may be either hot or cold and should be baked to a crisp brown. Few there are who understand the art of preparing ham in this way. First it should be partly baked with the thick outside skin left on, and then this should be removed and the fat stuck full of cloves and left to brown in a slow oven. The spice imparts a deliciously delicate flavor and should not be taken out, but left in the ham just as it comes from the oven. No sauce is needed with ham cooked after this rule.—New York Herald.

The Wise Wife.

Christmas Day In Russia.

In certain parts of Russia the children at Christmas eve begin playing pranks that are as odd as they are amusing. Chief among their drolleries is that of disguising themselves as animals and in the assumed costume of wild beasts disporting themselves through the neighborhood. As many skins as possible are secured, and in these the leading boys are clad. Wolves, bears, ostriches even, are represented. All of the boys gather in one party, those who are not posing as brutes forming a train for the escort and display of the pseudo menagerie. Some act as keepers, holding their disguised companions in check, while others startle the quiet of the night by rude strains drawn from harsh and primitive musical instruments. Torches are borne, and in the fitful light, opposed by black shadows, the scene is at once grotesque and vivid.

He Knew Her.

"I can't decide," she said, "whether to take the hat or not, but it is just the dearest thing I've seen this season."

"The dearest?" asked the husband, with a sardonic laugh. "Then it's certain that you'll take it."

Fourth of July Christmases.

In other days the Catholic and Episcopal churches celebrated Christmas much as Americans now observe the glorious Fourth. Roman candles, skyrockets, firecrackers and a general rejoicing and noisy hilarity marked the day sacred to the birth of the Prince of Peace. The idea was that the occasion was a joyful one and men should vociferously attest their happiness. Echoes of these old celebrations are still heard in portions of the south which were settled by the cavaliers. Under the reformation, however, and especially under Puritanism, this form of observing Christmas was done away with. In the early days of New England Christmas was scarcely observed at all, and it is only in comparatively recent years that the present custom of giving and feasting was revived in sections where the Puritan had held sway.

The Antalgica
Or Vegetable Pain Reliever

was introduced to the public in 1848, since which time thousands of bottles have been sold each year to an appreciative public, which is a good evidence of its merits. It is adapted to so many ailments it should be in every household, for it cures all kinds of pains both internal and external. For Bronchial affections it is unrivaled by any article in the market. It is a sure cure for Cholera Morbus and Dysentery, if taken in season, also for Coughs. It is an effective remedy for rheumatic affections, stiff joints, swelled limbs, sprains, cramps, tooth ache and many other ills to which the flesh is heir. Try it and it will do you good. It is sold at 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle by The Quimby Pharmacy, LeGro's Drug Store and the proprietor,

A LITTLE OF ALL SORTS.

Tramp—"Is there any chance for work in this town?" Lady—"No." Tramp—"Thanks. I guess I'll summer here, mum." — Boston Post.

Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea is simply liquid electricity. It goes to every part of your body, bringing new blood, strength and new vigor. It makes you well and keeps you well. 35 cents. Quimby Pharmacy, Palmer.

"He says he knows all the best people, but he doesn't seem to associate with them." "That's because the best people know him."—The Houston Post.

Clear thinking, decisive action, vim and vigor of body and mind, and sparkle of life, comes to all who use Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea. 35 cents, Tea or Tablets. Quimby Pharmacy, Palmer.

"I see that President Roosevelt has abandoned his tariff reform ideas" "That so?" "He told the Mothers' Congress that he believed in encouraging infant industries."—Life.

I Give Honor to Whom It is Due.

Dr David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N Y, cured me of Bright's disease and Gravel. Four of the best physicians had failed to relieve me. I have recommended it to scores of people with like success, and know it will cure all who try it.—Mrs. E P. Mizner. Burg Hill, O. Price $1 00, all druggists; 6 bottles $5 00

Rastus.—"What is yo' idea oh heaben?" Ephraim —"A place whar de animals hab de body of a melon, de laigs ob a 'possum, an' de wings ob a chicken." — New York Sun.

The best thing for a young man to do, who doesn't want to marry the girl who says she is bound to have him anyway, is to leave town without any address.—Punt.

Beautifying methods that injure the skin and health are dangerous. Be beautiful without discomfort by taking Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea. Sunshiny faces follow its use. 35 cents. Quimby Pharmacy, Palmer.

"Why did you snatch the lady's purse?" asked the judge. "Because, your honor, I thought the change might do me good," answered the prisoner.—Chicago News.

Gushy Elderly Individual.—"What a sweet youngster! Whose little boy, are you, sir?" Sweet Youngster—"I shall have to refer your inquiry to the divorce court records, sir."

"And when you told him I was married," said the girl who had jilted him, "did he seem to be sorry?" "Yes," replied the other, "he said he was very sorry, although he didn't know the man personally"—Philadelphia Ledger.

He knew the girl.—"You think you can supply my daughter's wants?" asked the damsel's father. "I think so, sir," replied the young man, "I'm a pretty good bread-winner." "Um. But how are you as a cake and dry goods, and matinee ticket winner?"—Louisville Journal.

"Take a good look at all those women in the boxes," said Citiman, who had brought his country cousin to the opera, "swell society people all of them; they're all in the swim" "Cracky!" exclaimed the country cousin, "I s'pose that's why they're wearin' so few clothes"—Smart Set.

A love scene — The buxom Miss Sallie weighed 160 pounds, but was loving and considerate, and after she had sat on Tom Hayseed's lap for an hour she said: "Honey, I reckon I better git up now. Bean't you tired?" "No, pie crust," answered Tom. "Not tired. I'm just numb." --New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Lulu's mother heard a great splashing in the bathroom and upon investigation found her little daughter standing by the partially filled tub in a very bedabbled condition. "Why, you see, mamma," she explained, "I've been trying to walk on the water, and it's no fool's job, let me tell you."—Judge.

Force of habit.—"John," said Mrs. Flickerjy, as they walked home from the morning service, "It'll be a long time before I go to church with you again." "Why?" asked Mr. Flickerjy. "What's the matter, now?" "When the man with the contribution plate nudged you, as he came to our pew you half woke up and told him he'd have to wait till next week" —Chicago Tribune.

Accepted—A colored fellow at Wellington, says Harry Woods, was smitten by a dusky maiden, and not having the courage to propose face to face, called her up over the telephone. When he got the proper party on the line he asked: "Is dat you, Miss Johnsing?" "Ya-as." "Well, Miss Johnsing, I've got a most important message to ask you." "Ya-as. "Will you marry me?" "Ya-as. Who is it, please?" —Kansas City Journal.

At Ocean View is a bath-house keeper who is remarkably proficient in the way of keeping his bath-house clean, and in judging what sized suit to hand out to a patron. But he is continually losing patronage through making the most foolish and inexplicable breaks. For instance, a young woman wanted a bath-house one morning, and he told her she would have to wait a while as all the houses were occupied. Then he came from his little office, peeped through the knot-hole in a nearby bath-house, and said: "It will only be a moment, though, miss. This lady in here is almost dressed."—Grit.

ROYAL FOLK

SANTA CLAUS

By

GEORGE H. PICARD

[Copyright, 1905, by George H. Picard.]

ONE of the numerous advantages enjoyed by royal personages, an advantage, too, which has not been greatly exploited, is the power to give to any object dispensed as a Christmas gift, no matter how trivial it may be, a distinct and abiding value. It is related of one of the mediaeval pontiffs that on a certain occasion he was so grateful for a service rendered him by a young prince of the Borgia family that he begged him to name some suitable reward.

"Come, my child," he suggested insinuatingly. "Tell me what I can do to please you. Don't be afraid to put my liberality to a test. It's the blessed Christmas season, you know."

His youthful highness sighed deeply, but did not seem able to find the words to frame his request.

"Courage, my friend," persisted his holiness. "I am in the mood for giving. Ask confidently, and I should advise you to ask something more substantial than my blessing."

The young Borgia realized that the opportunity was golden. At that time the temporal power of the Roman pontiff was so great that kingdoms were at his disposal. The prince knew all that, but it did not tempt him.

"Your holiness," he faltered, prostrating himself, "I beg you to give me a lock of your hair."

At this unexpected request the pope was both startled and touched. It seemed incredible that a Borgia could be satisfied with such a sentimental requital, and yet the young fellow seemed to be in earnest.

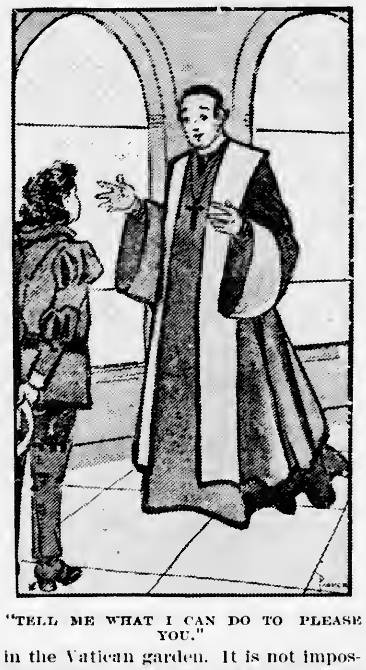
"Why do you select such a worthless thing?" his holiness demanded.

"Oh, do not refuse me!" the prince expostulated. "Think of its value as a relic after your holiness is canonized!"

The pontiff smiled grimly. Then he put his right hand upon his head and sighed long and rather mournfully. He had some hair remaining, but scarcely enough to serve as a relic.

"As you will," he groaned, "but I had rather you had asked me for the kingdom of the Two Sicilies."

Some of the Christmas presents exchanged by latter day royalty are almost absurd in their practicality. For many years the gentle and well beloved Pius IX. was in the habit of exchanging Christmas gifts with the equally amiable Victoria of England. The pope invariably sent a package of specially prepared and exquisitely scented snuff, with an autograph letter extolling its virtues as a remedy for catarrh and kindred disorders. This standing gift was sometimes accompanied by a few jars of wine made from fruit taken from a particular vine in the Vatican garden. It is not impossible that her majesty may have made a personal trial of the pope's remedy, but it is certain that she did not acquire the habit. That she appreciated the attention was made evident from the fact that sundry jars of a marmalade devised in the royal kitchen at Windsor found their way at Christmas time to the Vatican.



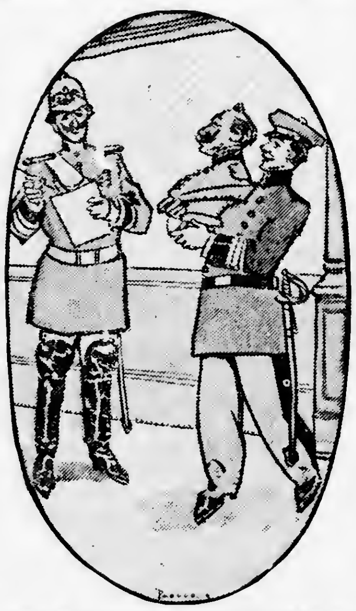
"TELL ME WHAT I CAN DO TO PLEASE YOU."

Some of this delectable confection made a holiday appearance in other European courts. The queen's German grandchildren were fond of it, and their royal grandmother saw to it that a goodly supply of the delicacy and its attendant supplement of a particular seed cake of her majesty's own composition reached Potsdam in time for the Christmas dinner. One of the queen's grandsons by marriage, the czar, used to send her the most beautiful malachite and jade vases ever seen in England, and in return he received invariably a six dozen case of very old and mellow Scotch whisky from a particular highland distillery, long patronized by the British royal family. There is no record to prove that Nicholas found the Scottish beverage more satisfying than his native vodka, but it is a fact that he kept on sending the precious vases as long as his thoughtful grandmother lived.

The kaiser's established Christmas remembrance to the elders of the English court is a case of Johannisberg, which is almost as unattainable as the elixir of life. For the youngsters "Uncle William" sends tons of the ingenious mechanical toys "made in Germany." The president of the French republic, not to be outdone in Christmas civility, gives presents of costly Sevres and Limoges wares to the reigning queens of Europe. In return he is often decorated with the ribbon of some coveted order. The president of the Swiss confederation is more practical in his holiday generosity. Last Christmas he sent to Queen Alexandra a choice selection of cheeses.

As a systematic dispenser of Christmas cheer it is probable that the German emperor heads the list of royal givers. With his customary orderliness and attention to detail he begins to plan his beneficent campaign long before the dawn of the holiday season. On a slip of paper which he keeps concealed in a private cabinet he notes down in his neat uncial script as they occur to him the names of the various persons whom he intends to remember and the amount he expects to expend on each of them.

One of his standard gifts is his own royal portrait. Last Christmas he varied the usual custom by presenting his prospective daughter-in-law, the Duchess Cecilia, with a marble bust of himself. There is absolutely no excuse whatever for any collection in the world, public or private, which has neglected to provide itself with a portrait of the German kaiser. It may be had for the asking, and a hint is sufficient. The kaiserin is a liberal and thoughtful Christmas benefactress. She makes it a point to give something of value to every child of royal lineage in Christendom, and that means much labor and discrimination. The children of royal lineage in the German empire alone are quite numerous enough to absorb a fortune, and it is reputed that the generous royal lady spends $50,000 every year in this admirable way.



THE KAISER SENT A BUST OF HIMSELF.

The present sultan of Turkey, with all his traditional hatred of the giaour, has fallen into the habit of sending Christmas gifts to some of the Christian courts. These remembrances consist for the most part of jars of preserved rose leaves and Levantine sweetmeats prepared by his own confectioner. The aged emperor of Austria sends a liberal gift of priceless Tokay to his fellow sovereigns. The domestic old queen of Denmark, the "mother-in-law of Europe," who is an inveterate knitter of woolen stockings, dispenses her yearly accumulation at Christmastide. The genial king of the Belgians sends nothing but checks, and it is whispered that his bank account is considerably reduced at the holiday season. Wilhelmina of the Netherlands, who is as prudent as she is thrifty, gives decorations and confers orders. This was also the economical Christmas practice adopted by Queen Victoria. The king of Spain sends presents only to his relatives, and the royal family of Portugal, rich as it is, is not much addicted to the gift habit. The queen sends a generous check to the Vatican and the king distributes a few decorations.

Christmas Presents.

The giving of presents on Christmas day undoubtedly owes its origin to a general idea to carry into practice the biblical mandate, "Peace on earth; good will to men." At first the great lords made presents to their retainers, and the season was marked by universal charity. By degrees the practice of Christmas giving spread until now everybody gives his or her friends presents.

Are You Troubled With Dandruff?

Because you have attained a certain age it doesn't follow that your hair must naturally part company with you.

There isn't a single reason why you shouldn't retain a full, healthy head of hair until you have reached a ripe old age.

If your scalp itches, if your hair is dry and brittle and is beginning to get thin, there is something wrong. To remedy the disease is neither difficult nor expensive.

Use Rexall "93" Hair Tonic. It stops falling hair; once more sends the rich blood coursing under the scalp; destroys dandruff, and restores the hair to its natural color.

If Rexall "93" Hair Tonic doesn't do what we claim for it, return the empty bottle and have your money refunded.

Isn't that satisfactory treatment?

For sale at our store, only fifty cents.

A REASON

If you buy a Rexall remedy and are not entirely satisfied with it, all you need to do is to bring the empty bottle or package back to us and say: "I was not satisfied, please give me my money" and we will return the money to you instantly and cheerfully.

We feel that you are conferring an obligation upon us when you do this. We want to know every case that the Rexall remedies fail to cure. We want you to get your money back if the remedy has not done the work you expected it to do.

Can any principle of business be fairer than this? Is it not thoroughly in accord with President Roosevelt's doctrine of the square deal for every man?

Boy in Luck.

A typical Marblehead boy of 10 or 12 years is much averse to attending school, preferring to loaf about the wharves or to earn a nickel on the golf links.

One day last summer a Boston man who occupies a cottage there, while playing golf noticed that his caddie remained dangerously near the tee at each drive. After an expostulation in vain he concluded to let the boy run the chance of getting hurt.

They had played for some time, when the lad, growing friendly and more communicative, suddenly exclaimed:

"Oh, yer'd ought ter see the luck Jim Finnegan hed yesterday."

"What did he do?" questioned the golfer.

"Why," said the lad gleefully, "he got hit in the head with a golf ball, the man giv' him a dollar an' he won't hev' ter go ter school for a whole week." — Harper's Weekly.

Bridesmaids' Luncheon.

A water lily luncheon was given by a recent bride to her wedding attendants. The decorations were entirely in water lillies, ferns and vines. In the dining-room the sideboard and mantlepiece were banked with lillies. The table was covered with the most spotless white and showy linen, and reaching from the chandelier to the four corners of the table were vines of feathery green. The centre piece was a flat, circular mirror edged with water lillies, with a tiny pot of maiden-hair fern in the centre. The china service was pure white, dotted here and there with fine maiden-hair fronds.

The menu was in green and white. Sandwiches were tied with with palest of green ribbon. Salads were served on lettuce leaves, olives on beds of leaves and ice, and the fish course of timbales were served on little paper cups of pale green. The ices were in the form of pond lillies.—Indianapolis News.

The Antalgica
Or Vegetable Pain Reliever

was introduced to the public in 1848, since which time thousands of bottles have been sold each year to an appreciative public, which is a good evidence of its merits. It is adapted to so many ailments it should be in every household, for it cures all kinds of pains both internal and external. For Bronchial affections it is unrivaled by any article in the market. It is a sure cure for Cholera Morbus and Dysentery, if taken in season, also for Coughs. It is an effective remedy for rheumatic affections, stiff joints, swelled limbs, sprains, cramps, tooth ache and many other ills to which the flesh is heir. Try it and it will do you good. It is sold at 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle by The Quimby Pharmacy, LeGro's Drug Store and the proprietor,

WATER CO. GETS LEAVE.

Additional Stock and Bond Issue Asked for is Allowed.

$10,000 NEW STOCK, $30,000 BONDS.

Interesting Hearing on Matter Tuesday. Experts Differ on Value of Plant.

The continued hearing on the petition of the Palmer Water Company for permission to issue $30,000 of bonds was called in Boston Tuesday morning. In connection was heard a petition of the company for permission to issue $10,000 additional stock, making a total of $30,000. Its charter allows the issuing of bonds only to the same amount as its capital stock; this was originally $20,000; last summer the company petitioned for permission to issue $10 000 additional stock, and supposed it had been granted the privilege. At the hearing last week however it was developed that Commissioner Trefry's name was affixed to the papers on his return from a vacation, on representation of a clerk—a new one—that all other formalities had been gone through with. When this became known to Judge Kenefick, who represented the town at the hearing last week, he thought it strange that publication of a notice of that nature should have escaped the eye of every citizen of Palmer, and began to inquire with the result above noted. Hence the hearing on the stock issue request Tuesday.

As has been stated before, the company desires to issue $30,000 of 20 year bonds, $20,000 of which are to refund an issue of that amount made 20 years ago, and about $9500 of floating indebtedness. The company was represented by its president, J H. Gamwell, and C. G Gardner of Springfield; ex Senator T. W. Kenefick was present in the interests of the water committee of the town, the fire district, and as a private citizen. The town water committee is looking out for overcapitalization by the company, as it is not unlikely that the town will want to take the plant as a part of its system.

The water company introduced Charles L. Goodhue and E. P Bell of Springfield as experts on the value of the property. Mr. Goodhue thought that $30,000 would be a conservative amount of bonds for the purposes required. The property has a gross income at the present time of $7500; this would pay $1000 for a superintendent, $500 each for taxes, incidentals and depreciation, leaving $5000 for 5 per cent on $100 000. A fair price, he claimed for water works, was ten times their gross income, which would bring the value of the Palmer plant to $75 000. Water plants do not depreciate much, he claimed; pipes do not need extensive repairs and added value from the increase in population more than offsets the depreciation of the plant. For this however he allowed $500, which at interest would amount to a large sum in 15 or 20 years. The only way to figure the value of properties is to see what can be got out of them. On question from Mr. Kenefick he admitted that he had agreed to take $15,000 of the bonds if they were issued, for he considered them a good investment. He admitted that much of the pipe of the Palmer company is cement, but said it was in good condition and would last a long time. The reason iron pipes are used now is that iron is as cheap as cement. He had not heard that the cement pipe which he laid in Leominster had been replaced because of the numerous breaks. Detailed statements regarding the property of the company were given to show that there was sufficient basis for the amount of bonds asked for.

Mr. Kenefick then attempted to put County Commissioner W. H. Brainerd on the stand as an expert on the other side, and was opposed by Mr. Gardner, who claimed that the town was not called on to appear unless to get material for contesting the price in case it decided to take the property. Mr. Kenefick made decided objection to this. Mr. Gardner claimed that the object of the hearing was to satisfy the commissioner that the property was sufficient for the amount of bonds asked for, so that no investor in the bonds should be exposed to loss. To this Mr. Kenefick replied that his clients had a right to appear upon the matter because they proposed to purchase the property, and the town is justified in seeing that there is no overcapitalization. Commissioner Trefry ruled for Mr. Kenefick and Mr. Brainerd then testified that the value of the property was $48,682, allowing $8000 for the reservoir, which was an ample allowance. Iron pipe he had figured at 1¼ cents a pound; Mr. Goodhue said it was worth 1¾. Mr. Brainerd admitted that his quotation was six months old, but did not believe that Mr. Goodhue's figures were correct.

The counsel disputed over the expert testimony, Mr Kenefick making the point that even at Mr. Gardner's figures the value of the real estate was only a trifle over $50,000, on which it was proposed to issue stock and bonds to the amount of $60 000. The hearing adjourned without a decision being given.

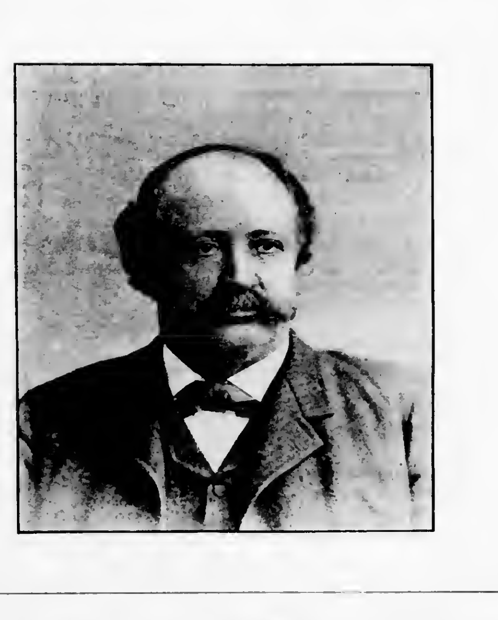
A telephone to the office of the commissioner this morning however, brought the information that Commissioner Trefry had granted the company the required permission.

Ware Forger a Much-Wanted Man.

James Moran, who was arrested in Ware several weeks ago for forgery and is now awaiting trial in Northampton, proves to be a much-wanted man. He evidently has a particular fancy for passing forged checks, and has already through the misuse of other people's names served some time. It is claimed that he is the man who was arrested in New Haven about a year ago for passing a worthless check, and for the offense was sent to jail for a year or more, but he succeeded in escaping from the jail February 3 last. It was learned after his arrest in New Haven that he was wanted in Springfield for passing a forged check on a man on Harrison avenue for a small sum, and a warrant was sent to New Haven to be used to hold the man for the Springfield authorities whenever he should have been released there. Greenfield authorities are also looking for him for the same offense. After Moran is brought to trail in Hampshire county and that court has finished with him, the Springfield authorities will be able to get possession of him before he is taken back to New Haven to serve the unexpired sentence. Chief of Police Maurice Fitzgerald received a communication this week from the chief of police in Fall River, stating that Moran is wanted in that city for forging a check in November. He states that the man was accompanied by two women, and went by the name of Kenney, which is the same as used by him while staying Thanksgiving week in Woonsocket, R. I.

His Days' Works Done At Age of 68 Years.

Sudden Death of Albert T. Wing, one of Palmer's Best Known Citizens, in Welland, Ont., While on a Business Trip.



Albert T. Wing, one of Palmer's most prominent citizens, died suddenly Saturday morning at Welland, Ont. The J. F. Gallivan Building Company, of which Mr. Wing was the senior member and president, is engaged in large construction at Welland, and Mr. Wing was there in the interests of the work. His son, Clarence M., is in charge of the work, and Mrs. Wing had also gone there to be with her husband and son during the holidays. Mr. Wing's health had not been of the best for the past few years, but there was no intimation to his friends that his trouble was serious. His death was entirely unexpected. He had not been feeling quite as well as usual, and had been constantly attended by a physician, though neither his family nor his friends considered his condition alarming, and he was attending to his business every day. On Saturday morning he dressed and prepared to go to the office as usual, but experienced unusual trouble with his breathing and a physician was called. Soon after the arrival of the physician his heart failed however, and he expired in his chair with the members of his family about him.

The announcement of his death in Palmer Saturday afternoon came as a shock to all who heard of it, and the news quickly spread throughout the place. The body was brought to Palmer Sunday morning, and funeral services were held Monday afternoon at 2.30. There was a very large attendance of business men from Palmer and Monson, as well as friends and business men from other places. The services were conducted by Rev. W. A. Moore of St. Paul's Universalist church; there was singing by Mr. and Mrs A. D. Norcross of Monson and by Mr. Moore. There were many floral offerings. The body was taken to Wayne, Me., Tuesday morning, where the last rites were held in the house in which Mr. Wing was born on the farm taken up and settled by his great-grandparents, and which has remained in the family ever since; interment was in the Wing family lot.

Albert T. Wing was the son of Thomas and Abigail P. Wing, and was born in Fayette, Me., February 18, 1837, being 68 at the time of his death. He was a direct descendant of Theodore Wing, who was knighted in 1485 by King Henry VII of England. In this country his ancestry dates back to the 17th century. In the journal of John Winthrop, first governor of the colony of Massachusetts Bay, under the date of June 5, 1632, is the mention of the arrival of the William & Francis "which left London on the 9th of March, and reached this port after a voyage of 88 days with about 60 passengers, whereof were Mr. Welde and old Mr. Bachelder (being aged 71), with their families and many other honest men." With Mr. Bachelder were his daughter, Deborah, widow of John Wing, and her four sons, Daniel, John, Stephen and Matthew. This family settled finally in Sandwich, Mass., where many of the farms to-day are owned by their direct descendents. The son and grandson of Stephen remained in Sandwich, but the great-grandson, Simeon, in 1784 followed his sons to the Province of Maine and settled with his son William on the northwest shore of the lake in Wayne.

Thomas Wing was one of William's sons. He married Abigail Wing, a descendant of John, and made his home on the farm in South Fayette where he now lives at the age of 95. This farm was the possession of his wife Abigail's father, Benjamin, and half of it became hers at the death of her father.

Mr. Wing's early life was passed upon his father's farm and his early education was obtained in the public schools of his native town. On leaving home he went to Quincy and served an apprenticeship as a granite cutter, and after learning the trade he worked for several years in Manchester and Concord, N. H. During the Civil War he was in the former place, and as the granite business was practically at a standstill he accepted an appointment upon the police force, where he did excellent work and made an unusual reputation for an officer of efficiency. Later he went to Concord, to work at the granite trade, and then to Monson, Mass., where in November, 1867, he entered the employ of the W. N. Flynt Granite Company as a stone cutter; after a year he was made foreman of the cutting department, and before long his business ability secured for him the appointment of superintendent of the works. Soon after this the company began the extension of its business, taking contracts for construction as well as for furnishing stone. This branch of the business was in charge of W. K Flynt, with Mr. Wing as assistant, in which capacity he proved exceptionally valuable. The building branch soon became so large that Mr. Wing's services were required almost wholly in that department, and in order to conduct it more advantageously a concern known as the Flynt Building and Construction Company was organized to take it over. Mr. Wing was made division superintendent, with oversight of numerous contracts in various parts of the country. W. K. Flynt was general manager and treasurer of the company, with Mr. Wing as confidential advisor, and after the death of Mr. Flynt in 1886 Mr. Wing was elected general manager. The concern made rapid progress under his management and was vastly prosperous. Mr. Wing continued with it until two years ago, when he withdrew. A few months later he organized the J F. Gallivan Building Company, in which he held the control, and whose business policy he directed.

Mr. Wing was a member of Lafayette lodge of Masons of Manchester, N. H., having been made a member nearly 50 years ago. In politics he was always a staunch Republican, and had always refused town office, although urged many times to accept. His interest in the welfare of the town was large and his responses for aid in a financial way were numerous and generous; his quiet manner and retiring disposition however kept the greater number of his benefactions from becoming known beyond the circle of those most interested in them, whether of a public or private nature. During his business life he became interested in numerous enterprises about which little is known in Palmer, and he had accumulated considerable wealth.

Mr. Wing was married, February 3, 1863, to Emma Atwell; of their three children the second, Albert C., died in infancy. The others are Mrs. Ada G. Mead of Providence, R. I., and Clarence M., now in Welland, Ont., who with his widow survive him.

BOWLING.

Business Men Do Up Professionals.

Teams composed of Palmer business and professional men bowled on Tufts alleys Wednesday evening and the professionals lost, 1127 to 1159. The business men's team was composed of a blacksmith, a carpenter, a coal dealer, a mill owner and the keeper of the alleys; for the professionals there were two dentists, one physician, one lawyer and one instructor. It was a good game to watch, and was anybody's until Holden of the business men defeated Keith of the professionals by 33 pins. The feature of the game was the bowling of Holden, who bowled two strings of 89 each and a total of 259 without making either a strike or a spare; this is also an alley record. The score:

1000 PIECES OF MAIL.

Runaway Wagon From Springfield Found in Palmer.

HAD BEEN GONE ALL FRIDAY NIGHT.

Horse Slipped Driver and Bolted. Found By Roadside by Selectman Brainerd.

Selectman Charles T. Brainerd, living about a mile east of the village, was surprised when he got up last Saturday morning to see the rural mail delivery team standing near his house. At least he thought it was the rural mail team. He looked again however and discovered that he was mistaken. The combination seemed to be without a guiding spirit, so he started to investigate, and was surprised to find that it was a Springfield mail gatherer's outfit. How it came to the Brainerd farm was naturally a mystery. The outfit was taken to the village and turned over to Postmaster Walter L Shaw. He found over 975 letters in the vehicle, and something like 28 other pieces of mail, more than 1000 in all, and forwarded them from the Palmer office to their several destinations.

Later it was learned that the horse was one which had escaped from Springfield the night before. Collector C J. McGillicuddy was making his rounds Friday night and left the wagon as usual to take the mail from a box. Something started the horse and it left. Where it went to could not be learned, though careful search and inquiry was made on all sides. When it reached Palmer is not known, but Postmaster Hyde of Springfield was much relieved Saturday morning to learn that all had turned up safely.

WARREN CHURCH BLESSED.

Impressive Ceremonies at St. Paul's Last Sunday; Bishop Beaven Present.

Impressive services were held in St. Paul's church in Warren Sunday, when the blessing of the church took place. Rt. Rev. Thomas D. Beaven, bishop of the Springfield diocese, was present and was assisted by many prominent clergy in celebrating the solemn high mass in the morning at 10.30 o'clock. Those assisting included Rev. J F. Madden of Springfield, celebrant; Rev. J C. Ivers of Holyoke, deacon; Rev D F McGillicuddy of Worcester, sub-deacon; Rev. J. W. Dolan of Webster, master of ceremonies. Rev J F. Fagan of Housatonic preached the sermon. The music for the mass was Millard's in B. flat, which was rendered by the regular choir assisted by a quartet composed of Miss Jennie Cronin and Miss Josephine Premo of Springfield, P. J. Mulvaney of Ware and A. A. Gendron of Worcester. Miss Etta J. Lawrence of North Brookfield was organist. In the evening vespers were sung at 7.30 and a class of 160 were confirmed by Bishop Beaven, who preached a sermon. The church was crowded to its utmost capacity at both the morning and evening services, many being present from out of town.

The cornerstone of St. Paul's church was laid in July, 1896. The building was quickly erected, but only the basement was finished so as to hold services, the completion of the upper auditorium being delayed until sufficient funds were at hand for the purpose. A year ago Sunday Rev. Fr. John P. McCaughan became pastor of the church, and he immediately set himself about completing the main auditorium. Early in the spring he appealed to his parishioners, and in four days $5000 was pledged. This sum has since been augmented and the total cost of the recent improvements is $9000, making the church building, which is one of the best hereabouts, represent an outlay of $42,000.

When the church was first erected no provision was made by the architect for completing the main auditorium, and it fell to John W. Donahue of Springfield to develop the plans. The room is of the Byzantine design, and is very unique, it being the only church in this diocese of like design. The decorations also show a most artistic blending of colors and skill in the free-hand work. The 14 stations of the cross were the gifts of personal friends of Rev. Fr. McCaughan in Springfield, Holyoke and Salem, where he has previously held pastorates. They are very handsome and cost about $900. The edifice is lighted with 200 incandescent lamps arranged in artistic fixtures, and an entire new steam-heating plant has been installed. The church is centrally located, and stands forth as one of the principal buildings of the town.

Too much credit cannot be given Fr. McCaughan for the wonderful work he has accomplished during his year's pastorate in Warren and the work done in the church building, as well as the class of 160 confirmed Sunday evening, are unquestionable proofs of his untiring efforts for the well-fare, spiritual as well as temporal, of his parish. Fr. McCaughan is full of energy and holds a warm place in the hearts of his parishioners.

Fifteenth Wedding Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Green were pleasantly surprised at their home in East Wilbraham Monday evening by about 40 of their relatives and friends, the occasion being their 15th wedding anniversary. Several valuable gifts, including glassware, china and money were presented them. Refreshments were served and the evening was spent in games and music. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Chilson and son Wendell, Miss Nellie Colburn, Mrs. Florence Crossett and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lyman and son Eugene of Springfield, Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Sikes and James A. Butler of Ludlow, Mr. and Mrs. LeRoy Warner of Indian Orchard, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Edson and daughter Hazel of Monson, Mr. and Mrs. Walter M. Green, Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. Green and daughter Ruth, Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Green and son Milo, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert F. Greene and son Clifford, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin M. Nichols and Mrs. Cowles of Wilbraham.

PRESUMABLY there is some good to be found in the method of every band of religious workers, provided they are honest and sincere. There will be wonder where it is to be found however in the processes followed by the Burning Bush Evangelists who are holding meetings in Boston, if the following extract from their meeting of Sunday, as reported in the Herald of that city, is accurate. In attempting to show that there are men and women so full of the Holy Spirit that they may be termed "God's drunkards," one of them said:

"God meant us to go staggering through the world drunk with happiness," he said. "The devil and the preachers and the ladies' aid society think they have a monopoly on this drunkenness, but God opened a hole in the wall so we can put 10 cents on whirligig and get blind, staggering drunk with the wine of the spirit. We do not want the sour vinegary stuff that the ministers are handing out to the poor, shrivelled-up, dry souls; we want the good old rock and rye, and special things that God pours out of heaven to fatten our bones. The whole church, from the minister's coat tails down to the janitor, has gone completely to the devil" "The difference between a converted man and a sanctified man is that the former has to carry a bottle around with him and come back and have it filled, while the sanctified man rolls under the barrel and throws away the key to the wine room, content to stay where he is."

In the evening there will be a Christmas concert given by the Sunday school. Monday evening at 6 the Sunday school will hold its annual Christmas tree exercises in the chapel.

The services at St Patrick's church on Christmas Day will be at the same hours as on Sundays. At the early mass the junior choir under the direction of Miss Margaret Cavanaugh will sing the Christmas hymns. The music at the high mass will be the harmonized Gregorian chant The choir will be under the direction of Rev. Eugenio iaviana The mass is from three separate masses of Fr. Perosi, the eminent Roman composer. The music is very difficult for an ordinary choir, as the melody of the modern mass is set aside for the severe harmonies of the old church music. The program:

Kyrie, Missa Te Deum,	Perosi
Gloria. Missa Sts. Jervasii et Protasii,	Perosi
Credo, Missa Te Deum,	Perosi
Offertory, Adeste Fideles.	Novello
Sanctus and Benedictus, Missa Eucharistica.	Perosi
Agnus Dei, Missa Te Deum,	Perosi

Vespers will be held in the evening with the following program:

Psalms. Gregorian chant.
Hymn. Adeste Fideles,	Novello
Magnificat. Falsobordone,	Perosi
Alma Redemptoris Mater,	Anon
O Salutaris Hostia,	Gounod
Ecce Panis Angelorum,	Perosi
Tantum Ergo,	Pagella

At the morning service in the Universalist church the following musical program will be rendered:

Prelude. Offertory in D.	Th Salomé
"Coming of the King."	Buck
"The Infant King."	Neidlinger
"There Were Shepherds."	Vinceut
"The Night Song of Bethlehem."	Buck
Offertory.	Tschaskowsky
Postlude.	Gladstone

At the 5 o'clock service:

Prelude. "Cantilena."	Demarest
"Bethlehem"	Coombs
"Hark, What Mean those Holy Voices."	Patty Stair
Christmas Carols.
Postlude.	March by Voss

The Sunday school of the Pease district will hold its Christmas exercises in the school house this evening.

A Christmas concert will be given by the Sunday school of Silver street chapel Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock

Academy Notes.

Miss Kennedy, '07, has left school.

Norcross, '06, has entered the employ of C. M Gage during the holidays.

Miss Ramsdell, '07, has been kept from attending school, because of illness.

F J L McQuaid, of the class of 1905, visited at the school Monday afternoon.

Kerrigan has been elected captain of the freshmen basketball team, and Erickson has been chosen manager.

The following students took part in the rhetoricals held Wednesday morning: Hatch, Billings, Studley, Miss Clark, Miss Holdridge, Miss Hynes, Miss Dillon and Miss Duncan.

The basketball team went to Stafford, Ct., last Saturday afternoon, intending to play the high school team of that town When the time arrived for the commencement of the game, the Stafford manager refused to start the game unless Monson would agree to play under professional rules When this game was arranged amateur rules were agreed upon, and Manager Briggs had in his possession the letter stating this, but this was not proof enough in the mind of the Stafford manager and the result was Monson left the floor. This is not the first time that Monson has encountered this disposition on the part of Stafford, and yesterday Manager Briggs notified Stafford high that from now on all athletic relations between the two schools were closed.

Death of Edward J. DeCourcey.

Edward J. DeCourcey, 42, died Monday afternoon in the hospital in Springfield, where he had been taken for treatment for cancers a few days previous. His case was pronounced hopeless from the first when he entered the hospital Mr. DeCourcey had lived here a few years, coming here from Rockport, and was foreman of the quarrying department for the W. N Flynt Granite Company, and was considered a very capable man. He was a member of Mt. Ella lodge of United Workmen since 1901 He leaves a widow and one son and a father and mother in Rockport. The funeral was held from St Patrick's church Wednesday morning at 7 30 o'clock, and the body was taken to Gloucester for burial The bearers were members of Mt. Ella lodge of United Workmen.

Public Rhetoricals.

Public rhetoricals will be held in the Academy chapel this evening with the following program:

"A Soldier of Bingen."	Miss Kathleen Nye
"Seeing Things."	Miss Olivia Flynt
"The One-Legged Goose."	Miss Ada Weldon
"The Flood on the Floss."	Miss Fay Rindge
"The Convict's Christmas Eve."	Miss Margaret Hynes
"The Merchant and the Book Agent."	Miss Hazel Moore
"His Own Obituary."	Miss Bessie Leahy
"Bernardo del Carpio."	Miss Ramsdell
"A Plea for the old South Church, Boston."	Ralph Purinton
"Speech of Cassius to Brutus."	Carl Homer
"Mandalay."	Mr. Nelligan
"Grant as a Commander."	Clayton Miller
Dialogue. "Literary Tastes."	Misses E. Connell and Horton
Dialogue. "Lochiel's Warning."	Messrs. F. Holloway and Edward Hanley

Several musical selections will be given by members of the school. The public is cordially invited.

Universalist Church Extends a Call.

A special meeting of the Universalist parish was held Tuesday night, and it was voted to extend a call to Rev. D M. Hodge of Tufts college, to the pastorate of the church here, which has been vacant nearly a year. Mr. Hodge was for several years pastor of a church in Franklin until two years ago he resigned to take up literary work for the Universalist Publishing house in Boston. He has supplied the pulpit here several Sundays and is well liked. It is expected that he will accept the call.

More Rowdyism.

George L. Fuller reports the loss of a pair of arctic overshoes from in front of his store on Main street Saturday evening. This is not the first loss Mr. Fuller has suffered in this manner, and the theft is attributed to a gang of loafers who are hanging about merchants' row. It seems as if acts of this sort were sufficient cause for the board of selectmen to take some action in regard to appointing a night police, but as yet no step has been taken in this direction.

Small Fire in Branch Mill.

The second fire within a few days broke out in the picker room at the branch mill Saturday morning, and like the first fire was put out by the employes without calling out the fire department. Steam was turned into the room and the sprinklers were set working. The damage was not very heavy.

WARE.

Farewell Reception.

A B. Paton, the retiring superintendent of the George H. Gilbert Manufacturing Company, was tendered a reception last evening in Grand Army hall by the assistant superintendents, designers, overseers and second-hands of the concern. Fred W. Ward of Gilbertville, assistant superintendent of the mills in that place, acted as presiding officer and made a few introductory remarks when Mr. Paton had been escorted to the hall from his home. After a vocal selection, Andrew Ballantyne, the assistant superintendent in the mills at Ware, read an address on the part of those present, expressing the appreciation of his overseers and second-hands for Mr. Paton's services in the 15 years he had been with the company and their regret at his departure. He closed by presenting Mr. Paton with a shipping receipt from the Derby Desk Company for a handsome oak desk and desk chair, which had been sent to Stafford Springs, Ct., for use in the office of the mills which Mr Patton has bought in that place. Mr. Patton, to whom the whole affair was an entire surprise, briefly expressed his gratitude. H. M. Coney was then introduced and he made a speech, which was followed by several vocal selections. Refreshments were served and the party broke up after singing "Auld Lang Syne."

Team Struck by Trolley Car.

A team driven by Mrs. Merton D Olds was struck by a car on the Springfield and Eastern line at 5.45 Saturday night on West street, near Water street, and Mrs. Olds was thrown out, but escaped injury. Mrs. Olds, who lives on the Enfield road, near Beaver lake, had been in Ware shopping and was returning home. She saw the car approaching, but turned out to pass another team and the horse became frightened by the glare of the headlight. The car was very close, as the horse dashed across the track, and the wagon was struck and overturned. Mrs Olds was thrown heavily to the ground, but sustained no injuries, and the horse was not hurt in any way, but the harness and wagon were somewhat damaged. Mrs. Olds was taken to her home later in the evening. She stated that no blame could be attached to Motorman L T. Turner, who had charge of the car.

Town Physician Appointed.

At a special meeting of the overseers of the poor Wednesday, Dr. L. E Dionne was appointed to act as town physician for the remainder of the fiscal year, or until April 1, 1906 The compensation was fixed at $70, and Dr. Dionne is not required to furnish medicine, but simply to care for patients or render any surgical attendance that may be necessary.

John Vachon of Spencer has taken the position as fireman in the power house of the Ware and Brookfield street railway.

David A Jennison, for 30 years proprietor of the Hampshire House, and the present proprietor of the Swift River Hotel in Enfield, bought the West Brookfield Hotel, which was sold at auction Wednesday.

John W. Clark Jr. of North street has resigned as assistant clerk in the freight office of the Boston and Maine railroad and taken a position in the supply department of the Otis Company. Mr Clark is succeeded in the freight office by James Feehan.

Oasis lodge, Daughters of Rebekah, have elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Noble grand, Mrs. Lizzie Wesson; vice grand, Mrs. Grace Gates; recording secretary, Mrs. Medora Montgomery; financial secretary, Mrs. Hattie McCarthy; treasurer, Mrs. Sarah E. Packard; trustee, Mrs. Louisa Barnard.

Nenameseck tribe of Red Men has elected the following officers: Prophet, Thomas Fay; sachem, Frank H. Shea; senior sagamore, Daniel P. Griffin; junior sagamore, A L. St. John; collector of wampum, George Haley; keeper of wampum, Henry J. Sullivan; chief of records, Henry F. Lamoureux; trustee for three years, Charles A. Currler.

Warren Spaulding, 76, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Charles Ferrier, on the Gilbertville road Tuesday evening. Death was due to a cancer on the right shoulder. Mr. Spaulding sold out his farm in Hubbardston two months ago, and went to live with his daughter. He is survived by a widow, besides the one daughter. The body was taken to Mr. Spaulding's former home yesterday morning for burial

At a meeting of the school committee Tuesday afternoon, it was voted to instruct Superintendent G. W. Cox to engage a teacher for the unused room in the old South-street building in which a school will be opened on January 1 or 2 for illiterates between 14 and 16 years of age now at work in the mills. The state law passed last winter obliged all such to attend until they can read or write simple sentences in English, and at present there are about 30 in the town.

Agapae council, Royal Arcanum, elected the following officers Wednesday evening: Regent, Charles S. Hale; vice regent, P. J. King; orator, Charles M. Lindsey; past regent, Thomas P. A MEASURE OF MERIT.

Palmer Citizens Should Weigh Well This Evidence.

Proof of merit lies in the evidence.
Convincing evidence in Palmer.
Is not the testimony of strangers,
But the endorsement of Palmer people.
That's the kind of proof given here.
The statement of a Palmer citizen.

Charles Gilman residing on the Ware road, says: "While I do not want it to be understood that I have been completely cured by Doan's Kidney Pills, you can say for me that they have done me a world of good and I can recommend them to anyone as a good reliable remedy. I have been troubled off and on for some time with dull, heavy, aching pains through my kidneys and loins, and I have had also spells of dizziness in my head. If I bent over to lift anything it hurt me and caused my back to ache severely. Mr. LeGro recommended Doan's Kidney Pills to me and I commenced to use them some weeks ago. The pain has already left me and I am not troubled with dizziness as formerly. I can stoop without feeling twinges, in fact to tell the truth I feel better than I have in many a long day."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

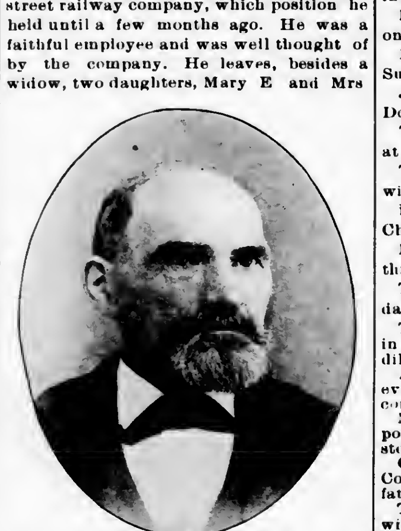
THORNDIKE.

Death of Maurice S. Flynn.

Maurice S Flynn, 76, an old and highly respected resident of Thorndike, died at his home on High street Sunday after an illness of about two months. The deceased was a native of Ireland and came to Thorndike about 60 years ago, where he had spent most of the time since. He was a hard-working and industrious person and had a large circle of friends While he had much love for his native land he was a conscientious citizen. For the past seven years he was employed as flagman at Four Corners for the Springfield and Eastern street railway company, which position he held until a few months ago. He was a faithful employee and was well thought of by the company. He leaves, besides a widow, two daughters, Mary E and Mrs



Michael Holden of Thorndike, three sons, James D. Flynn of the police department of Hartford, Ct., and Michael and Patrick of Thorndike; two sisters, Mrs. Annie Collins of Boston and Mrs. Mary Collins of Northampton. The funeral was held Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock from St. Mary's church with a mass of requiem, Rev. Francis J. Lynch, pastor, being celebrant. Burial was in Thorndike in the family lot in St. Thomas's cemetery. Among the many floral offerings was a handsome wreath from the employees of the Springfield and Eastern street railway. The bearers were John Dailey, Peter J. Cahill, John W. Fay, Daniel J. Mahoney, Cornelius Leary of Palmer and Daniel J. Sullivan.

SEED TIME

The experienced farmer has learned that some grains require far different soil than others; some crops need different handling than others. He knows that a great deal depends upon right planting at the right time, and that the soil must be kept enriched. No use of complaining in summer about a mistake made in the spring. Decide before the seed is planted.

The best time to remedy wasting conditions in the human body is before the evil is too deep rooted. At the first evidence of loss of flesh should be taken immediately. There is nothing that will repair wasted tissue more quickly or replace lost flesh more abundantly than Scott's Emulsion. It nourishes and builds up the body when ordinary foods absolutely fail.

We will send you a sample free.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

WARREN.

Receivers File Their Report.

George F. Brooks of Worcester and Daniel E. Webster of Springfield, receivers of the Torkelson Manufacturing Company of Warren, have filed a report in court stating that they have been unable to sell the plant of the company as a going plant, although they have received offers for portions of the property. They also state that an offer of 50 per cent of the appraised value of $21,560 has been made and another of slightly more than 50 per cent. The receivers ask permission to sell for the latter offer. The receivers claim that a wait for a larger offer might not be advantageous.

FAVORITE REMEDY
Breaks no Hearts, Excuses no Crimes.

Dr. David Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is not a disguised enemy of the human race; where it cannot help, it does not harm. It is composed of vegetable ingredients and does not heat or inflame the blood but cools and purifies it. In all cases of Kidney troubles, Liver complaints, Constipation of the Bowels, and the delicate derangements which afflict women, the action of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is beyond praise. Thousands of grateful people voluntarily testify to this, in letters to Dr. Kennedy; and with a warmth and fullness of words which mere business certificates never possess. It makes no drunkards—excuses no crimes—breaks no hearts. In its coming there is hope, and in its wings there is healing. We challenge a trial and are confident of the result. Your druggist has it. Our Boston Letter

It tells about

Numerous Matters Which are of Interest to all Citizens of the State.

BOSTON, DEC 20, 1905.

District Attorney John B. Moran is the popular sensation of the day in Boston, but the question which thoughtful people are asking whether he will hold out as he has begun. They are not yet satisfied whether his motive is personal notoriety or the good of the public, whether he is of the self-sacrificing sort which will hold fast to a line of conduct which promises to be for the public advantage, though all Boston turn against him, or whether he is merely trying to make capital against the big hotels and get his name in the newspapers It is still remembered that he won his office on the strength of his promises in connection with the notorious suit case, such is the popular belief, and that if that affair had not come along about that time to stir up public feeling amazingly, he would never have been elected. But plenty of people, though still critical, are fair-minded. If he does as well as he has promised, they will gladly accord to him such honours as New York accords to District Attorney Jerome and he will have full credit for all he does for the reformation of the public morals. In certain circles, it will be to his credit that he has attacked the big hotels, Parker's, Young's, the Adams House and the Essex, for the mass of people cannot patronize them and they are supposed to cater to a higher class of people, though not up to the aristocratic standard of the Touraine. It is true, and has been for years, that the screen law has been honored more in the breach than in the observance on the part of many drinking places which are open to the street nominally, but those windows are nevertheless so protected that the public, in passing, gets very little idea of what is going on inside The purpose of the law is to expose the entire inside of the saloon or bar-room, so that all who are there may be seen in their drinking

Probably every coal dealer in the state, and every person who buys coal, is interested in the first case which has ever been brought under the famous coal license law of 1903. This was passed just after the coal famine of 1902 and was the outcome of much agitation Thus far no suit has ever been brought, as Secretary Olin says he supposes, because no one has been found with determination sufficient to push the case of alleged violation. But to-day there was heard by the secretary, according to the law, the first hearing on complaint of violation of the law in the particular that there was illegal discrimination against a man who wanted to buy coke He is a New Bedford coke dealer who brings the suit, named Edward T. Brightman, and the defendants are the New Bedford gas and Edison light company and Thomas H Fuller, a New Bedford coke seller The two defendants were represented by counsel, but Brightman conducted his own case. Secretary Olin heard the testimony, as the law provides, though he has personally doubts whether he can be required to fulfil the combined functions of the judicial and executive department, as this law requires. Under the law, he must preside at such a hearing as was held to-day, and he must render a decision whether or not the accused person or company has forfeited its license, or been guilty of such violation as to make it advisable to suspend the license for a given time. The constitution says that the different departments of government shall be kept distinct and that neither shall ever perform the duties of either of the others. But here seems to be a distinct putting of judicial service upon an executive official. Though the point might have been raised during the hearing, it was not raised, other than that the counsel for the gas company said that he believed that the law was not constitutional, but he did not make any formal point of it and there was no protest to go on record.

In this case Brightman charged that there had been unlawful discrimination against him, while the gas company denied it. There was no dispute about the facts. Putting together the statements of both Brightman and President Stetson of the company and those by counsel for Fuller, who was not present in person, the facts are these. Brightman is a retail coke dealer, who keeps four stores. At one of them he sells coke by the half bushel bag for 10 cents and delivers the bag to customers At the three other stores he sells the same quantity, in bags, for eight cents and does not deliver it. He sells at this low rate, he said, as a means of extending his general business, just as some grocers sell sugar or other articles at cost in order to advertise their places of business. The coke costs him 7½ cents per bushel, so that he gets a margin of only ½ a cent, which is not enough, says President Stetson of the gas company, to pay for handling it, and Brightman did not dispute that proposition. The company's side of the story is that it tried selling coke by the bag after the coal famine, but as Fuller had a charcoal route, the sale of that interfered with the sale of coke. So they agreed with Fuller to take their business of selling coke in bags and, in order to protect him, they made a verbal agreement that they would not sell to any other person to sell for less than 10 cents per bag. That agreement is in force. When they found that Brightman was selling for eight cents, both Fuller and the gas company refused to sell unless he promised to sell for not less than 10 cents per bag. This he refused to do and brought suit to determine whether he is within his rights in the case. Brightman says that it is no business of the company what he does with the coke after he has bought it, whether he sells it for eight cents, or gives it away, or throws it into the river. This view was accepted by the treasurer of the gas company, but President Stetson would not accept that part relating to the coke, but that it did make a great difference. The defendants say that they would not sell to anybody any more than they sell to Brightman, but that he wants them to sell to him at a less rate than they would sell to any body else and therefore that he wants an unlawful discrimination made in his favor by the company. But he says that he has offered the market price for the coke to the company and has been refused, and that is unlawful discrimination against him. It was said by Secretary Olin, and is doubtless true, that there has been no wilful violation of the law by any one. The company believed that it had a right to make a verbal agreement with Fuller to protect him in his business so that he might increase the sales of coke Before the case is decided it is probable that there will be some decision on the part of the supreme court regarding the constitutionality of the law, for that goes to the bottom of the subject and it ought to be decreed early in the history of the effort, whether an executive official can discharge a judicial function. It was agreed at the hearing to-day that what is done by the gas company in way of giving favors to a particular customer is done right along in other kinds of business, and the question was whether the coal and coke business, by being put under license, comes under the common law of public servants so much that it cannot show any favor to any customer.

Gov-elect Guild is very busy with his preparations for inauguration He has taken Room 429 on the fourth floor of the state house, the exquisitely decorated room which was first used for a reading room for the Senate and since then for the committee on street railways There he receives the heads of departments and other officials and such of the public as he wishes to consult and has his stenographer and private secretary constantly at hand. This afternoon he has been in consultation with Representative Cole of Andover, who expects to be the speaker of the next House and will probably realize his ambition. The governor-elect is sending out some 1200 to 1500 invitations to the inauguration. though the state house will not accommodate half of that number. The fact is that a great many of these invitations are merely complimentary, where the invited surely cannot accept. For instance it is said that Guild has invited all of his college classmates, though they are scattered all over the face of the earth They like to be remembered and Guild likes to remember them, but not many of them will crowd into the state house two weeks from Thursday.

One who keeps well informed regarding affairs in Russia says that there has not happened yet what is liable to happen and that is a great uprising of the middle classes, who will serve the Czar as Charles I was served, or Louis XVI. But he does not expect to see the end of the czar's life come by assassination. If it does come it will be under form of law. The czar's salvation, he believes, is in recognizing the spirit of the revolution and granting sufficient reform to save himself. This judgment is from a source usually so well informed that it is entitled to weight.

Mr. Cole is about as busy as Mr. Guild in preparing for the coming legislative session. He is making up his committees and is in consultation with both the members who want the nice committee places and with the public interests which want strong men put in the most important places where they will count for something in deciding the fate of legislation.

One who has facts to support his assertions says that the moving spirit behind the Boston elevated railroad company is not its nominal head, Gen. William A. Bancroft, but it is William A. Gaston, and that what he says goes This is an important point to bear in mind in watching the public course of that corporation at the state house.

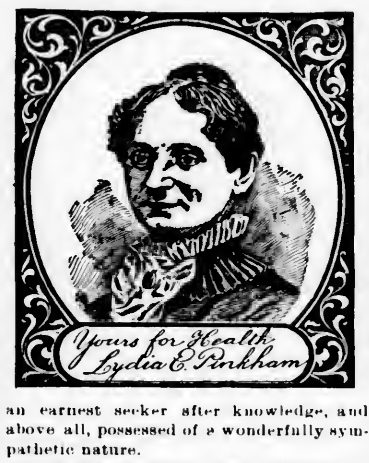
LANDON.

WHO SHE WAS

SKETCH OF LIFE OF LYDIA E. PINKHAM

And a True Story of How the Vegetable Compound Had Its Birth and How the "Panic of 73" Caused It to be Offered for Public Sale in Drug Stores.

This remarkable woman, whose maiden name was Estes, was born in Lynn, Mass., February 9th, 1819, coming from a good old Quaker family. For some years she taught school and became known as a woman of an alert and investigating mind, an earnest seeker after knowledge, and above all, possessed of a wonderfully sympathetic nature.



In 1843 she married Isaac Pinkham, a builder and real estate operator, and their early married life was marked by prosperity and happiness. They had four children, three sons and a daughter.

In those good old fashioned days it was common for mothers to make their own home medicines from roots and herbs, nature's own remedies—calling in a physician only in specially urgent cases. By tradition and experience many of them gained a wonderful knowledge of the curative properties of the various roots and herbs.

Mrs. Pinkham took a great interest in the study of roots and herbs, their characteristics and power over disease. She maintained that just as nature so bountifully provides in the harvest-fields and orchards vegetable foods of all kinds; so, if we but take the pains to find them, in the roots and herbs of the field there are remedies expressly designed to cure the various ills and weaknesses of the body, and it was her pleasure to search these out, and prepare simple and effective medicines for her own family and friends.

Chief of these was a rare combination of the choicest medicinal roots and herbs found best adapted for the cure of the ills and weaknesses peculiar to the female sex, and Lydia E. Pinkham's friends and neighbors learned that her compound relieved and cured and it became quite popular among them.

All this so far was done freely, without money and without price, as a labor of love.

But in 1873 the financial crisis struck Lynn. Its length and severity were too much for the real estate interests of the Pinkham family, as this class of business suffered most from fearful depression, so when the Centennial year dawned it found their property swept away. Some other source of income had to be found.

At this point Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was made known to the world.

The three sons and the daughter, with their mother, combined forces to restore the family fortune. They argued that the medicine which was so good for their woman friends and neighbors was equally good for the women of the whole world.

The Pinkhams had no money and little credit. Their first laboratory was the kitchen, where roots and herbs were steeped on the stove, gradually filling a gross of bottles. Then came the question of selling it, for always before they had given it away freely. They hired a job printer to run off some pamphlets setting forth the merits of the medicine, now called Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and these were distributed by the Pinkham sons in Boston, New York and Brooklyn.

The wonderful curative properties of the medicine were, to a great extent, self-advertising, for whoever used it recommended it to others, and the demand gradually increased.

In 1877, by combined efforts the family had saved enough money to commence newspaper advertising and from that time the growth and success of the enterprise were assured, until to-day Lydia E. Pinkham and her Vegetable Compound have become household words everywhere, and many tons of roots and herbs are used annually in its manufacture.

Lydia E. Pinkham herself did not live to see the great success of this work. She passed to her reward years ago, but not till she had provided means for continuing her work as effectively as she could have done it herself.

During her long and eventful experience she was ever methodical in her work and she was always careful to preserve a record of every case that came to her attention. The case of every sick woman who applied to her for advice—and there were thousands—received careful study, and the details, including symptoms, treatment and results were recorded for future reference, and to-day these records, together with hundreds of thousands made since, are available to sick women the world over, and represent a vast collaboration of information regarding the treatment of woman's ills, which for authenticity and accuracy can hardly be equaled in any library in the world.

With Lydia E. Pinkham worked her daughter-in-law, the present Mrs. Pinkham. She was carefully instructed in all her knowledge, and for years she assisted her in her vast correspondence.

To her hands naturally fell the direction of the work when its originator passed away. For nearly twenty-five years she has continued it, and nothing in the work shows when Lydia E. Pinkham dropped her pen, and the present Mrs. Pinkham, now with the help of a large family, took it up. With woman assistants, some as capable as herself, the present Mrs Pinkham continues this great work, and probably from the office of no other person have so many women been advised how to regain health. Sick women, this advice is "Yours for health" freely given if you only write to ask for it.

Such is the history of Lydia E Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; made from simple roots and herbs; the one great medicine for women's ailments, and the fitting monument to the noble woman whose name it bears.

WRECK IN PALMER YARD.

Two Passenger Cars Smashed Saturday Morning.

FORTUNATELY NO SERIOUS INJURIES.

Engineer Ran by Four Danger Signals. One Car Tipped Over and Track Blocked.

Conductor Camp's train for Boston, due to leave Palmer at 6 10 in the morning, was delayed about an hour and a half Saturday morning, two of its cars, a baggage and smoker, being wrecked by a light westbound engine as it was getting out to the main track preparatory to leaving. Eastbound trains were also delayed several hours before the track was cleared for their passage.

Camp's train is made up in Palmer, and Saturday morning when wrecked was crossing from the side track over the north main track to the south one, used for eastbound trains, at a point just east of the Main street bridge. The signals were properly set, and the train was also protected by a flagman out on the north track. The train was being run with the passenger coach next to the engine, then the smoker and last the baggage car. The engine and coach had reached the south track and the smoker was nearly over when it was struck by a light engine in charge of Joseph Griffin. The side of the car was scratched considerably and the end pushed from the trucks. The baggage car following fared worse, being tipped completely over on its side, where it lay until the wrecker came from Springfield and cleared away the ruins. The Ware River line engine was used to pull the end of the smoker around so that the crossover could be used, and with a couple more cars from that line the train proceeded to Boston about 7 30 The light engine, in colliding with the train, had run by four signals set against it, a red banjo at Blanchardville about a mile down the track, the flagman of Camp's train, the semaphor signal just east of Main street and close to the wreck, and the switch light on the crossover.

D. E. Marcy of Palmer, who was riding on the wrecked baggage car, was thrown off when it was struck and received severe injuries to both ankles, the right one being hurt the most. He was confined to the house for several days but is now out again, though walking with a cane. The only other person hurt was a brakeman riding on the colliding engine, who jumped and was shaken up somewhat. The 6.39 express from the west arrived soon after the smashup and was held until about 8 o'clock, when it was run back to North Wilbraham and returned on the north main track, this being used until the other was cleared, the trains taking the south track again at the crossover on which the cars were wrecked, there being no other between that and North Wilbraham. The wrecker reached Palmer about 9 o'clock and the muss was cleared up about noon.

DEATH OF MRS. CARRIE KURTZ.

End Came Suddenly and Unexpectedly Yesterday Afternoon at Her Home.

Mrs. Carrie A. Kurtz, 60, died suddenly at her home on South Main street yesterday afternoon about 2 o'clock, although it was not known that she had passed away until a couple of hours later. Mrs. Kurtz caught a cold last Saturday but was about the house as usual until yesterday morning when she decided to remain in bed on account of feeling weak, announcing that she would rest a little and rise later. She kept delaying however, although at noon she ate a hearty dinner and said she felt decidedly better, though still weak, too weak to see a visitor who called about that time. She talked freely and cheerfully and appeared to be in the best of health and spirits. About 2 o'clock Miss Nellie M. Walker, who was sitting with her, noticed an apparent cessation of breathing. Miss Walker is partially crippled and was alone in the house, and with difficulty got from her chair to Mrs. Kurtz, whom she believed to be in a trance. Her lips and face retained their natural color, and as she had at previous times remained unconscious for considerable periods Miss Walker saw no occasion for alarm until later, when a change in appearance began to be noticed. A physician was then sent for, but Mrs Kurtz had been dead probably since 2 o'clock. An autopsy was performed last evening and revealed pneumonia, with a clot of blood in one of the large arteries of the heart.

Carrie Asenath Clark was born in Rutland, Mass , in 1845, and came to Palmer with her parents when about six months old; since that time her home has been in this village, with the exception of about three years spent with a brother in Niagara Falls. Mrs. Kurtz possessed much musical ability and became a music teacher; she for a long time played the organ and sang in the choir of the Congregational church, and was also for a time a member of the choir of a Springfield church. She was married to William Kurtz of Palmer January 29, 1879. He died September 15, 1897; their only daughter, Maude May, died May 30, 1892, at the age of 12 years. On their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Kurtz made their home in the "Dr. Vaille house" on South Main street, where she has since lived.

Mrs. Kurtz became a member of the Congregational church at the early age of 12, and for many years there was no more constant attendant. It has been a long time however since she has been present at its services, she having some years ago adopted other beliefs. Among these was that of Divine Healing, she holding that the Scriptural teaching "Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases," would provide all necessary remedial power, and refused to consult physicians or take medicines herself, although allowing other members of her household not under her immediate control to do as they pleased in these matters. She believed the Bible literally, and for a number of years has devoted her life to doing for others, particularly the poor and the unfortunate. To these her home has been indeed a haven of refuge, without any question of remuneration. She has had with her at one time as many as seven who were wholly or partially dependent on her bounty, and in doing for and caring for them she has denied herself many things, living and dressing in the most simple manner that she might do the more for those who came to her in their distress. Hers has been a consistent Christian life as she interpreted the word; the amount of good she has done, the suffering she has relieved and the troubled minds she has eased can only be known to those who knew her most intimately, for her work was done in her home, she confining it there and going out very little. There will be deep sorrow among those whom she has befriended over her departure.

Mrs. Kurtz is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Emily F. Gamwell of West Brookfield and Mrs. Henrietta L. Burnham of Dorchester.

The funeral will be held from her late home to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock. As the Congregational church is without a pastor, Rev. C. W. Williams of the Baptist church will officiate, assisted by Elder L. H. Baker of the Advent chapel.

BASKETBALL.

Palmer High 12, Belchertown High 10.

The Palmer high school basketball team defeated the Belchertown high school team at Belchertown Saturday night 12 to 10. Adkins and Collins faced each other for the toss-up, the latter reaching the ball first and batting to Harrington; he passed to Fitzgerald, who shot the first goal. The second was not made so easily, for it was over ten minutes before Fitzgerald succeeded in caging it again. After this basket, Belchertown seemed to wake up and by clever passing enabled Gould to shoot a basket. Belchertown then began to play hard in hope of tying the score and the Palmer boys think the referee was not as watchful as he might have been, overlooking a great deal of roughness on the part of Belchertown. The foul was called on Harrington, and Williams tried, but missed; the ball bounded from the rim of the basket to Collins and on a quick pass Conroy shot the third basket. Good blocking and clever passing enabled Gould to score two more baskets and the half ended with a tie score, 6 to 6 In the second half, Conroy shot Palmer's fourth basket as a result of good passing, and continued good team work allowed Collins to make the fifth. A blocking game on the part of Belchertown resulted in baskets by Gould and Williams, and when time was called the score was again tied 10 to 10. By agreement the teams continued to play until one side scored but it was ten minutes before Harrington, by a sensational throw, shot the winning basket. The work of the Palmers was good, while Belchertown played a good blocking game. For individual work Fitzgerald and Gould showed up well. Score:

Palmer H. S.	Belchertown H. S.
Conroy, lf	rb, Gould
Fitzgerald, rf	lb, Williams
Collins, c	c, Adkins
Smith, rb	lf, Bridgman
Harrington, lb	rf, Pierce

Goals, Fitzpatrick 2, Conroy 2, Gould 4, Collins 1, Harrington 1, Williams 1. Free tries missed, Bridgman 2. Timer, Stimson of Palmer. Referee, Johnson. Time, 20 and 15 minute halves; 10 minutes overtime. Attendance, 200.

Ware High 24, Alumni 5.

Ware high school defeated a team of alumni players in the Ware town hall Monday evening, 24 to 5. The high school led at the end of the first half, 12 to 2. The playing of Snow and the two forwards was too much for the alumni. The summary:

Ware High.	Alumni.
Brannigan, l f	r g, J. D. Clark
Harrington, r f	l g, Jeffries
Snow, c	c, W. Neiligan
McCann, l g	r f, G. Sullivan

Tufts' alleys in Palmer will be closed next Monday and Tuesday for planning and refinishing the bowling surfaces.

Robert Huggard won the pipe offered at Tufts' pool room for the greatest number of balls pocketed on a break, securing five.

The Otis Company team of Ware and a team made up of the overseers of the mills in the several villages of Palmer will roll on Tufts' alleys to-night.

Frank Shuttleworth won the turkey offered at Bond's alleys in Thorndike for the highest total of three consecutive strings at bottle pins. In the candlepin contest Patrick Daley and Beni Gay were tied with a score of 273, Daley winning by three pins on the roll off.

The winners of the turkey at Tufts' Palmer alleys were Frank Hart and Philip Story. Joseph Slattery held the candle pin lead with 284 up to December 12, when Hart rolled 287, which proved to be more than any of his opponents could make. T. D Frame held the bottle pin lead with 610 until last Thursday, when Story rolled 638.

Frank Hart broke the Tufts alley candlepin record Wednesday evening by nine pins, making a total of 301 without deadwood. The score by strings was 100, 99, 102. The former record was 292, held by Dr. J. F. Roche, and was made May 9, 1905, in a match game with Ware. Dr. Roche still holds the single string record with a score of 121.

THE FIRST STATE GRANGE.

Organization Was in Palmer Thirty-one Years Ago.

MEETING IN WEEKS HOTEL IN 1874.

Palmer Grange Then in Existence With Only One Farmer Among Its Members.

The recent meeting of the State Grange in Springfield, with its attendants from all parts of Massachusetts, calls to the memory of some of the Journal's older readers the pioneer gathering in this line—the meeting from which the present State Grange, and all that it is and stands for, sprang.

For the first meeting of the State Grange was held in Palmer. From one of the early masters it is learned that T. H. Allis was appointed chairman to organize the grange at Deerfield, and the first regular meeting of the State Grange was held at Palmer in 1874, Mr. Allis presiding as master. At that meeting Joseph P. Felton was elected master, being followed by Thaddeus Graves and he by Benjamin P. Ware, now of Clifton, Mass. The meeting at Palmer, because of a lack of proper instruction, was a curious medley of proceedings, but with the best of intentions on the part of the members. However, the foundation was then laid which has culminated in a wonderful growth. At that time the membership was only 1400 and there was $62 in the treasury; now there are 20,000 farmers enrolled and the treasury contains $8000. The year 1877 was one of the darkest in the history of the organization throughout the whole country, but particularly in this state, partly on account of the reaction which naturally followed the boom which went like a whirlwind over the country, and partly because of the mistaken methods of its advocates

The subordinate grange at Palmer was a curious organization While the by-laws of the order provided that only farmers were eligible to membership, the Palmer grange contained only one agriculturist, Alvin Hastings, father of G. H. Hastings of this village. While there was a lack of farmers among the grange members, some of the most prominent citizens of the town were enrolled. Indeed, it is likely that more attention was paid to the social part of the ritual than to anything else. Prominent among the members were Dr. William Holbrook, since deceased but then in the prime of life and prominent in affairs of the town; C. L. Gardner, now of Springfield; S S. Taft, also of Springfield; O. P. Allen and J. W. Weeks, with their wives. The meetings were held in the hall of the Antique House, kept by Mr. Weeks, which was fitted up for the order, and it was there that the first State Grange was held. Little is remembered and so far as known nothing has been preserved of the records of the Palmer grange, but that Dr. Holbrook was for a time its master is certain. At the height of its existence there were 40 to 50 members, but they dropped out one by one, interest dwindled, and after an experience of four or five years the organization ceased to exist.

Round Trip Rates Reduced.

If you have occasion to visit the western country before the first of the year, now is your opportunity, because tickets will be on sale via the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, from Chicago on the first and third Tuesdays of each month, to various western destinations and return, good for 21 days, at 75 per cent of the one way fare. To other sections of the country, one fare plus $2 for the round-trip is charged.

If you are going West, write to us, and we will figure out the lowest combination possible, and give you advantage of it. Don't hesitate to ask for all the information necessary to make your trip pleasant. Tickets can be obtained from your local ticket agent, or from Geo. L. Williams, N. E. P. A., 368 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Girl Disappears from Ware Almshouse.

Florence Towne, 22, disappeared from the Ware almshouse Wednesday, and has not been seen since. It is stated that she told another inmate that she was going to take Paris green and kill herself. She went the almshouse in June, 1904, and has a son 18 months old. She has brooded because the child has stood in the way of her getting employment. A search is being made for her. Yesterday morning a man told Warden Bruce that the girl was all right, but would not say where she was exactly. The home of Mrs. William Avery in district No. 5 was visited yesterday by a sister of Miss Towne, but in reply to questions, the presence of the missing girl was neither admitted nor denied. The sister was assured, however, that Miss Towne was safe.

Ware Overseers Appoint Almoner.

A meeting of the Ware overseers of the poor was held Tuesday evening, when it was voted to appoint Thomas Naylor almoner, at a salary of $800 a year. Mr Naylor will begin his duties next Monday, and is appointed until April 1. He was formerly in the grocery business in Ware, but for some time has been employed in a grocery store in Springfield. It is understood that the appointment was made by the votes of Messrs. Farrar and Girard; the third member, Mr. Casey, while favoring the appointment of an almoner is said to have preferred Timothy Sugrue.

Canadian Excursions on C. V. Road.

The Central Vermont railroad announces reduced rates from Dec. 29 to January 2, inclusive, to Montreal and Quebec. The winter time is the proper season to visit Canada, when one may enjoy the winter sports, skating, snow-shoeing, tobogganing, hockey games, etc. Round-trip tickets will be sold as follows: Monson, $9 55 to Montreal, $11.55 to Quebec; Palmer, $9.40 to Montreal and $11.40 to Quebec; Three Rivers, $9 40 to Montreal and $11 40 to Quebec; Belchertown, $9 40 to Montreal and $11 40 to Quebec. Tickets will be good for stop-over privileges at points in Canada.

Boy Badly Burned in Belchertown.

Joseph Witt, son of George Witt of Granby, was severely burned in the Belchertown Methodist church Saturday evening. The boy was attempting to uncover a dish containing boiling hot cocoa and the escaping steam burned his forehead, eyebrows and injured his eyes. The doctors hope to keep the sight unimpaired, although it was affected, and the eyelids skinned.

A farmers' institute was held in the district court room this afternoon at 1 o'clock under the auspices of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society. The speaker was S H. Reed of West Brookfield, and his subject, "The selection and breeding of cattle for the dairy." After the institute the adjourned annual meeting of the society was held.

Our Boston Letter

It touches on

The Russian Revolution — Transportation Problems — Brown Tail Moth Experiments — Inauguration Day Boston School Matters.

BOSTON, DEC 27, 1905.

One of the best informed men in Boston upon Russian affairs, speaking to-day of the terrible scenes in Moscow, said that the revolution had not come yet. Thus far there has been the fierce fighting of the revolutionaries, but these are not the Russian people. Their turn is yet to come. But when the great middle class of the Russians turns against the government, as it is expected to do, then the revolution will have come, and the aristocracy will not be able to resist its power. Perhaps to-day's report of the burning of Moscow and of the mutiny of the Baltic fleet means that the revolution is really about to come to an open head Ever since the French revolution the civilized world has shuddered at the horrors of those bloody days, but the scenes in Russia to-day are more terrible, with their barricades, street fighting, destruction of houses and slaughter of innocent people, than any of the days of the French revolution. Yet the world has hoped and expected that such terrible days would never come again. This Russian does not believe that Count Witte is to be trusted, but says that at heart he is a reactionary who will never take the side of the people. It would not be strange, he says, if the government refuses to take the present warning, if there were re-enacted the tragedies of Charles I and Louis XVI.

Our state government seems to be preparing for a discussion of the relations of the transportation corporations to the people judging by the extreme care which is being put upon the report of the recess committee upon the revision of the railroad and street railway laws. President Dana of the Senate is chairman of the committee and he has spent about all his time for months in putting the laws into shape. Repeated meetings of his subcommittee have been held and the report is not yet nearly ready for transmission to the Legislature. The time limit will be reached January 15. It seems inevitable that there should be a revival of the old contest between the steam and the electric roads over the franchise between Boston and Providence, unless the contending parties,—Shaw and the Gaston-Snow interests,—pool their issues and get whatever they can in way of transportation rights for street railway corporations in general. Among the petitions waiting for the Legislature to meet is one for the incorporation of a company to build an electric line between Boston and New Bedford, and thus it is evident that the precedent of the Boston-Worcester line parallel to a steam road, is to be followed in the southern part of the state. The purpose of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad company, announced to-day, to get possession of the Hoosac Valley street railway company, shows how the transportation of the state is falling into fewer and fewer hands and what the danger is that our entire system of passenger and freight transportation will be in the control of a monopoly against which business men and the travellers would be powerless to protest, leaving the problem to be solved by the people in their collective capacity. Events seem to be trending fast in that direction.

Distribution is being made to-day of the annual report of the anti-imperialist league, with its evidence of the growing popular support by the people of the country of the views which the league maintained when it was not popular to hold them. Nearly all of the report is occupied by the masterly address of Moorfield Storey, the president, reviewing the situation to date. It is a very enlightening document and can be had by writing to 20 Central street, Boston, for it.

In the headquarters of the gypsy and brown tail moth commission, at No. 6 Beacon street, has been received to-day a consignment of 19 boxes of parasitized brown tail caterpillars. These boxes will average to hold about a bushel each. They are filled with the winter nests of the caterpillars, similar to those which are to be seen in the infested territory around Boston and will soon be seen all over the state, at the rate the curse is spreading. These nests have been collected under the supervision of a woman named Marie Ruhl of Zurich, Switzerland. It is supposed that in the backs of these little caterpillars have been laid the eggs of the diminutive fly which will hatch about the time that the caterpillars will awake in the spring and that their presence and growth in the body of the caterpillar will destroy the caterpillar. But is is not known for certain that the parasites' eggs have been laid in the caterpillars. It is guessed that they have been because this enemy in nature holds the pest in check far better than any human means could. These boxes will be taken to the laboratory of the commission in North Saugus and every effort will be made to breed the parasites. It is not known whether they can stand the climate nor whether their coming here will be a success or a flat failure. Nothing practical will be done with them in the coming season, for it would risk the possible success of the experiment to turn the parasites loose upon the infested territory before it was known whether they could stand the climate or whether they would infect the caterpillars in this country. These parasites were probably collected in part in Austrian forests, where they suffer from the brown tails, and some of the boxes are marked "Wien," or Vienna. These do not have anything to do with the gypsy moth caterpillars, which are worse than the brown tails.

Nothing further has transpired regarding the speakership of the House, in way of opposition to the election of Representative Cole, and it is probable that the case of improper support against the corporation influence was not strong enough to bring to an open issue. But the affidavits which have been collected will be carefully guarded and it is quite likely that the known fact of their existence and readiness to be used, if emergency demands it, will exercise a salutary influence upon the situation in the Legislature at the coming session. It is due to Mr. Cole to say that these affidavits have no connection with him, but they do relate to some of the support which was given to him. He is proceeding with the formation of his committees and learning the preferences of the members, as well as studying their history and known qualifications so that the strongest possible working force can be made up. It is impossible to satisfy a material portion of the members, and many of them must accept the inevitable, that they cannot be satisfied, and make the best of what they can get. If they want to make a name, let them study the problems which are presented to the Senate and House and contribute really to their solu-

PALMER NEWS.

Almshouse Heating and Plumbing Contract

The contracts for the heating and plumbing at the new almshouse were awarded Tuesday evening to the E. Brown Company of Palmer. The bids for the heating were as follows: S. W. Lyon & Co., $978.80; Whitcomb & Faulkner, $889.50; Wyckoff & Lloyd Co. of Springfield, $875; E Brown Co., $760. The plumbing bids were: S. W. Lyon & Co., $731.33; E. Brown Co., $548. The boiler which was installed a year ago last summer was not hurt by the fire, and will be used for the new building Work on the plumbing has already been begun. It was expected that bids for painting the building would be opened Tuesday night, but it was decided to return all bids and call for new ones, to be opened next Monday evening. The building is shingled and clapboarded, and rapid progress is being made on the interior.

Horse Climbs Barn Stairs.

The hostler in charge of A. W. Holbrook's horses was somewhat surprised Sunday morning to find, when he opened the barn, that a large gray horse which he had left with the others the night before, was not to be found in its accustomed place. As the doors were securely locked the animal's disappearance was somewhat of a mystery. Investigation showed however that the horse had climbed the stairs to the floor above. Just how it accomplished this feat is something of a puzzle, for the stairs contain a sharp turn and are hardly as wide as the horse. However, there the animal was, and the problem was to get it down, which was finally accomplished by placing a large pile of hay on the ground and pushing the horse out upon it.

District Court.

William Doyle of Rockland, Me, and Michael Dunn of Quincy were found hanging about the electric car barn on South Main street last Friday night acting in a suspicious manner and were arrested. In court Saturday they pleaded guilty to drunkenness and were committed in default of $6 each.

Roy E. Cummings, who has been bookkeeper at Marcy's lumber yard, has ceased his connection with that establishment. He is not to remove from town, to the gratification of his many friends, but will remain and engage in the real estate and insurance business.

A recruiting station for the United States army will be opened here next Monday and continued until January 15th. The place has not yet been designated. Recruits for all branches of the service will be taken, and considerable interest is being shown by some of the young men in Palmer.

The Historical Society will hold its regular meeting next Tuesday evening in the reference room of the public library at 7.30 "The Spaniards in America" will be the subject, and papers will be read by Mrs. W H Hitchcock, Rev. W. A. Moore and Miss Della Hastings. All interested are invited to be present.

The program committee of the Palmer Woman's Club has been obliged to change the next meeting, which will be held next Friday, from an evening social to an afternoon lecture. The meeting will be at the home of Mrs. R. B. Francis on North Main street, and the speaker will be Rev. Dr. B. D. Hahn of Springfield.

A horse belonging to the epileptic hospital slipped away from its driver Monday morning in front of Thompson's market after being untied and before the driver could get in, and made quick time back to the institution. There was no damage, and the horse and wagon were soon back on the regular round of duties.

Among the other presents on the Baptist Sunday school Christmas tree Wednesday evening were cash remembrances for Rev. C. W. Williams, the pastor, and F. S. Keith, the superintendent. The Sunday school has received a check for $25 from Mrs. H. S. Rokenburg of New York, and the church was given $50 by Mrs. F. M. Eager, to be used for wiring the parsonage for electric lights.

A meeting of the high school building committee was held Wednesday evening, when the question of the addition to the present structure was discussed, and it was voted to call a special town meeting so that some action may be taken. One meeting has been held and an outlay of $20,000 authorized, but it has been found that the present plans cannot be carried out for that amount of money.

A team driven by Frank Lewis was struck by the 8 o'clock electric car from the south in front of Thompson's blacksmith shop on South Main street last Saturday. When the car hit the wagon Mr. Lewis jumped out and escaped without injury; the wagon was thrown against a telegraph post and badly wrecked. The horse became frightened and freed himself from the wagon, then ran to Thorndike street, where it was stopped.

A cattle pen is being built by employes of the New York Central at the west end of the freight depot, which will greatly facilitate the loading and unloading of stock cars.

An east-bound freight, which was backing off Tuesday morning about 6 o'clock, broke apart, owing to a broken coal car, and the caboose and a tank car loaded with bark extract plowed through the earth embankment at the end of the track and were both derailed. The wrecker did not arrive until nearly 1 o'clock when things were righted again. The tank car continued its journey to Worcester, but the coal car and caboose were taken to Springfield for repairs.

Among those who spent Christmas in town were William A. Patrick and family of Springfield with Mr. and Mrs William E Patrick on the West Brookfield road; Frank C. Gage of Norwich, Ct., with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Miss Lydia Converse, who is spending the winter in Monson, was at home on Christmas.

A successful Christmas sale was held in the town hall last week by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Grange. Cake, fancy and useful articles were sold which brought the organization $15.

The Christmas festival held by the Sunday school in the Congregational church was a very successful and enjoyable occasion. The cantata, "The King of Kings," was given in the audience room of the church, after which a chicken-pie supper free to all was served to over 200 people. Presents were afterwards distributed to old and young from a tree which members of the Sunday school and others had loaded with gifts.

Dr. S. A. Fisk has moved into his new home on Prospect hill, and Oscar F. Brown will spend the winter with him there. Dr. Fisk purchased in the summer the farm known as the Col. Abner Brown place, which has one of the finest views in the section. He has added a broad veranda and remodelled the interior of the house while being careful to retain the general lines and preserve the simple colonial style of the dwelling which was built in 1800. The finishing and the interior arrangements, which include the modern improvements, have been planned with unusual regard for convenience and comfort and for winter as well as summer residence, there being a furnace and several fireplaces in the house. The people of Brimfield are very gratified to have Dr. Fisk become a citizen of that town, and to see the improvement of this old place which for a number of generations was one of the most hospitable and much-frequented homes in the community. At Christmas time Dr. Fiske entertained his brother, Robert T. Fiske of Boston, Louis S. Brown of Boston and George A. Webster of Brimfield, and received other Brimfield friends to help in dedicating his new home.

WARE.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Bray and children spent a part of the week with relatives in Granby, Ct.

E St. Onge.

Miranda H, widow of Otis Lane, died Wednesday morning at her home on Elm street after a long illness. She was 94 years, 6 months and 25 days old, and death was due to old age. Mrs. Lane was the daughter of Joshua and Minerva Hamilton, and was born in Palmer. She married Otis Lane in November, 1834, and their daughter, Mrs. Lewis N. Gilbert, survives. Mrs. Lane also leaves a half-sister, Miss Minerva Collins, who lived with her. Mr. Lane, who died in 1887, was for many years one of the most prominent business men of the town. The funeral was held this afternoon at 2 o'clock from her late home.

An unknown man was arrested for drunkenness Thursday evening of last week while flourishing a revolver on Main street. He was brought into the district court Friday morning and fined $10 which he paid. He gave his name as Carl Johnson, but later admitted to Chief of Police Maurice Fitzgerald that he was known in Barre as Charles Galusha He also confessed that most of the $70, the razor, scarf-pins and other property found upon him had been stolen from fellow-laborers on a big stock farm in Barre, where he was employed. He was turned over to Constable E Rosenbery of Barre, who came to Ware after him.

Among those who spent Christmas in Ware were Misses Josephine and Minnie Riordan of Worcester with Rev. J A. Riordan, at Rev. J. H Murphy's; Earl Campbell of Boston with Malcolm H. Monson News.

Academy Graduate's Engagement.

The following, from the Wednesday's issue of the Evening Journal of Jersey City, N J , under the heading of "Hoboken Social Gossip," will be of interest to Monson people, as Mr Nichols was an attendant at the Academy in 1897-8, graduating in the latter year He was the son of Rev. A. R. Nichols, who was pastor of the Methodist church 1897-99

The holiday week brings the announcement of another engagement which will interest a large circle of young people in Hoboken, that of Miss Augusta Fisher of Matawan, N J., to Arthur R. Nichols of 732 Bloomfield street. Both the young people are well known in Hoboken. Mr. Nichols, who is the son of a Methodist minister, Rev. A R. Nichols of Shrewsbury, Mass , having made his home here since 1902, when he was graduated from the Massachusetts School of Technology at Boston, coming to fill a position with a a firm of landscape architects of New York City. Miss Fisher is a graduate of the Glenwood Institute of Matawan. Her parents, Capt. and Mrs. W. H Fisher, with their family, have spent the past three winters in Hoboken, and it was through the interest of the young people in the work of the First M. E. church here that they met, and through the acquaintance thus formed became engaged Mr. Nichols was recently elected president of the Epworth League of the First M. E church, and his engagement to Miss Fisher, which was announced on Christmas Day at a family gathering, will come as a very pleasant surprise to the members of this association, in which he and his prospective bride are popular.

Cat's Novel Experience.

A young cat which makes its home in the post office had a strange experience yesterday, and one never heard of before in the history of this post office, at least. The cat, which has resided at the office for several months, is quite a pet with the postmaster and his assistant. Yesterday morning, as has been its custom for several weeks, it jumped into one of the mail bags which was hanging in the distributing racks, and which happened to be one of the outgoing bags that morning Not noticing the cat, the pouch was closed and sent on the 7.20 train. On the way between Monson and Palmer, Railway Mail Clerk Kelley noticed something in the bag, and on investigation was much surprised to find a cat. The animal, however, seemed much at home, and jumped out of the bag and made a round of the mail car. The mail clerk dipensed with the usual formality of cancelling and post marking, and sent the animal to the Palmer post office. It was sent from there with the mail reaching Monson on the 9 30 electric, where it was emptied out of the pouch by the Monson postmaster with various papers and letters. Its absence had been noticed but a short time. In the future more care will be exercised as to the cat's whereabouts when the mail pouches are being closed.

Increase in Wages.

D. W. Ellis & Sons, Ellis Ricketts Company and S. F. Cushman & Sons, the three largest woolen manufacturers in town, have announced to their employes that commencing January 1st there will be an increase of 10 per cent in wages. This increase will affect several hundred hands, and is very pleasing to the townspeople, as well as the employes, as it is an indication that business is good and will continue so. At the Ellis mills the help have been well satisfied with the wages they have been receiving, as they were about 10 per cent more than the wages paid by the American Woolen Company, and the increase, which goes into effect Monday, seems like a New Year's gift The Somerset Woolen Co. will also increase the wages of their employes 10 per cent after January 1st. This will affect about 50 hands.

Narrow Escape From Drowning.

Charles Rourke, William Riley and Lewis Deltour, three lads twelve or thirteen years of age, had a narrow escape from drowning in Cushman's pond Saturday afternoon. The boys were walking across the pond, when the ice broke letting them into the water. Their cries were heard by Henry Callahan, who was nearby, and with the aid of a ladder he succeeded in getting them out. Beyond a severe wetting they are none the worse for their ducking.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

tion. Members will not resent an intelligent opinion, briefly and clearly expressed, though it be from a member new and unknown. The session will begin one week from to-day. Thursday, the day after, will come the inauguration, after which Gov. Douglas will be a private citizen once more. Captain Isaac H. Edgett, of the secretary's office, says that the last year has been one of exceptionally friendly relations between the secretary's department and the governor's. Business has been done in a businesslike way and the persons around the governor have been very agreeable to associate with, more so than usual. The governor will finish his year with the respect of all the people.

Thomas B. Fitzpatrick of Brookline, who was appointed and confirmed to-day as a member of the state board of education, in place of the late George H. Conley, who was also superintendent of schools, is one of the self made men of the city. He is a leading member of the dry goods firm of Brown, Durrell & Co and has long been known as one of the foremost citizens of Greater Boston. Until recently he lived in West Newton. He was named last fall as a possible Democratic candidate for governor, and if he would have consented, it is quite probable that he could have had the nomination without dissent, for he is widely known and is highly popular. He is as generous as he is able, and he has a warm heart to any worthy cause. Naturally he has been active for Ireland, but he was also liberal in his aid for the friendless Boers who came to Boston to stir up interest here for their oppressed native land His sons have been educated at Harvard and his sterling good sense will make him a valuable member of the board.

With the end of the year the Republican state committee will end its occupancy of its quarters in the Devonshire building on Washington street and will remove to the Kimball building on Tremont street, near the Scolley square station of the subway. The committee will have more room. The conveniences are better and there will be more opportunity for campaign work Last campaign the committee had to hire an additional room, the other side of the elevator, and they were cramped. The present quarters have been occupied 10 years. The committee will be reorganized inauguration day and there is no doubt that the present officers will be reëlected.

Democrats are talking of Josiah Quincy for the chairman of their state committee, leaving Arthur Lyman to be chairman of the executive committee, as he is at present.

LANDON.

The animals were playing football. The fox snapped the ball back to the porcupine The porcupine started around the end with it. Whereupon the other animals fell on the porcupine. But they didn't do it a second time. The game ended right there. —Chicago Tribune.

Three Tombs at Westminster.

In the east walk of the cloisters at Westminster abbey there are three most interesting graves—those of Thomas Betterton and his wife, better known as Bess Saunderson, and the ever fascinating Mrs. Bracegirdle. Of all the people who lie within these hallowed walls it may safely be said that Betterton has the best claim of all to this privilege. No small measure of praise must be accorded to this gifted actor for the fact that he almost more than any one else was responsible for the resuscitation of the English drama after the stern regime of the Puritans. Mrs. Bracegirdle was either adopted by Betterton or placed under his care, and she very soon took all hearts in London by storm. She achieved her greatest success in acting in Congreve's plays. Her artistic career, however, was a comparatively short one, for Mrs. Bracegirdle retired from the stage in dudgeon when Anne Oldfield first became her dangerous rival. She lived on in honorable retirement and beloved by all, high and low, far and near, until the year 1748, when she was buried here beside her old friends the Bettertons.—London Mail.

Venus Among the Incas.

The only planet which the Incas had discovered was Venus, which they called the hairy on account of the brightness of its rays. They said that, being the most brilliant of the stars, the sun would not permit it to be separated from him and obliged it to attend his rising as well as his going down, just as at the courts of kings only the most distinguished lords and the handsomest ladies were admitted to the ceremonious royal risings and retirings It appears nearly certain that the Incas spoke of Venus under two different names, according as it preceded or followed the sun. To this day the native Peruvians name it in fanciful language the eight hour torch and the twilight lamp. As this star served to show the Indians when it was time to prepare the maize for cooking, they also gave it a name indicative of that act. A chapel in the Temple of the Sun was consecrated to this planet.

Auctioneers In England.

The auctioneers of the United Kingdom cannot claim to belong to a very ancient profession so far as that country is concerned. Though auctions were familiar institutions in ancient Rome, the first in the British islands is said to have been held about 1700, when Elisha Yale, governor of Fort George (Madras), put up for sale his trophies of the east, and, although "auction" was defined in 1678 as "a making a publick sale and selling of goods by outcry," it does not appear to have been recognized then as a British institution. The word "auctioneer" does not occur before the eighteenth century.

Hobbes and Geometry.

Hobbes was not yet fifteen when he went to Oxford. He did not much care for logic, yet he learned it and thought himself a good disputant. There is no reason to think he learned anything else at Oxford save a strong dislike of academic institutions and methods. He turned from the official studies to amuse himself with geography and voyages. As to mathematics, there was no official recognition of them at all while Hobbes was at the university, so there is nothing improbable in the statement that Hobbes had never opened a copy of Euclid until he was near middle age. The story is best told in Aubrey's own words:

"He was forty years old when he looked on geometry, which happened accidentally. Being in a gentleman's library, 'Euclid's Elements' lay open, and it was the forty-seventh proposition Lib. 1. so he read the proposition. 'By George,' says he, 'this is impossible!' So he read the demonstration of it, which referred him back to another, which he also read, 'et sic deinceps,' that at last he was demonstratively convinced of that truth. This made him in love with geometry."

The Oldest Tale of a Tub.

The cynics, so called from the Greek word for a dog, were a rude, snarling sect of so called philosophers, who despised riches, the arts and all culture. Among these Diogenes was conspicuous. He was born in 412 B. C., and when a man he dressed in a coarse robe, which covered him day and night, and carried a wooden bowl and a bag for his alms and his food. His home was a large tub discarded from the temple of Cybele, a huge earthen jar, that had held wine or oil for the services and sacrifices of the temple. Though cracked and patched, it was large enough to hold him lying at full length. The story goes that Alexander the Great came up to him one day and asked what he could do for him. "Don't stand between me and the sun," was the curt reply, upon which the emperor is said to have exclaimed, "If I were not Alexander I would be Diogenes!"

Lightning as a Rock Driller.

"Lightning when in the mood has an ugly habit of drilling," writes an English observer. "It will drill the hardest rock, rock which would turn cold steel, and not only drill but vitrify it. They have found in Cumberland channels from thirty feet deep and from two to four inches in circumference. The interior was hard and glazed where the solid substance had been melted by the stabbing flashes. Artificial experiment has shown that a powerful shock from a battery will vitrify finely powdered glass, but not feldspar or quartz. The lightning, however, does it in the manner described—not in one place, but in many, showing that before striking the ground it divided into several branches, each strong enough to penetrate and liquefy the solid rock."

In a Man's Pockets.

A fairly well equipped gentleman true to his calling and to his friends carries quite a kit of tools. There are a jackknife, a match box, a cigar cutter, a nail file, a corkscrew, a finger nail tool and possibly a cigar holder and some good five centers to give away. And yet women wonder what he finds to put in his pockets. To facilitate further the business of just hanging around he must have a little money, a handkerchief, bunch of keys, fountain pen, some lead pencils and sharpener, eyeglasses, notebook, watch, old letters, papers of more or less supposed value and a cardcase. Not one pocket could be spared unless it is the one on his nightshirt, and that looks so sweet.—Clay Center (Kan.) Times.

Told by the Watch

To tell the points of the compass by a watch point the hour hand at the sun; then south is halfway between the hour hand and the figure 12 of the dial. To measure an angle by a watch lay two straight edged pieces of paper on the angle, crossing at the apex. Holding them where they overlap, lay them on the face of the watch, with the apex at the center. Read the angle by the minutes of the dial, each minute being six degrees of arc. It is easy to measure within two or three degrees in this way.

A Matter of Health

There is a quality in Royal Baking Powder which promotes digestion. This peculiarity of Royal has been noted by physicians, and they accordingly use and recommend it exclusively.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

The Horse's Hoof.

In its present elaborate form the hoof of a horse is the most perfect instrument of support which has been devised in the animal kingdom to uphold a large and swiftly moving animal in its passage over the ground. The original toe nail and the neighboring soft parts connected with it have been modified into a structure which in an extraordinary manner combines solidity with elasticity, so that it may strike violent blows upon the hard surface of the earth without harm. The result is that the horse can carry a greater weight at a swifter speed than any other animal approaching it in size.

A Hatter's Trick.

"There are tricks in every trade, you know," said a New York clubman. "Even in retail hat selling many dodges are employed.

"I said to a hatter one day:

"'I don't see how you can afford to iron for nothing all the silk hats you sell.'

"The man nodded at me gravely.

"'We have to do it, sir,' he said. 'The hats would last too long if we didn't.'"

The Last Word.

"Does your wife insist on having the last word?" asked the person who indulges in impertinent questions.

"Not at all," answered Mr. Meekton. "It is quite customary for me to close the conversation with 'very well,' or some such remark, to indicate that I understand what Henrietta intends to convey."—Washington Star.

An Ardent Lover.

"And you went straight to her father and demanded his daughter's hand?"

"I went straight enough, but I—well, I'll admit that I didn't carry out my original purpose."

"Scared?"

"Scared! No, sir! But we got to talking stocks, and I forgot all about it."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Woman's Advice.

A woman, who has had a very unhappy married life, gives this advice to young women:

Don't marry a man to reform him. It can't be done unless he is under twenty-two.

The woman who permits her heart to rule her head makes a sad mistake.

If a girl loves a man, no matter how dissipated or selfish he may be, she plunges into matrimony with her eyes closed.

No woman should ever depend entirely on her husband for happiness. It is folly and leads always to heartache. A married woman should have a life apart from her husband.

Let her keep sweet and true and lovable, but beyond a certain point she should not venture, lest she lose her individuality in her husband's with the result he will impose upon her.

Beware of a man with an ungovernable temper; and almost all men are endowed with this quality.

Shun the man who drinks to excess, for it is a habit that leads to wretchedness.

Avoid also the man who is selfish, the man who considers always his own interests before those of his wife.

All men are fickle, and it depends on the wife's power to hold them —New Yorker.

A Bad Example.

Hudson Tuttle, the Ohio lecturer, made an address recently wherein he described the pitfalls of the lecture platform.

"One pitfall," Mr. Tuttle said, "is the unwise choice of examples and proofs.

"A temperance lecturer wished to prove to his audience the deadly power of whisky.

"Accordingly, he caused a drop of water to be magnified and thrown upon a magic-lantern screen. The picture was a terrible one. Worms bigger than pythons, crabs bigger than elephants, spiders the size of a ship, fought together in the drop of water like fiends in the infernal regions.

"The lecturer now caused a drop of whisky to be added to the water.

"'Watch, friends,' he said. 'Watch the whisky's effect.'

"The effect was marvelous. The liquor killed all those ferocious horrors instantly Their vast claws and tentacles and feelers stiffened. All became peaceful and still.

"An old lady in the front row whispered hoarsely in her husband's ear:

"'Wall, Jabez, that settles me. I'll never drink water again 'thout puttin' some whisky in it.'"

NOT THE ONLY ONE.

There Are Hundreds Of Palmer People Similarly Situated.

Can there be any stronger proof offered than the evidence of Palmer residents? After you have read the following, quietly answer the question.

Mrs. George Taylor of Church street, Thorndike, Mass., two miles from Palmer, when interviewed recently, said: "Yes, I gave a testimonial to Doan's Kidney Pills some three years ago last April and all I can add to-day, is that my confidence in them has not been shaken in the least. When I commenced their use I could not turn over in bed, my back was so lame and sore. After I had taken them two days I could turn over and rest with some degree of pleasure. Besides the above symptoms I had distressing pains in my head. I got Doan's Kidney Pills at LeGro's drug store and used them and can truthfully say I never tried anything that did me half as much good."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name Doan's and take no substitute.

"Once upon a time I attended a country fair in Kansas," relates the irrepressible Frank Daniels, most recently of "Sergeant Brue" fame, "and I saw a family that would have gladdened Mr. Roosevelt's heart. The man went up to a tent where some elk were on exhibition and stared wistfully up at the sign. 'I'd like to go in there,' he said to the keeper, 'but it would be mean to go in without my family, and I cannot afford to pay for my wife and 17 children.' The keeper stared at him in astonishment. 'Are all those your children?' he asked. 'Every one,' said the man from the country. 'You wait a minute,' said the keeper, 'I'm going to bring the elk out and let him see you'"

John Doe X His Mark

A man's mark is his honor. It stands for him and he stands for it. It's the old Saxon way of signifying good intentions.

The right to be protected in the exclusive use of a trade mark has been long recognized by the common law and enforced by the chancery courts of England and this country.

The Government puts its mark on a bond to give it value.

The NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY puts its trade mark in red and white on each end of a package of biscuit, crackers or wafers to distinguish these products and to guarantee the quality, and it does.

To more clearly comprehend the real value of this trade mark, try packages of BUTTER THIN BISCUIT and LEMON SNAPS.

Consumption

¶ There is no specific for consumption. Fresh air, exercise, nourishing food and Scott's Emulsion will come pretty near curing it, if there is anything to build on. Millions of people throughout the world are living and in good health on one lung.

¶ From time immemorial the doctors prescribed cod liver oil for consumption. Of course the patient could not take it in its old form, hence it did very little good. They can take and tolerate it for a long time. There is no oil, not excepting butter, so easily digested and absorbed by the system as cod liver oil in the form of Scott's Emulsion, and that is the reason it is so helpful in consumption where its use must be continuous.

¶ We will send you a sample free.

¶ Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

Col. Lockwood, the most amusing man in the House of Commons, told the steward of the Royal Masonic institution for girls a good story at the festival last week. A prominent man called to condole with a woman on the death of her husband, and concluded by saying, "Did he leave you much?" "Nearly every night," was the reply.—July Critic.

An Englishman was talking with Manager Charles H. Greene, about a proposed visit to Chicago. "I want to see the stockyards you know," said the Englishman. "I am told, don't you know, that in the big establishments there they save everything about the pig but the squeal." "They save the squeal now," said Mr. Green. "Save the squeal?" echoed the Englishman. "Absurd. What could they do with the squeal?" "They use it in making phonographs.

Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia is very fond of a joke and in spite of his multifarious duties finds time for many amusing quips. When Bishop Spaulding of Peoria visited the archbishop some time ago it was arranged that the western man should be entertained by a lady prominent in social and charitable affairs. The archbishop wrote him, giving him some details regarding his prospective hostess, and ended his letter thus: "The lady who has all these virtues treats her husband like a brute. P. S.—She is very fond of brutes, being an officer for the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals."

Congressman Dixon of Montana is telling of the experience of a young eastern woman with one of his constituents. She left a train at a way station in eastern Montana one afternoon and asked the only man in sight how she could get to her destination, far out in the country. "You'll have to wait for the stage in the morning," said the man. "You can't get any rig here." "But where am I to stop?" inquired the young lady. "There's nothing here but the station and I can't sleep on the floor." "Guess you'll have to bunk with the station agent." "Sir," she exclaimed. "I am a lady. "So is the station agent," said the man.

A Kansas City woman who owns and drives a neat little gasoline runabout had an accident a day or two ago. Near Walnut and Eleventh streets she ran into a buggy. As she was moving along very slowly and the buggy was standing still, very little damage resulted. The buggy was not harmed, but the auto's steering apparatus was slightly broken. The woman that evening was telling her husband of the accident. "How did it occur?" he asked. "Why," replied his wife, "I was creeping along near the curb when a woman wearing the loveliest new polo turban I ever saw, passed on the sidewalk and"— "That's enough; I understand," said the man as he turned to his newspaper."—Kansas City Times.

THREE RIVERS.

Was Thrown From His Team.

John Broduer, who lives on Baptist Hill, met with an accident in Ludlow Tuesday evening. He had been to Chicopee Falls to buy some swine and starting home late in the evening he became confused in some way. He was thrown from his wagon and it passed over him, fracturing two ribs and causing some internal injuries He was taken to a house nearby and medical aid was summoned. He was brought home Wednesday afternoon.

Deer Shot.

Robert S. Blair found a large buck lying dead near the dam Saturday morning. It had been shot in the flank and had been dead but a short time when found. The theory is that the animal, when shot, ran on to the ice, which broke away from the shore and floated down the river until it was caught on the dam. Blair notified Game Warden Luman, who after examining the deer, gave it to Blair.

Miss Emma Bruce is spending the week in Boston.

The young people are enjoying the skating on the river. The ice is not considered very safe however, and unless more care is taken accidents are feared.

The local fishermen have made some remarkably good catches through the ice within the last week. John L. Sullivan caught 88 fish, weighing 71 pounds, which he claims is the largest catch taken from the river in the last 10 years.

An unusually large number of chickens have been killed by dogs this year. During the fall the dogs made nocturnal trips to hen yards, but of late a number of valuable chickens have been killed in the daytime. Owners of chickens say that if the nuisance is not soon abated there will be some dead dogs in the village.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Freak entertained about 39 friends and relatives at their home Christmas Day, the occasion being the tenth anniversary of their marriage. Dinner was served in the afternoon at 1.30. Friends were present from West Warren, Indian Orchard, Holyoke, Palmer and Three Rivers. Many useful presents were received.

Two large trees occupied the front of the room and were decorated with gifts for the members of the school. There was a large attendance and the program, which consisted of reading and special music, was much enjoyed. The gifts were distributed at the close of the program.

BONDSVILLE.

Collis—Forsman.

A pretty wedding took place Christmas Day at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick M Collis on the Palmer road, when their daughter, Anna May, was united in marriage to Henning Walford Forsman of Palmer. The ceremony was performed in the afternoon at 2.30 by Rev. L L Beeman, pastor of the M. E. church. The interior of the house was prettily decorated with evergreen, holly and laurel, and the ceremony was performed beneath a Christmas bell trimmed with mistletoe. A large number of guests were present, including relatives and friends from out of town. The bridesmaid was Miss Bena Forsman, sister of the groom, and the best man was Fred Collis Jr, brother of the bride. The bride wore a gown of white silk mull trimmed with valenciennes lace and carried a shower bouquet of hyacinths. Her traveling gown was of brown broadcloth. The bridesmaid wore white muslin trimmed with valenciennes lace. Dinner was served after the ceremony and was followed by a reception. Mr. and Mrs. Forsman started at 4 o'clock upon their wedding trip and on their return will live in Palmer, where the groom is employed. Among the guests present from out of town were Mrs. Jeanotte and daughter Lena of Northampton, Mr. and Mrs. Talmadge, Newton Talmadge, Ralph Talmadge and Miss Alice Talmadge of Springfield, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Foskit of Belchertown, Mrs. and Miss Bowler of Enfield and Mr. and Mrs Thayer and daughters, Hazel and Luella. The Antalgica
Or Vegetable Pain Reliever

was introduced to the public in 1848, since which time thousands of bottles have been sold each year to an appreciative public, which is a good evidence of its merits. It is adapted to so many ailments it should be in every household, for it cures all kinds of pains both internal and external. For Bronchial affections it is unrivaled by any article in the market. It is a sure cure for Cholera Morbus and Dysentery, if taken in season, also for Coughs. It is an effective remedy for rheumatic affections, stiff joints, swelled limbs, sprains, cramps, tooth ache and many other ills to which the flesh is heir. Try it and it will do you good It is sold at 25c, 50c and $1.00 per bottle by The Quimby Pharmacy, LeGro's Drug Store and the proprietor,

Why Dan Came Back

[Copyright, 1905, by E. S. McClure.]

Dan Skinner, son of a farmer, had been a lazy young man at home, and had doubtless enlisted as a soldier thinking he was going to have an easy time of it He found but little time that a volunteer soldier could call his own. There were drill, guard duty, police duty, washing, mending, digging and delving, to say nothing of fighting and marching. The day came when he refused fatigue duty and was sent to the guardhouse. From that day for three months on he was under punishment most of the time. He came to be an object of anxiety to the officers and an object of contempt to his comrades, and then he was ready to bring on a climax. One day he lay on the broad of his back in the sun and thought it all out. He charged the people of the United States with bringing on the war for no other purpose than to get him down to the front and have him killed. He denied the right of the government to put him to manual labor and abridge his hours of sleep. He was an ill fed, overworked and much abused young man. He had been singled out for the officers' spite, and the letters he had written to President Lincoln about it had remained unanswered.

When Dan had spent an hour in thinking, he made up his mind that there was only one recourse left him—desertion. He would make his way back to the old farm in the north and to pa and ma and tell them all about it and be looked upon as a martyr. It never occurred to him that he would be pursued and was sure to be caught.

Two nights later Dan Skinner dodged the camp sentinels and became a deserter. He had selected a route, but owing to the darkness and a scare or two he became confused and finally held a pretty straight course for the position of the enemy. Just at that point and at that time the two armies were fifteen miles apart, with parties from each side raiding over the neutral ground. When Dan had gone ten miles he realized that he was lost and lay down in the bushes to wait for daylight. When he awoke he found himself close to a log farmhouse, and hunger and a desire to be set right as to his road caused him to boldly approach it. He found a woman and two children, and a moment later discovered that he was among southerners. His blue uniform excited surprise and alarm until he let it be known that he was alone. When he sat down to the humble food placed before him the woman asked:

"Don't you know that the Confederate lines are only five miles away, and that some of our soldiers are riding past here almost every day?"

"That's all the better," was his reply. "I was going home, but I'd just as lief be captured."

"Do you mean that you are a deserter?"

"That's what I am. I stood it and stood it till I could stand it no longer. Then I walked out of camp. If I hadn't got lost in the night I should be on my way home now."

"What was it you had to stand?"

"Oh, everything mean. They was always wanting me to work like a nigger, and when I wouldn't they had me in the guardhouse. I didn't enlist to be a slave. Some one was bossing me from morning till night. It was Dan, do this, and Dan, do that, and I got worn out at last."

"Have you ever been in a battle?" asked the woman as she looked at him in a puzzled way.

"No, ma'am."

"Then you've never been wounded?"

"No."

"You have been clothed and fed and paid and had no fighting to do as yet, and yet you complain."

"Who wouldn't complain if he had to carry wood and water and load and unload wagons and stand guard and all of that? I tell you I never got time to read a book nor write any poetry. If I'm a deserter it's because they've driv me to it. Flesh and blood can't stand only about so much. I'm like a worm, I am. You can pick on me about so long, and then I turn."

The woman smiled in contempt and pity and was silent for a moment before saying:

"I've got a husband and a brother in the Confederate army. They are obeying orders, no matter what those orders are. Both have been in battle, and both have been wounded. They march; they fight; they do camp duty. There are many days when they don't have sufficient to eat. They have had no pay for four months. Their uniforms are ragged and tattered. All this, and yet they haven't deserted or thought of it. Do you know what would happen if my husband should come home a deserter? I have an old musket here. I would drive him back to the army or shoot him in his tracks!"

"Shoo!" exclaimed Dan as he looked up at her and grew very serious.

"Yes, sir, I would do it, but thank God he is no such man. Look at your case. You have a father, mother—other relatives. You are young and strong. You have been called upon to do nothing that others are not doing. You are lazy; you are a fault finder; you want to make out that you are a martyr. And here you are, a deserter from your army, and disgrace and perhaps death await you as soon as caught. You want to desert to our side. We want no such men. You would be treated like a dog, and you would deserve it. Put on your cap, sir. Now walk out of the house. Now turn your face down the road and walk. Keep walking until you come to your lines, and then return to your duties as a soldier. You may have to work—you may have to die."

And he did. M. QUAD.
